ESSENCE OF VALMIKI RAMAAYANA

BAALA KHANDA

PREFACE

The Epic of Valmiki Ramayana- Rama Aayana- denotes Shri Rama's journey from vice to virtue. This is relevant now as much as in the past -present and for ever as narrated in Six Khandas or sugar cane stems viz. Baala Khanda-Ayodhya Khanda- Aranya Khanda-Kishkinda Khanda- Sundara Khanda-Yuddha Khanda. Baala Khanda comprises seventy seven Sargas- Ayodhya Khanda one hundred nineteen Sargas- Aranya Khanda has seventy five Sargas-Kishkinda Khanda has sixty seven Sargas-Sundara Khanda comprises of sixty eight Sargas- Yuddha Khanda has one twenty eight Sargas. Additionally Uttara Khanda has one hundred eleven Sargas.The current presentation is relevant to Baala Khanda.

As I had the fortune of approaching HH Vijayendra Sarasvati of Kanchi Kamakoti, who for the last fifteen years or so, blessed me to script the essence of over Ashtaadasha Puranas, Ashtadasha Upanishads, Brahma Sutras, Dharma Sindhu, Manu Smriti, Paraashara Smriti, Soundarya Lahari, and on Pancha Bhutas- Surya- Chandra-Lakshmi-Saraswati - Ganesha-Bhagavad Gita and so on. Then he spontaneously directed me to attempt Vaalmiki Ramayana in parts but with possible 'vishleshanas' or explanatory notes as per the contexts of situations and characters referred to. Indeed this is a massive effort but I have his unimaginable blessings.

The present script is a maiden effort of the endless 'Itihasa'. The Instruction is that the digestive exercise be gradual, since centuries old countless versions of Ramayana are available or unavailable, but each such Scripts from 'taala grandhaas' to the paper world had been absorbed as per the inner grasping vibrations subjectively. Hence the physical intakes of pathana-manana- nidhi dhyaasas are objective realistically.

'Baala Khanda' is the trend setter in as the Yuga Purusha Rama blossoms. That was how Maharshi Vaalmiki encourages Rama's second generation of Lava Kusha Kumaras to sing for us the overview of Ramayana vide the fourth sarga itself!

From 'Baalya' to adolescent youthfulness, Brahmarshi Vishvamitra literally pushes to a jolt to King Dasharatha by equipping Shri Rama with 'astra-shastra vidya' to fight viciousness and vindicate Dharma and Nyaya. The saga and the role of Vishvamitra from a King to a Brahmarshi is the base note of the symphony of Baala Kanda. The fleeting picturisation of the Demons and Sages alike in the Baala Ramayana is a process of transformation of the Society then and now. The struggle continues as an integral part of Existence and as like an ever staged drama through years- centuries- yugas -kalpas of the eternal time cycle.

It is my fortune to imagine as to how the Seers of the yore had showered the flows of 'dharmaic' nectar on HH Vijayendra Saraswati of Kanchi who in turn allots drops on countless followers like us and to our families too.

Sargas Sixty Three and four: Vishvamitra disturbed by 'Menaka' at Pushkara, then shifted to heights of himalayas when 'Rambha' disturbed too.

Sarga Sixty five: Ultimately even as Indra ever stole his food, Maharshi stopped his breathing but kept on his tapsya on Brahma, and the latter conferred the title of 'Brahmarshi'!

Sarga Sixty six: Vishvamitra conveys Rama's desire to show Shiva Dhanush and Janaka gives the background of the Dhanush ; King Nimi was gifted Shiva Dhanush at his son Devarata's wedding; Vishleshana: Nimi and Daksha Yagnya.- Devi Sita as 'Ayonija' as Janaka tills bhuyagjna.

Sarga Sixty seven: Rama lifted up the Shiva Dhanush as if it were a toy, straightened it with great ease, held the middle part, and as though of a child play broke into two pieces. That breaking resulted in earthshaking like reverberations. King Janaka said: Once wedded to Shri Rama, my daughter ought to be proud to his life partner and bring in glory to Janaka vamsha! Brahmarshi said: tathaastu!

Sarga Sixty eight: King Janaka sent a messenger to King Dasharatha to state: Shri Rama in the midst of all of us had managed the control and breaking of the age old Shiva Dhanush and as per my repeated announcements would like to propose my daughter Devi Sita to Shri Rama in a wedding ceremony and therefore request you to attend the same along with your queens and the entire retinue. Besides Rama and Devi Sita, may we also propose the wedding of Lakshmana with my younger daughter Urmila too'. , Dasharatha was pleased and addressed Vasishtha and Ministers to leave next morning.

Sarga Sixty nine: Accompanied by Gurus, wives and intimate and other relatives and friends, King Dasharatha was happy and blissful and instructed Sumantra to let the royal treasurer carry surplus funds of cash, jewellery, nine gems ahead and for their safety there ought to be fool proof defence arrangements. A four day procession with needed halts on way moved on with plentiful food and drinks. On their arrival at the outskirts of the Kingdom, King Janaka made elaborate reception with music, song, dance and ecstatic welcome showers of flowers.

Sarga Seventy: In an open Janaka Sabha, Vasishtha narrated the glory of Ikshvaku Vamsha: Brahma Deva the Swayambhu manifested Marichi, from the latter was born Kashyapa whose son was Vivisvaan as the latter gave birth to Vaivasvata Manu. Manu was the foremost Prajapati and from Manu was born Ikshvaku the first King of Ayodhya. Then were highlighted: Pruthu-Mandhata-Sagara- Bhagiratha-Ambareesha-Nahusha-Yayati-Naabhaga- Aja-and Dasharatha. Vishleshanas on: Pruthu-Yuvanashra-Mandhata-Purukusta- Muchukunda-Nahusha- and Yayati.

Sarga Seventy one: King Janaka explained about his vamsha from renowned King Nimi ,whose son named Mithi being the ever first Janaka as the 'vamsha' known as of Janakas. Then he introduced Kushadhvaja his younger brother desirous of getting his two daughters to Bharata and Shatrughna and declared Mandaveeka and Shutakeerti as their respective wives. respectively.

Sarga Seventy Two and three: Public Declarations were made in the presence of Kings, Maharshis, and the public and hectic preparations were made; The vivahika vedika was got ready befitting the status and magnificence of two great Kings. Then Janaka welcomed the brides and bridegrooms.

Sargas Seventy Four- Five-Six: After the festivities concluded, guests were showered with precious gifts, the groom's party moved back on the return journey but a terrible sand storm was faced. Parashu Rama arrived shouting 'Rama Rama' with terrible anger as the Shiva Dhanush was broken. Dasharatha tried to pacify but with anger, handed over Vishnu Dhanush and challenging Rama to break it if at all possible. An angry Rama not only lifted the dhanush as though Vishnu did against Madhukaitabha daityas but stated that with that very dhanush he could as well demolish Parashu Rama too! An utterly humiliated Parashu Rama was then instructed to return to Mahendra Mountain for ever! Vishleshanas on Madhu Kaitabha daityas; Parashu Rama- Kartavaryajuna from Ganesha-Brahmanda Puranas .

Sarga Seventy Seven: As the return procession finally reached the city of Ayodhya , it was ready with dhawaja-patakas, welcome sounds of drums and music, dances and decorations. Dasharatha along with his sons and new daughters-in-law along with the Queens made an auspicious entry. Later, Raja Kumaras shared royal responsibilities. Rama and Sita became famed as Vishnu and Lakshmi.

Introduction:

Before turning over as the famed Valmiki Maharshi, his earlier birth was of a hunter who recieved his counsel from a vidwan that one ought be cautious in causing suffering to any Living Being, be it a human, animal or bird and there would be a retaliatory rebound in the same or the following birth. He further suggested that the burden of past sinfulness be lightened by reciting the name of Shri Rama with devotion and faith. The Vidvan's blessings came true and in the subsequent birth the hunter after reforming himself and practised SHRI RAMA NAMA till his last breath.

Brahmana Vidyaarathi Pracheta, the son of Agni Sharma of Bhriгу Vamsha of the yore, was counselled by Brahmarshi Narada with 'two golden principles of not preaching what he himself would not practise and take to the name and thought of Rama till his death'. The boy learnt the Mantra 'Mara' or to Kill-kill 'ahamkara', 'shadvarga shatrus' of excessive desires, anger, selfishness and avarice, infatuation, ego and jealousy. Constant repetition of 'Mara' turned as 'Rama' gradually developed 'valmikaas' or anthills till his 'atma saakshaatkaara' or Self Realisation and eventually came to be reputed as Valmiki Maharshi. Once when he was bathing in the clear waters of Ganges he sighted two doves while mating but were shot to death by a hunter and the Maharshi cried :maa nishaada pratishthaa tvamagamah shasshvatih samaah, yat krouncha mithunaa -dekam avadheeh kaama mohitam/ Nishaada! There could never be rest for long years till eternity, for you killed the mating birds unsuspectingly! This is the 'prerepana' or the inspiration of the illustrious scripting of Valmiki Ramayana!

During the course of Kali Yuga, the Path of Veda Vedangas gets dimmed and 'Nastikata' is highlighted. Kama Devata's impact gets enhanced and 'arishad vargas' of lust-anger-narrow mentality-avarice-jealousy have an ever increasing volume. While life span gets shortened, sex urges and excessive progeny of ill health would prevail. Women tend to loose character even as males lose restraint. Unemployment looms large, profiteering, hoarding, decept, quick money making, momentary pleasures, snapping of family ties, opportunism and scandalising lead to moral turpitude. Who else excepting Shri Rama in the Kali Yuga when 'Adharma' is rampant and sinking down further is the saviour. This is only the 'Prathama Paada' of Kali Yuga! In reference to the contemporary times, human beings are subject to the following features a) Tapatrayas viz. 'Adhi Bhoutika' or Ailments of Physical Nature; 'Adhyatmika' or of Mental-Psychological Nature; and 'Adhi Daivika' or of Natural Calamities like Earth quakes, floods, lightnings etc. beyond human control. 2) Ishana trayas: 'Praneshana'-the bond of Life, 'Dareshana' or the bond of wife, Putreshana or the bond of progeny, 'Dhaneshana' or the bond of wealth, 'Sukheshana' or the love of happiness and contentment and 'Dharmeshana' or the quest of Virtue; but the first three bonds of life above are the strongest ie the Ishanatrayas. 3) 'Tri Kaankshas' or three Natural Aspirations: Kanta, Kanaka and Keerti or Physical -Material-Fame.

But Bhavishya Purana refers as to how Dharma deteriorates in the three quarters hence" Over two thousand years from now, the established Regulations made by Lord Brahma and the successive Manus would get thinner and thinner and by the Second Paada of Kali Yuga, Kali Devata would be happy to witness that the old Vedic values would be obliterated, that the Daityamaya human beings (fully soaked in Daitya activities) would be of two-and-half feet height, that their life span would be forty years maximum (as against hundred years now) and that they would be free like birds without any 'Karmic regulations! At the end of the Kali's second half there would neither by the institutions of marriages, nor Kingships, nor any social reformer and not even a Karma Karta! The World would be full of the progeny of Bhogi Simha and Keli Simha and this kind of a situation devoid of customs and social norms would prevail for one and quarter lakh years!! In the Third Quarter of Kali Yuga, the average age of human beings would be twenty six years maximum; Bhringha Muni along with his wife Saurabhi would create Kaulakalpa-named beings who would not hesitate to eat human beings/ kinnaras. These new species of Kaulakalpas would resort to beastly affairs with all females. They would be too sex-blinded and produce too many children. In the fourth phase of Kali Yuga the maximum age of humans would not exceed tewnty years and live like water-beasts and animals; hells like Tamishra and worse kinds of frightening Places of Retribution would be over-populated. As Yama Dharma Raja would find that the influx of dead Beings would assuming alarming proportions, he and Chitra Gupta would approach Indra Deva and later on to Brahma Deva as the latter would declare that soon enough there would be an ‘Avatar’ (Incarnation) of Vishnu Deva as Kalki Deva; At that time, there would be a cloud burst producing the Great Annihilation of the Universe under alarming and incessant rain called ‘Pralaya’! That would be the fresh ‘Srishti’ heralding the new cycle of Yugas afresh!

You have described the traits of a terrestrial Human Being with the extra celestial qualifications of a Human on the terrestrial Earth! Any way, the ready reply is as follows: Ikshvaaku vamsha prabhavo Ramo naama janaih shrutah, niyatatmaa mahaa veeryon dhyutimaan dhrutimaan vashee/ In the Ikshvaaku Vamsha, an outstanding personality named Shri Rama the famed most in Trilokas with unbelievable equanimity, a symbol of courage and bravery, as a Roll Model of a Man in perfection. He was a highly learned, moralistic, expressionalistic, and enemy destroyer of excellence with steel like hands and elevated shoulders, robust legs, broad shoulders and conchshell like neck of enormous strength. His chest and arrow chest were huge too with unprotrusive bone at the neck. He was a typical 'aajaana baahu' or his strong hands stretch down to knees with a readily arresting and handsome face of extreme fairness. His forehead was broad and sparkling with big eyes and in sum his personality was spectacular and unique. Shri Rama is named as Dharmajnaata, Satyapratigjna, Hita Saadhana or fully conversant with the Principles of Virtue, avowed to be Truthful and Accomplish by Medium of Negotiation. He is yashasvi- jnaani- Pavitra- jitendriya or well renowned, knowledgeable, symbol of purity and self controlled. He is an administrator like Prajapati Virat Swarupa Himself- Symbol of Prosperity, Dhanurveda Praveena or the Symbol of Archery, Veda Vedanga Tatvavetta- Kshatriya Dharma Praveena- Master of Memory Power; extremely kind hearted, and an expert of conversation with power of convincing objectively. All the Saadhus and Sadhakas make a queue line to him like all the running waters tend to merge into the Oceans as they feel contented with his 'darshan' and if fortunate extremely with his 'sparshan'! Being bestowed with all the positive traits, his mother Devi Koushalya gets immersed in his exemplary traits endearing him always even as he assumes the oceanlike abundance and Himalayas like composure! Vishnunaa sadrusho veerye Somvadpriya darshanah, kaalaagni sadrushah krodhe kshamayaa prithivee samah, dhanadena samastyaaage satya dharma ivaa parah/ Shri Rama is stated as Vishnu's prototype in radiance, Chandra like tranquility and coolness, yet of anger of 'Kaalaagni', endurance like of Bhudevi, 'tyaaga and daana' or give aways like Kubera himself and in Truthfulness like Yama Dharma Raja himself!

Vishleshana - Explanatory Note: Ikshvaaku Vamsha: : Bhavishya Purana explains "After the Pralay in Treta Yuga, King Sudarshan returned from Himalaya and revived Ayodhya Puri and thanks to the and the Holy Sages. King Sudarshan ruled for thousands of years and in course of Time, his son King Dilip initiated a new generation and King Raghu heralded the Surya Vamsha or the Raghu Vamsha. King Raghu's grandson Dasharatha had the unique privilege of securing Lord Shri Rama, the 'Avatar' of Bhagavan Vishnu. Surya Vamsha dominated from Shri Ram's son Kusha downward for hundreds of generations thereafter and the Kings were by and large virtuous, engaged in Yagnas and Agni Karyas, charities and the preservation of Dharma. Padma Purana is quoted: Vaiwasvata Manu had ten sons, viz. Ila, Ikshvaaku, Kushanaabha, Arishta, Dhrushta, arishyant, Karusha, Mahabali Sharyati, Prushaghna, Naabhaga and Ambarisha. By dint of relentless Tapasya, Vaivasvata secured the boon from Brahma of becoming the Supreme Administrator of Prithvi of high virtue and Fortune and thus he became the First Manu Ever! Ila also became ambitious and wandered several places and by mistake entered the 'Sharavana' Garden, little knowing that who ever entered the Sharavana would instantly turn into a woman as per the instructions of Parameswara where Shiva Deva was alone with Devi Parvati. Even outside the Sharavana, Ila as a woman was attracted to Budha, the son of Chandra (Moon). Ila's brother Ikshvaku was worried about the disappearance of Ila and having realised the fact that any male entering the Sharavana would be converted as a female and that Ila also would have been converted like wise.

Ihshvaku prayed to Shiva and as directed Ihshvaku announced Ashvamedha Yagna so that Ila as a female could be identified since the brave Ila would be definitely attracted to the Ashvamedha Yagna and the challenge of holding the horse. Indeed the Plan of Ikshvaku worked well and Ila was identified as the 'wife' of Budha, the son of Chandra. The female Ila became a Kimpurush for six months and as a woman for six months as per the boon of Shiva. As a Kimpurush, Ila also known as Sudyumna gave birth to three sons Utkal, Gaya and Haritashwa and they became the Kings of Utkal (Orissa), Gaya, and Haritashwa or Kuru. Ikshvaku became the King of Madhyadesha who begot hundred sons half of whom ruled the northern side of Meru and the others the Southern side. Kakustha was the eldest son of Ikshvaku and in that lineage was born Yuvanashwa and his great grandson was the famed Kuvalashva who killed the notorious demon Dundhumara. It was in this lineage that the illustrious Mandhata who was the Chakravarti of the Universe. In his lineage were the famous Purukutsa, Muchukunda, Harischandra, Dilip, Bhagiratha who brought the Sacred Ganga to Earth, Nabhaga, Ambarisha, Raghu, Dasaratha and the Incarnation of Lord Vishnu, the Epic Hero Shri Rama who killed Ravana and his able brothers Bharata, Lakshmana and Shatrughna; the Surya Vamsha of the clan of Ikshvaku was further extended by Kusha and Lava. Brahma Purana states: Vaivaswa had nine sons viz. Ikshvaaku, Naabha, Dhrushta, Sharyati, Narishyanta, Praamshu, Arishta, Karusha and Prushaghna. Once Vaivaswa performed one Yagna with the objective of begetting a daughter and Maharshi Mirtaavaruna was the Chief Priest; as the Maharshi offered a powerful oblation in the Agni Kunda, there emerged a maiden whom the Manu addressed as Ila and she took the permission of Matraavaruna and went near the Manu; the Manu blessed her, named her as Sudyumna and instructed her to expand Manu vamsha. She met Budha Deva in marriage and gave birth to Puru; she gave birth further to three sons viz. Utkal (whose Kingdom was the present Orissa), Gaya (the Capital of Gaya desha) and Vinataashva. Puru's Kingdom was distributed into parts to accommodate the nine sons too. Ikshvaaku became the Ruler of Madhyadesha. Ila and Sudyumna was one and the same but alternatively as a woman and as a man for each six months. Naashyanta's son was Shaka; Nabhaaga begot Ambarisha; Dhrishta and Karusha begot sons of the same name; Pramshu was issueless; Sharyati got twin children-a boy named Anarta and a girl Sukanya who was wedded to Chyavana Maharshi. Anarta begot Raiva, and the latter's son was Raivata, also known as Kakudmi who became the King of Kushasthala. Once Raivata accompanied by his daughter Revati visited Brahma loka and the latter was at that time engrossed in 'Gandharva Gaana'/ the songs of Gandharva; after the singing session, Brahma when told of the purpose of their visit viz. to bless his daughter of a suitable match for her, Brahma smiled and stated that during his visit to Brahma loka, Yugas rolled by but blessed Revati to return to their place and that she would definitely wed a Mahatma. On return, the father and daughter discovered a complete change of their Place in Dwapara Yuga and on making local enquiries found Balarama, the elder brother of Krishna as a suitable life-partner for Devi Revati; thus the age-difference of Balarama and Devi Revati was a full Yuga!

Rules of 'Dharma Yuddha' or a Battle for Justice. Once a battle is decided mutually, there should be a lead time for the preliminaries, - a week's time- to offer prayers to 'Ganesha' viz. the very First God to worship and the 'Trimurthies' (Triumverate) viz. Brahma, the Creator, Vishnu the Preserver and Eswar, the Destroyer; to 'Dikpalas' (the Gods of Four Directions); 'Rudras' the Gods of Killings; the 'Nava Grahas' (Gods of Planets) as also of Stars; and Aswini Devatas and Rivers. The Army assembles at the eastern point of the Capital City before the departure and at the start off of the March should be rejoiced by Victory Slogans and reverberation of musical instruments. There would not be a recall or a faltering step once the march is flagged off. After covering a good distance of a couple of miles, there might be a brief stop over for rest/ regrouping/ prayers. The King (Chief) should not intervene in the battle directly till the very end. But, he should be behind at a distance to keep up the morale of the Army. There should be formations of an elephant each in the center, defended by four chariots of four horses each, each horse defended by four infantrymen, who should be in the forefront, defended behind by archers and horses and behind them be 'Yantramuktas' or mechanically propelled explosives. The attacking men should have the pride of place- be it in the infantry, or on horses or chariots or 'Yantramuktas' and comparatively less courageous and defensive forces should be in the rear. A person killed in a war deserves 'Veera Swarga', equivalent to performing 'Yagnas' and a soldier who runs away or shows his back or wantonly avoids confrontation would be considered not only as a criminal in the eyes of Law but as a sinner or murderer of a Brahmin in the eyes of God. At the same time, the defeated soldiers are to be let back honourably by the victorious side with grace. It would be a sin to maltreat the defeated soldiers, slay the persons unarmed, perpetrate revenge of any kind to the citizens of the defeated kingdom, especially the spectators, scribes, women and children and take advantage of any kind to the defenceless. (Agni Purana)

Now about the Yuddha Dharmas of a Kshatriya King. In the course of 'Dharma Paalana' or of the observance of virtuous authority, then in the context of a battle with a foreign invader against his own Kingdom, then irrespective of the ability or otherwise, the King has to spare no effort in the battle and fight tooth and nail till the last drop of his blood. Sangraameshvanivartitvam prajaa -naam chaiva paalanam, shushrushaa braahmananaam cha raajnaam shreyaskaram param/Aahaveshu mithonyonyam jighaansanto maheek -shitah, yudhyamaanaah param shaktyaa svargam yaantyaparaan mukhaah/ To retreat and show his back running away from the battle field has no room for 'kshaatrava dharma' and so also his service to braahmana is so imperative and binding. In an open battle, a true kshatriya desirous of securing 'veera swarga' should never resort to devious ways of killing an enemy like using secret weaponry or by using blazing or poisonous arrows to secure the kill. Also striking a eunuch, an opponent seeking mercy, a person who flees from the fight, or simply withdraws from the fight is not commendable. Equally so would be a fight against a half asleep, unguarded, disarmed, or already engaged in a different enemy, or an onlooker enemy is not worthy of commendation. Killing an enemy with wounds on his body, or with broken weaponry, one in his retreat with disgrace is also not the quality of a purposeful fight. When a kshatriya warrior is killed even as he runs away from the battle, then a part of the sin is ascribed to the King as the Commander-in-Chief. Equally so as the valiant fights but gets killed in the battle, a part of the Veera Swarga's benefit is due to the King. The chariots, horses, elephants, military equipment, grain, women, gold and properties of the defeated King automatically gets gained to the winning King, but such possessions of the win over has necessarily to be shared by the soldiers too, lest the King's name and title as the 'Chhatrapati' or the Overall Master becomes a misnomer! Further the duty of the King would be to revive the memory of the illustrious fallen heroes and provide adequate wherewithal to his families. Alabdham chaiva lipseta labdham rakshet prayatnatah, rakshitam vardhaye - chchaiva vriddham paatreshu nikshipet/ Etachchaturvidham vidyaat purushaartha prayojanam, asya nityamanushthaanam samyak kuryaadatandritah/ Whatever is not available in one's life, efforts be made to secure it, whatever is so secured be properly retained safe, besides what ever is retained in tact, try to improve the same; these are the four kinds of Purushardhas of Dharma- Artha- Kaama- Mokshas, and these principles of human aspirations be pursued without fail. Once a particular desire is not fulfilled then that be accomplished even by 'danda' or force, once so gained do seek to maintain it, and do try to improve and so on. A King is well equipped with 'danda' and that alone which the commonality of the public could enforce an objective with. But never try the means of deceit or roundabout guile as that path would certainly dig up flaws and deviations from what is aimed at. An enemy within or from outside could sooner or later discover ways and means of the policy objective by picking holes like when a tortoise could hide its limbs and would as such fail. Hence the direct approach to strike by force as the public has no alternative but to follow and the world around is left in wonder and admiration. The enemy too can be awed by the direct approach and would have no option. A lion uses its strength while a crane pretends meditation in patience, like a wolf snatches by trickery, but like a hare makes a double retreat. Even the external enemies would not prolong the victory by the Saama-Daana- Bhedopaayas for the fear of danda! A farmer knows as to how to cut off and sweep the weeds to preserve the crop and so does a King in protecting his Kingdom by destroying the enemies. Nevertheless, there is a word of caution by the Learned; in the event of an external enemy being either more powerful or of similar strength, then the stop in steps of Saama-Daana- Bhedas need to be employed and commended. This policy is worthy of following in the external context certainly. Referring to the domestic scene, the extent of utilising 'danda' or force might boomerang only if honesty is truly proven and only to the extent of what unreasonable and evil minded critics beyond the conviction level of the honest and duty bound masses of public as a King of dharmic values could certainly gauge. Indeed the King ought to realise the cut off limits of utilising the danda as that ought to be proven as ‘pro bono publico’ or as of the larger interests of the general public. Even protecting the farm produce, the weeds of opposing forces be nipped as the King’s prime priority is to preserve Kingship itself. Saamaadinaamupaayaanaam chaturnaamapi panditaah, saamadandau prashansanti nityam raashtraabhivridhdhay/ Yathoddharati nirdaataa kaksham dhaanyam cha rakshati, tathaa rakshennripo raashtram hanyaachha paripanthinah/ or either of rashness or ignorance, no King could possibly pull down his own kingdom, along with himself, his family and his subjects by resorting to self-defeating measures which might ruin the self, as after all his own life-force is that of his entire kingdom. Just as torturing the bodies of his limbs and senses is as severe as torturing the King himself! Hence thoughtful governance of his kingdom in turn aims at prosperity of himself and vice versa.]

To such glorious personality like Shri Rama the eldest son of King Dasharatha, the latter made it known to his Subjects that he would be made the ‘Yuva Raja’ the number two of the Kingdom. (Dasharatha had three wives viz. Koushalya-Sumitra-and Kaikeyi; Rama was born to Kousalya- Lakshmana and Shatrughna were born to Sumitra- and Bharata next own to Rama were born to Kaikeyi. King Dasharatha was fond of Rama nodoubt but he was infatuated with the youngest wife Kaikeyi). As the royal announcement that Rama would be sworn as Yuva Raja, Kaikeyi was rattled and annoyed as the King promised to Kaikeyi in a weak moment to make Bharata the yuva Raja and Rama would be despatched to Forest Life. Thus the Royal Announcement was annuled and as per King Dasharatha’s earlier announcement. As per the desire of the King and the co-mother Kaikeyi, Rama left for Vanavaasa. Lakshman who adored Rama too decided to follow Rama. Devi Sita the wife of Rama and the daughter of King Janaka too followed Rama; indeed she was not only of celestial beauty and grace as the cynosure of womanhood but the truthful Pativrata of Rama who too was famed as ‘Eka Patni Vrata Vidhaayaka’ with ‘manasaa-vaachaa-karmanaa trikatrana shuddhi’; She too accompanied Rama as Rohini follows Chandra. Even as King Dasharatha was in a state of coma, Rama having prostrated to the fainted King and the three mothers thus proceeded for the Forest Life. Having bid farewell to the crying public too on the outskirts of Ayodhya the capital, the threesome moved forward while the King's official charioteer reached up to the banks of Sarayu river and the boat man named Guha moved forward to reach the banks of Ganges at the Shringaverapura. The threesome of Rama-Sita- Lakshmana accompanied by Guha the boatman crossed smaller rivers and the intervening forests after forests reached the Ashram of Bharadwaaja Maharshi while Guha the boatman too left reluctantly. Having rested and as directed by the Maharshi , the threesome ascended the Chitrakuta mountain. Meanwhile, King Dasharatha who relapsed into coma got back his senses but in the absence of the trio especially of Shri Rama got a heart attack and died to reach heaven. Muni Vashishtha the Head Priest and other seniors initiated preparations to declare Bharata as the King. Having assumed the new Kingship rather reluctantly, Bharata proceeded to the forests in search of the Trio. Having reached them, Bharata addressed Shri Rama most respectfully and entreated him stating : tvameva raajaa Dharmagjna! But Rama smilingly replied that he was merely fulfilling the 'pitru vakya parapaanana' and affectionately reprimanded and convincinly asked Bharata to return to the kingdom severally. Finally, Bharata had to return but after lifting up Shri Rama Paduka , the wooden foot wear of Rama and keeping the same aloft on his head and returned to Nandigrama instead of Ayodhya to keep up the mere retention of Kingship duties as a stop-gap arrangement awaiting Rama's return as the 'primo geniture' King! There after crowds of public from all over the Kingdom kept on visiting Rama-Sita- Lakshmanas day in and day out, Shri Rama then decided to move into the inaccessible 'Dandakaaranya' being the deep jungle.

Vishleshana on Chitrakuta Mountain:

Chitrakut: Most significant fact is that Lord Shri Ram along with Devi Sita and brother Lakshman spent years together at this 'Tapobhumi' or Meditation Land of Sanctity- where Maharshi Atri and his illustrious follower Munis stayed too- during his forest life as per his father Dasharatha's wish. Chitrakut is some 15 km from Karvey Station is on Manikpur-Jhansi Line of Indian Railways. At Chitrakut, the parikrama or circumambulation of Kamadagiri /mountain and Shri Rama Darshan are the significant tasks. The parikrama is to take some five days of some 30 km. Starting from Raghava Prayaga 'snana' at Sitapur-Koti Tirtha, Sita Devi's Kichen, Hanuman Dhara-Keshavaghar, Pramodavana, Janaki kund, Sirasa vana, Spkatika shila, Anasuya- Gupta Godavari snana, Kailasa Parvata darshana- and from Chabepura to Bharat kupa and Rama Shayya or Rama's bed. On way in the Parikrama occur Mukharavinda where snana is of importance followed by temples of Hanuma, Saakshi Gopala, Lakshmi Narayana, Shri Ramas sthaana, Tulasidasa nivasa, Kaikeyi and Bharata Mandirs, Charana Paduka Mandir. There are three most hallowed 'Charana Chinha' or foot prints of Lord Shri Rama viz. Charana Paduka or His footwear prints, Janaki kunda and 'Sphatika shaala'. The specific Spot where Bharata met Rama for the first time and the molten stone of Rama's footprint is visible still. Among other hallowed Places nearby Charana Paduka are Lakshman Hill and Lakshman Mandir, Janaki Kund, Anasuya-Atri Ashram, Gupta Godavari and so on. Nearby Chitra kut are Ganesha Kund, Valmiki Ashram, Viradha Kunda, Sharabhanga Ashram, Sutikshan Ashram and Rama Vana.]

As the trio of Vishmamitra, Rama and Laksmanas were entering Dandakaranya, Rama had to destroy a series of Rakshasas especially 'Viratha', and met Maha Munis such as Sharabhanga, Suteekshana, and the famed Agastya who devoured and dried up the oceans. Agastya Muni bestowed to Shri Rama the Aindra Dhanush, a powerful 'khadga' and two 'akshaya tuneeras' or everlasting arrow retainers.

[Vishlesana or delineation about Agastya- from Matsya Purana: Sage Narada enquired of Bhagavan Shankara about the origin of Agastya Muni and Vasishtha. Maheswara explained that once Indra despatched Vayu and Agni to destroy Danavas and having successfully killed thousands of the enemies, ignored some Daityas like Taraka, Kamalaaksha, Paravasas, Kaladamshttra and Virochana as they fled away and concealed in deep Seas. The Danavas who hid themselves kept on tormenting human beings as also Devatas eventually. Indra ordered that Vayu and Agni should dry up the Sea water, especially to kill dangerous Daityas like Jambhasura, but the both the Devas argued that in the process of drying up the Seas even in a minor manner there would be serious havoc caused to crores of Jeevas. Indra was annoyed at their argument and cursed them to fall down on Earth from Swarga and both the Devas entered into a 'Jala Kumbha' or Water Pitcher as a single body. Meanwhile, Sages Nara and Narayana were in Tapasya on Gandhamadana Mountain, and Indra was concerned that they might not be a threat to his chair; he despatched a few Apsaras to the Mountain along with Kamadeva but their attempts to tempt the Maharshis failed. As the Apsaras continued to be stationed there, Narayana Rishi created a damsel of exquisite attraction from his thighs and named her Urvashi; he desired that Apsaras should realize that their beauty was nothing compared to whom they could materialise as Urvashi and they could not possibly tempt Nara Narayan Maharshis, after all! Mitra (Sun God) and Varuna (Rain God) happened to see the damsel and could not resist the fall of their combined semen of Mitravaruna which was deposited in the same Jala Kumbha (pitcher) that fell down from the Swarga and thus Agastya was born as Kumbha Sambhava. Vasishtha too was reborn from the pitcher earlier since he felt offended when King Nimi did not properly attend to him as he visited the King and hence gave a curse to Nimi to live as 'Videha' or without body, but the King too gave a return curse; both Nimi and Vasishtha approached Lord Brahma who solved the problem by retaining Nimi's life in his Eyes and Vasishtha to be reborn to Mitravaruna since the latter's semen fell in the pitcher on seeing Apsara Urvashi. Subsequently Agastya married Lopamudra, absorbed the entire Ocean in his Kamandulu to isolate the Danavas to enable Indra to kill the notorious Danavas and released it later as his urine and was thus stated to be salty!; he also razed down the ego of Vindhya Mountain by making him bend for ever thus banning the Mountain to stoop for ever till the Sage's return which never happened as he continued to stay down the Vindhya. There was also the legend attributed to Agastya about the Daitya brothers Ilvala and Vatapi, who knew the Mrita Sanjeevani Mantra; they would assume the forms of Brahmanas and seek the passers by to tempt them to a feast of goat-meat, and after consuming the meal ask Vatapi to come out and Vapati would come out piercing through the tummy of the stranger and the brothers would enjoy his meat. But Agastya Muni was too clever to bless the good food saying 'Vatapi! Jeerno bhava' and Vatapi was fully digested even before Ilvala was able to recite the Mrita Sanjeevani Mantra! [Till date, devotees recite Lalita Sahasranama as inspired by 'Vaagdevatas' as also the 'Aditya Hridaya' scripted by Agastya Muni. Vasishtha, the Brahmarshi was the arch-enemy of Rajarshi Vishvamitra ever since the latter claimed Nandini the Celestial Cow and fought a battle in which Viswamitra was defeated. The enmity continued till once both the Rishis cursed each other to become birds and finally Brahma had to intervene and convert them back as human beings].

As trio proceeded further, one day there was a congregation of Munis which called on Shri Rama about the repetitive attacks and tormentations of the Raakshasaas and the latter proclaimed an assurance by way of a 'pratigjna' or declaration of a solemn vow. As an immediate sequel to the pratigjna, Rakshasi Shurpanakha the younger sister of the Epic Villian Ravana was converted as a 'kurupi' or defaced face by slitting of her nose and ears by Lakshmana since the latter was restrained not to resort to killing a woman even as a raakshasi. This incident provoked the Khara-Dushana-Trishiras and their follower Rakshasaas were destroyed by Rama's arrows. This was followed by the merciless killings of fourteen thousand 'raakshasaas' in the 'dandakaaranya' for the greatest relief of the local human beings and animal-bird species. As the defaced Surpanakha approached Ravana in his court for demanding revenge from him being her own brother, several advisors in the court of Ravana asked for restraint but Maricha left for the 'dandakaaranya' and assumed the form of a golden deer. The slippery deer evaded both Rama and Lakshman who ran after the animal while Ravana having taken the form of a Muni begged for alms from Devi Sita and persuaded her to cross the 'Lakshman Rekha' and literally snatched Devi Sita onto his aero plane and badly hurt the defending 'Jatayu' the Vulture Bird- which tried to attack him with a valiant fight but in vain. As Rama and Lakshmana chanced the huge vulture, they realised that Jatayu tried best to thwart Ravana's effort to abduct Devi Sita. [Rama realised that Jatayu and his younger brother Sampati were involved in a race as to who could fly higher to the skies, Jatayu no doubt flew higher but Sampati but was hurt by Sun flames; Sampati saved Jatayu by spreading his own wings but the latter had his wings totally burnt for ever! Such was the spirit of their sacrifice!] Jatayu consoled the distraught Rama and reassured him that no harm could come to Sita and that very soon she would be restored to them from Ravana. Rama was as much overwhelmed by grief as by a surging sense of affection and gratitude and embraced Jatayu and blessed him to reach swarga after the death.

From the dying Jatayu Rama Lakshmanas realised that Ravana'sura flew away with Devi Sita; Rama and Lakshmana were stunned at the rapid sequence of the events, even as Rama broke out his heart out and his sturdy physique had literally crumbled down heartbroken. They performed the funeral rights of the Great Bird and proceeded further in search of the whereabouts of Devi Sita. On the way ahead, they got surrounded by the long and powerful arms of the headless demon Kabandha and severed the clutches of the hands drawing Rama Lakshmanas towards his stomach and killed the demon but blessed him to reach swarga. While dying the demon resumed his Gandharva form named Vishvaavasu but due to his arrogant attitude Indra cursed him to become a headless animal but would be taught a lesson by Rama Lakshmanas eventually. The Gandharva then directed Rama Lakshmanas to move towards Rishyamukha Mountain and meet a monkey chief in exile named Sugriva for an alliance and that he would assist Rama to discover Devi Sita. The Gandharva also suggested that on way to the Rishyamukha mountain, Rama Lakshmanas might also visit Shabari Ashram also. As directed, Rama Lakshmanas visited Shabari and having enjoyed the fruits offered blessed her and by her example of bhakti taught her further for Loka Kalyana.

Vishleshana on Shabari;

Shabari was a tribal girl curious to know what 'dharma' was all about and approached Matanga Maharshi at the foothills of Rishyamukha mountain; the Rishi accepted her as his student and ever since lived in his ashram teaching her in his service. As years passed by she became old walking with a stick and plucking berry fruits from the gardens of the ashram; meanwhile Matanga Muni achieved 'Maha Samaadhi' in 'padmaasana' posture, while assuring her to await the arrival of Shri Rama Lakshmanas. As the latter finally did arrive, she brought basketful of berry fruits and after biting and tasting the fruits only offered them to Rama and Lakshmana declaring to the world that sincere 'bhakti' would be the 'moksha maarga'; and thus the 'Shabari Ramayana' emphasizing Bhakti for Bliss. Rama gave the discourse to Shabari about the nine folded bhakti viz. 'Satsang' or affinity with followers of Truthful Virtue - 'Shravana' or hearing all about Dharma- 'Guru Seva' or Service and Following of a Guide- 'Japa' or constant repetition of the Sacred Name of Paramatma- 'Bhajana' or chorus singing in praise of the Lord as an expression in the public and selfless service to the society- and finally 'bhakti' or intense devotion without expectation recalling Bhagavad Gita's : Karmanyevaaadhikaaraste maa phaleshu kadaachana, maa karma heturbhuuh maate sangostva karmani/ One has only the liberty to 'do' but never demand the return fruits about which one has no control. Yet never abstain from the performance surely expected of the person. 'Karma Phala' is as per the decision of the Almighty. What ever is decided as per destiny shall doubtless be awarded to the person concerned. Never hesitate to accept by way of self desire or by the misleading advice of the public. The very feeling of disappointment creates suspicion and self repudiation. This tends to lead to frustration which is the anti-thesis of contentment and thus further leads to a string of inabilities for further successes! That situation is tantamount to 'jadatva' or total lack of initiative!]

Pampaa teere Hunumataa sangato Vaanarenah, Hanumadvachanaachaiva Sugreevena samaagatah/
Having proceeded further from Shabari Sahram, Rama Lakshmanas reached Pampaasara river banks and enquired of an illustrious Monkey who introduced himself as Hanuman and showed the way to meet Sugreeva. [Hamaman Anjanaa suunuh Vaayu putro Mahabalah, Rameshthah phalgunasakhah pinjaakshomita vikramah udadhikramanaschaiva Sitaa shoka vinaasahanah, Lakshmanah praana daataacha Dashagreevascha darpahadwaadashaani naamaani Kapeendrasya mahaa balah, svaapa -

Thereafter, Rama having met Sugreeva the Monkey King in exile narrated the story of Rama and Sita as kaale pathennityam yaatraa kaale visheshitah tasya mrityubhayam naasti sarvatra vijayee bhavet!] the latter was provenly abducted by Ravanaasura and desired that Sugreeva should please help in recovering his wife Sita. Sugreeva took a vow to do so by swearing as ‘agni saakshi’. Then Sugreeva narrated his tale of woe as to how his own elder brother suddenly appeared and dethroned him and forcibly took away his wife too. He narrated that once a Demon challenged the original King Vaali but when subdued by Vaali ran away into a mountain cave and as soon as the latter entered the cave gate was shut; thereafter there were fierce sounds for days together and suddenly there were victory cries and shouts by the demon loudly even as blood was flowing from outside the gate. Thus Sugreeva concluded that Vaali was killed and returned with a heavy heart. But he took the precaution of shutting the door of the cave with a huge boulder with the help of several co- vaanaras so that the demon would never get out. the door of the cave . On return to the kingdom, the co vaanaras forced Sugreeva to take over the kingship. But in course of months and years, Vaali made all out efforts and returned to the kingdom, physically tortured Sugreeva as the latter fled away to Kishkindha as Vaali was cursed in the past even as he was a king, Maataga Muni cursed him that if he put his foot there then Vaali would fall dead. But Vaali as the revised King forcibly took Sugriva’s wife Ruma there since. Having heard the story, Rama promised to retrieve his kingdom and wife too. But Sugreeva had naturally suspected Rama’s valour and capability and suggested that a recently dead body skeleton of a mountain like demon named Dundhibhi be thrown far away only to ascertain Shri Ramas’s intrepidity. Smilingly, Rama moved his left foot little finger on the huge body and throw the skeleton ten yojanas away! Further he found a line of seven giant like ‘taala vrikshas’ or palmira palm trees on the mountain top near by were crumbled down by a single arrow which returned back too. These kinds of proofs as sampled by Rama buttressed confidence in Rama’s prowess and proficiency. There after Sugreeva showed the way upto a mountain cave to Rama Lakshmanas and called aloud the King Vaali and his wife Tara to come out and challenged even as Rama killed Vaali by a single arrow shot. Sugreeva then became the King again and commanded his ‘Vaanara sena’ the monkey brigade and despatched them to different directions to search for Devi Sita. There after a ‘Grudhra’-vulture - named ‘Sampaati’ (younger brother of Jataayu) who was blind but blessed by Surya Deva with far sight , indicated about the whereabouts of Devi Sita. Then Lord Hanuman crossed the ocean by a far far jump with his bodily might and having located Devi Sita in the ‘Ashoka Vaatika’ as she was crying away incessantly. Then he convinced Devi Sita by presenting Rama’s ring as a proof and conveyed Rama’s message to her. Thereafter he ran berserk all over in various directions of the Ashoka Vaatika and created destruction and havoc all around. He killed five Senapatis and seven sons of Ministers guarding the vaatika and voluntarily got caught; he recalled Lord Brahma’s boon to him and pretended that he was actually caught and smilingly tolerated the acts of mischief by the Rakshasaas. Then having taken care of the specific place where Devi Sita was seated, he literally performed ‘ Lanka Dahana’ or burning down the entire capital city of Lanka.

Brief Vishleshana on Anjaneya: Origin and Illustrative Stutis

Origin)Kesari the son of Gautami Rishi and Kesari’s wife Anjana secured a grand son named Hanuman with the ‘Amsa’ (facet) of Parama Shiva and Vayu Deva too was responsible in the birth of the boy. Mistaking Surya Deva for a red-coloured fruit, the boy was tempted to fly skyward tried to hold Surya Deva, as Indra threw his Vajra on Hanuman's body and Ravana tried to hold Hanuman's tail but Hanuman never left his firm hold of Surya Deva. Ravan kept on fighting for a year in vain and tried to wriggle out of Hanuman's powerful clasp. Meanwhile Rishi Vishrava arrived at the spot and eulogised Hanuman to release Ravana the terror of the Universe. There after Hanuman resided for long time at Pampapura on the banks of Pampa River as a strong fixture and was thus acclaimed as 'Sthanu'. Also since Ravana who had dictated the World and controlled Devas was humiliated by Anjaneya, his name and fame spread as Hanuman: Nighnanta cha Suraan mukhyan Ravanam Lokaraavanam, Nihanti Mushthirbhayah sa Hanumaaniti vishrutah. (Ravana who was in the habit of badly hurting Devas and related Demi-Gods and killing Vishnu- Bhaktas without mercy had thus been restrained badly and received a jolt by Hanuman; the 'Mushtighatas' or 'Hanus' (beatings of closed hand grasps) damaged Ravana was the reason why Hanuman was named as such. Lord Brahma informed Hanuman that during the twenty eighth Tretayuga's first Part of Vaivaswa Manvantara, Bhagavan Vishnu would take the Incarnation of Shri Rama and that he would achieve Rama's unreserved devotion to Hanuman and destroy the clan of Ravana, his cruel brothers and sinful sons. (Bhavishya Purana)

There after he returned back to Rama about the havoc and sampled scare of the invincibility of Rama and of the strength of ‘vaanara sena’! He conveyed to Shri Rama that he had indeed met Devi Sita. Soon thereafter this accomplishment of Anjaneya, Rama Lakshmanas moved forward up to the banks of the Samudra; Rama had initially prayed to the Samudra Deva but in the absence of non reply got prepared by providing a taste of the fierce Rama Bana even as the Deva appeared and made way for a ‘Rama Setu’ or a bridge across the ocean which was deftly crafted by Nala Deva the celestial engineer. It was by this very bridge that Rama Lakshmanaadi warriors and the vanara sena headed by Sugreeva and the rest reached Lankapuri and decimated Ravana and his followers, while Devi Sita felt shy and even put to shame by what some of the remarks of the audience present were distressing and derogatory even and as a result she performed ‘agni pravesha’ or entering into the flames. As Agni Deva vindicated her ‘eka paativratya’ or of single husband’s reality, Rama along with Rishis and Devatas extolled and so did the Tri Lokas. Shri Rama was contented and bestowed Kingship of Lanka to Vibheeshana. Meanwhile, Devas from above showered rains of flowers as a gesture of the triumph and vindication of Dharma and Nyaaya, even as the dead vanara sena soldiers came back to life again. The entire retinue reached Bharadwaaja ashram and Shgri Rama sent a message to Bharata by Anjaneya. Then along with Sugreeva the trio of Rama-Sita-Lakshmana reached Nandigrama and had Rama had his hair cutting and moved further along with Bharata too to Ayodhya to resume his Kingship once again.

Public has neither fear, nor ever drowned in deep waters, or subject to illness due to pollution of air, or flames. Further the commonality ever suffered due to hunger nor thieving or robberies. Each and every village or township is with surplus of food and prosperity, just as in the days of Krita Yuga.

Vishleshana or analysis

Rama Rajya: The perception, as to how a King should govern his Kingdom and the Subjects, was illustrated by Lord Rama to Laxmana. Agni Purana has described Rama's Percepts of an Ideal King: A King has to create wealth, increase it, protect it, and donate it. He should be humble-the humility arising out of victory, essentially after defeating the human senses of revenge, anger and retribution. He should be strong, magnanimous and forgiving, kind and protective. His support to the inferior and the needy is as significant as to punish and uproot the wicked and harmful. The human vices of greed, lust, dishonesty are but the reflections of a sick mind, which has no conviction or courage or helpfulness to the needy. Rama also advised considerable patience to deal with the timid, haughty and hurtful as these are indeed the traits of a villain. Once there is no ray of remorse and there is no trace of recovery from the pent-up senses of ego, impoliteness and audacity, then the time to end the culprit has arrived. Bhavishya Purana.

Ideal Kingship: Manu Deva then describes the ways of conduct and dharmas of a King about his origin and keys to his success as a popular and famed head of a nation. On attaining kingship to a deserving and select kshatriya origin, the King is coronated by the prescribed Vedic Principles to assume the duties expected as from a Head of the Kingdom. This is so when a Leader of the Society has to establish an authoritative Institution based essentially on Dharma and Nyaya and above all to ensure safety and security as an Integrated Identity among the comity of co-kingdoms. Hence the group of Devas like Indra, Surya, Vaayu, Yama, Agni, Varuna, Chandra and Kubera confer Kingship to the most suitable Kshatriya as per Vedic Verses hence as the unique representative of the lusters and magnificences of the combinations of the representative Devas; indeed like a Sun God the King becomes too radiant to gaze and provides the great source of authority and power sourced from the respective Devas of warmth yet heat of Agni, sweep and speed of Vaayu, placidity and coolness of Chandra, sternness and demand of justice/ virtue of Yama, ample food and sustenance of Varuna, and the auspiciousness and prosperity of Kubera! Even a King as an infant is worthy of respect and awe as there is a worthy King in him and ought to be so venerated. Indeed, careless approach and casual treatment paid to an infant king, who is no doubt, backed up the strong foundations of Kingship as from Vedic Principles, as Agni could provide warmth as also burn the whole family and property as of 'lock-stock- and barrel'! A King with his 'kaarya siddhi' or the success of his purpose as per the prevalent circumstances of 'Desha Kaala Tatwa' seeks to attain 'dharma siddhi' as he assumes varied features of kshama, krodha, mitrata, or even pratikaara or revenge! A King indeed is 'sarva tejomaya' or all powerful as he could usher in Devi Lakshmi or around prosperity, or his anger might invite mrityu or death. If a King is annoyed even by default, the victim's misfortune kicks off and his indignation is certain to mritu! Tasmaad dharmam yamishteshu sa vyavasyennaraadhipah, anishtam chaapyanishteshu tam dharmam na vichaalayet/ Tasyaartho sarvabhutaanaam goptaaram dharmama -atmajam, brahmatejomayam dandam- asrijat purvameeshvarah/ or that is why the dharmas originally created by the institution of Kingship are such as never to be infringed upon and hence the age old principles are such as shaped by the conscience of any King either of mercy or of punishments. This

why any of the ‘sthaavara-jangamaas’ or of moving-immoveable nature in Srishti are driven by the impulses of their own consciences too and the interpretations of respective Kingships as per ‘desha - kaala- paristhitis’ or of contemporary situations need necessarily to be upheld and observed. Hence punishments truly represent the King, his Purushtva of assertion and of unquestionable Leadership ; punishment only governs, protects, and sustains vigilance even in sleep or casualness as the constant guard and caution. Sameekshya sa dhritah samyak sarvaa ranjayati prajaah, asameekshya praneetastu vinaashayati sarvatah/ Once punishment is made applicable and enforced, it uproots the evil but once gets lax then attracts further evil. In the case of a King’s negligence of punishment, the defaulted person once saved perpetuates the evil as a fried fish about to be pitch-forked spared or soft cotton piece turns into an iron rod! In case a King spares a criminal from punishment, a crow would steal a pitru pinda or a dog sniff or lick a sacrificial food just as a person of illfame forcefully occupies another’s lawful house in possession since dandasya hi bhayaat sarvam jagad bhogaaya kalpate/ or the entire world loses the grip of fear and becomes all kinds of illegal perversions. Once a rod is spared then even a child is spoilt; Deva, Daanava, Gandharva, Raakshasa, Pakshi, Sarpas too once spared would be victimised with evil; being devoid of ‘daanda’, the conduct of all the beings in Srishti gets sullied and in respect of human beings varnaashrama dharmas are severely broken irretrievably paving way for vices and engendering evil forces Yatra shyaamo lohitaaksho dandashcharati paapahaa, prajaastatra na muhyanti netaa chet saadhu pashyati/ Tasyaahuh sampranetaaram raajaanam satyavaadinam, sameekshya kaarinam praajnam dharma kaamaartha kovidam/ That exactly why the concept of Kingship or Leadership is stated as the hinge and hold of the sensitive balance of virtue and vice; where punishment is due it ought to stalk around assuming black color and of red eyes demolish blemishes and sins. Moreso it is in the context of fulfilling the four human aspirations of Dharma-Artha-Kaama-Moksha in a measured manner; indeed hence is the presence of Leadership as assumed by a King. Kingship is defined as who is aware and conscious of the art of punishing and sparing the stick ; tam raajaa pranayansamyak trivargena abhivardhate or He is the ideal King who is truthfully wedded to the principles of virtue and nyaaya, modest and ideal earnings for the Self and dependents besides spare for charity, and controlled and regulated by moderate and just desires; but certainly not to fulfill sensual pleasures, deceitful ways of flippant lives and of selfish motivations. When punishment is prescribed it may not be palatable to unrelenting minds, but when the king concerned does not proclaim it in a non commensurate manner without adequately examining or hiding facts of the case, then the King if partial in judgment is not spared too and might affect his family even. Once the King and his family is ruined, then the store of ‘adharmaas’ so collected might affect not only his possessions of castles, his territories and his ‘praja’ and their fortunes also. Contrarily a champion of Dharma and Nyaya would carve a niche not merely among the co-kings but as in respect of Maharshis and even Devas might secure a qualification for Brahmatva! A continuous series of undue punishments out of hiding facts or ignoring them and issued by an unjust King would have repercussions on the disgrace and ruin of his deputies down the line in the Vamsha and might adversely affect those concerned like Ministers, Army Commanders and so on as involved in the declarations of judgments. Further on, even the Sages would feel the guilt and the thought processes of Devas receiving ‘havyas’ at the Agni Karyas in the Kingdom might be disturbed! Hence: Shuchinaa satyasandhena yathaa shaastaanusaarinaa, pranetum shakyate dandah susahaayena dheemataa/ Svaraashtre nyaaya vrittaah syaad bhrishadashcha shatrushu, suhritsvajihmah snigdheshu braahmaneshu kshamaanvitah/ The ideal most King is such sagacious, truthful and intelligent kind of unique followers of Dharma and Nyaya, ably assisted by equally professional deputies, and indeed his judgments for or against punishments or rewards are stated to be one among the countless ones of his worthy race. The fame of such rarity are like drops of oil spreading fast in running flows of water. However the ill fame of a King unworthy of his title and seat tends to act like buter on the water flows steadily till the day of doom. The idealism of Kingship upholds the dignities of the Chatur Varnas and ensures their continuity.. Such Kings of rarity are stated to possess their daily routine as folows: in the early mornings itself, they attend the congregations of the learned and the aged vidwans of Rig-Yajur-SaamaVedas and discuss the specifics of Dharmas and of Administrative Principles involved. They worship and honour such vidwans appropriately and abide by their teachings as discussed. Such exemplary Kings are never harmed but enjoy longevity and prosperity. They are modest and that modesty makes them imperishable. For want of modesty, several Kings in history had perished along with their belongings and on the other hand hermits in forests had turned to be Kings. Veno vinashtovinayaatnahushashchaiva paarthivah/Sudaah paija vanashchaiva sumukho nimoreva cha/ Prithustu vinayaad raajyam praaptavaan manureva cha, Kuberashcha dhanaishvaryam brahmannyam chaiva Gaadhijah/ In the historical introspective, illustrious Chakravartis or Emperors like Vena, Nahusha, Sudaasa, Yavana, Sumukha, and Nimi perished out of their questionable and evil conduct. On the other hand Prithu and Manu flourished as Chakravatis out their outstanding modesty and impecable character and Kubera gained the position of Dhanaadyaksha and one of the Ashtapalakas of the Universe. Vishwamitra the illusrrious son of Gaadhi a Kshatriya by birth attained the status of an elevated Brahmana by the dint of perseverance, tapsya and conduct .The King should perfectly understand the aspirations of the common persons of the day especially in avioding the pitfalls of co-Kings and most unhesitatingly try to initiate steps in constructing such a Capital City and never even seek to his own personal comfort but ensure his deputies and staff as well as the public of the Kingdom to live with comfort and safety. Towards this end, he needs to construct a fortress protected by vagaries of seasons and possible eventualities of diseases or natural disasters. Such a fortress of distinction and status be suitably equipped with defence forces to ensure safety from attacks of beasts, robbers, internal forces of revolution, external foes and such elements and forified with weapons, grains, cattle and fodder, ample water and tools, as also Vidwans, artisans, and representatives of chatur varnas, and above all Purohitaas or Priests and Ritvigs to duly perform various smarta karmas of auspicious nature besides the shrouta karmas of daily agni karyas and Sacrifices. Yajeta raajaa kratubhirvi vidhairaapta dakshinaih, dharmartham chaiva viprebhyo dadyaad bhogaan dhanaani cha/ Saanvatsarikamaaptaishcha raashtraadaahaarayad balim, syaachchaamnaayaparo loke varteta pitrivatnrishu/ The King has to be such as always engaged in Ashwamedhaadi yajnas attracting learned Brahmans to receive gifts and charities of golden ornaments, precious clothes and so on besides providing employment to workers as also the participating crowds of public with feasts.Indeed the King is stated more than a father and protector of the interests of one and all. As the citizens of the Kingdom are responsive of the noble activities of the King and the band of his officials of commitment ensuring peace and safety, the taxes are paid on time and general business climate is salutary and hence the economy is sound and attracts investments from the public and from foreign kingdoms too.Besides plugging in loopholes of business transactions, the King too motivate the officials down the line with incentives , moral persuasion and punishments against inefficiency or corruption. As BrahmanaVidyathis emerge out of Guru Kula after Vedaadhyayana are suitably gifted and trained for more and more tough assignments to preserve and promote dharmacharana since nidhir braahmanobhi dheeyate or indeed Brahmanas are the treasures installed by the Kings that could neither be lost nor robbed; such treasures could also not be split, nor perish as they are ever-sustained by the purity and blaze of Agni itself. Samamabraahmane daanam dvigunam braahmanabrue, praadheete shatasaahasramanantam veda -paarage/ Paatrasya hi visheshena shraddadhaanatayaiva cha, alpam vaa bahu vaa pretya daanasya phalamashnute/ While charity is offered to any of Varnas then there would be good returns of ‘sukrita phala’, but once that daana is given to a Brahmana the returns get doubled ; once that daanas are executed to a well read and knowledgeable Brahmana, the fruits get further intensified hundred thousand fold, while the recipient is a Veda Vedanga paaranga, then he demands ‘anantha phala’! Even if a ‘daana’ were given as per one’s own ability, then undoubtedly a deserving status is accomplished in the higher worlds. (Manu Smriti)

Reverting back to stanzas 94 -96: The most illustrious personality of Treta Yuga having successfully pioneered over hundred Asvamedha Yagjnas having executed ten thousand crores of daanaas especially of milch cows had kept up the flag of dharma atop, reigned for 11 thousand years and then got absorbed in the time cycle.

These two sacrificial vessels are kept on the front and rear sides of the Sacrificial Horse thus indicating the dawn and dusk. The context differs in respect of Horse Sacrifice: it is called Haya Medha in respect of Devas, Vaajina Medha for Gandharvas, Arva Medha for Asuras and Ashwa Medha for human beings. Indeed, Sea is the common relative for Devas, Gandharvas, Asuras and human beings alike!)

Maharshi Valmiki while bathing in Tamasa River gets aghast seeing a couple of frolicking Krouncha birds shot down by merciless hunter and his expression was the beginning of Valmiki Ramayana!

Brahmarshi Narada appears to have initiated deleneation of Shri Rama to Valmiki Maharshi and thereafter departed for a bath in river Tamasa near Ganga along with his disciples; he addressed his shishya named Bharadvaja and expressed how refreshing was the bath. As he looked around he spotted on the banks of the cool water flows two krouncha birds in chirruping play and fun in a nest on a tree branch. But just then a cruel hunter released an arrow at the loving male bird which got dropped dead in blood and the female bird crooned in anguish and misery. The two love birds had always been together infatuated with each other and Muni Valmiki was truly pained and hurt in his heart and inner conscious - ness. The natural instinct of the Maharshi prompted him involuntarily to burst out rather reprimandingly: Mā niṣāda pratiṣṭhāṁ tvam agamah śāśvatīḥ samāḥ, yat krauñcamithunād ekam avadhīḥ kāmamohitam/ ‘Hey hunter! Why have you so mercilessly killed the male partner of such loving birds suddenly! You too would soon die as a retribution!’ Having shoutedspontaneously thus, the Maharshi got retrospective and addressed his disciples that a few words were slipped from my tongue as the feeling was intense! The shishyas replied unanimously: ‘Paada baddhou aksharasamastah tantreelayasamanvitaḥ, shokaartasya pravritto me shloko bhavatu naanyathaa/’ Guru sire! Whar ever has slipped out from your tongue has admirably fitted itself in a four lined stanza of glory with rhythmic sound metered with perfection of eight letters of prosody just as a ‘veenaa dhvani’ of the stringed musical instrument! The prime disciple Bharadvaja instantly agreed affirmingly that a meaningful stanza by framed as what the Guru has stated involantarily! As this incident had happened the entire troupe concluded their bath and moved on to their ashram even as the hot deliberation of the entire ashram was on the singular topic of the day. The Guru shishya ‘samvada’ on the principles of dharma took place subsequently although the background was basically hovering on the morning incident only. Meanwhile, the Charurmukha Brahma himself appeared and alerted Valmiki Maharshi. The latter was taken aback and prostrated to Brahma along paadya- arghya- aasana-puja- stotra formalities while Brahma endearingly made the Maharshi seated comfortalby beside him. But the Maharshi was at the back of his mind about the morning incident especially recalling what he stated at that juncture. Brahma smilingly understood what the Maharshi was cogitating about recalling what all the Maharshi stated. He then suggested: ‘Maharshi! What you had stated spontaneously as a stanza was truly as per ‘chhandas’ or prosody and need not torment your psyche so much; let this stanza under reference be the inspiration of scripting the entirety of ‘Rama charitra’; Bhagavan Shri Rama as the incarnation of Maha Vishnu Himself was indeed the exemplary human figure of the Treta Yuga of virtue- sacrifice-charity-tolerance but sibmultaneously of bravey- heroism-and everlasting renown!

This was what Brahmarshi Narada conveyed to Valmiki Muni as having expressed by Brahma to Narada. Let this Rama Charitra be publicised so far kept dormant and undescribed and let the world be aware of the completed details as to how dharma prevails as the lasting reality, despite the vicissitudes and tests of Adharma as Truth is vindicated ultimately. Narada with the inspiration of Brahma affirmed to Valmiki Maharshi: Maharshi! what ever you are going to script as the ‘Ramayana’ shall most certainly be true and factual and hence be prepared soon as per ‘anushthup cchhandas’. Yāvat sthāsyanti girayaḥ saritaś ca mahītale, tāvad rāmāyaṇakathā lokeṣu pracariṣyati/ yāvad rāmasya ca kathā tvatkṛtā pracariṣyati, tāvad ūrdhvam adhaś ca tvaṁ mallokeṣu nivatsyasi/ ‘As long as rivers flow and the might of mountains is sustained, the worlds should be fully saturated with ‘Ramayana Prachaara’. The Ramayana that you would script soon ought to become popular world wide and what ever seriatum and content followed by you would be lasting too! Narada thus informed Valmiki after the disappearance of Lord Brahma.

Valmiki Maharshi was nonplussed with the rapid sequence of what all happened on that day. Once sensitised thus, the disciples of Valmiki kept on resounding repeatedly the shloka as they were literally dipped steep in. At the same time Valmiki Maharshi was mentally getting ready to take up the enormous task of Ramanayana of twenty four thousand stanzas plus and seeking to select the style of scripting according to meter as per chhanda vedaanga, with tuneful phrases, conjunctions, and rhymes with aptness and of tunes enriching the content and inner meanings and appropriate emotional appeals embedded therein.

Having heard intently the narration of what Brahmarshi Narada conceiving Brahma Deva's directive to him, Vaalmiki Maharshi sought 'punardarshana' of Narada but with no success, especially about the directive that the scripting of Sampurna Ramayana should be to fulfill the human aspirations of Dharma-Artha- Kaama- Mokshas. But reappearance of Narada did not fructify. Then Valmiki dutifully squatted in 'padmaasana', performed 'aouposhana' of water as a mark of 'trikarana shuddhi' or three folded purity of manasa-vaachaa-karmana or by way of topping up the thoughts by the heart-word -and deed. Then he pondered over the imaginary picture of Shri Rama- Lakshmana- Devi Sita; the Ayodhya Kingdom reigned by King Dasharatha with his queens; the related incidents of their collective incidents of laughters-mutual conversations-thought patterns, the do's and don'ts of administration, and such detailing as filled on his powerful thought and memory screen. The Maharshi imagined the scene of the visits of Rama- Lakshmana and Devi Sita in sprawling garden tours and the interesting incidents thereof. Then the Maharshi seated firmly and had a rapid visual coverage on his mental retina. Just on the lines of what Sage Narada described, he visualised the Raghuvamsha Rama's 'kaavya nirmana' or the outline of the epic of Ramayana. Rama's birth, his outstanding bravery, his ready amiability to one and all, his unique popularity, his extreme patience and sense of forgiveness, his unparalleled truthfulness are to be emphasised on the memory screen. Maharshi Valmiki then imprinted on the screen as to how Rama and Lakshmana duo had experienced the amusing as also auspicious acts in the pioneering company of Sage Vishvamitra as imprinted on his retina including Shurpanakha's teaching a lesson, Mithila King Janaka's announcement of Devi Sita's swayamvara, Shiva Dhanush bhanga, detailings of weddings of Sita Rama and Urmila Lakshmana; Parashu Rama- Shri Rama samvada; Rama Rajyaabhisheka vighna, the villainous role of Kaikeyi, Rama Lakshmana Sita Vana Vaasa, Dasharatha shoka vilaapa followed by his death, the sorrow of the public, the devotion of Guha the boatman, the charioteer Sumanta's loyalty etc.

The overview of Ramayana by Maharshi in his trance from stanzas 15 -39:

Shri Rama, Lakshmana and Devi Sita reaching Ganges- Bharadwaaja Muni darshana and as per his directive reaching Chitra Koota and enjoying the grandeur of its surroundings and building up a hutment for the threesome to live in-arrival of Bharata to meet them and requesting them to return back - performing the remainder obsequies of their departed father- Bharata's return with the 'Rama Paduka' on his head to keep it back on the 'Rajya Simhasana' with veneration- Bharata's stay at Nandigrama-Rama's trio move out to dandaka -aranya-Viraadha vadha-Sharabhangi Muni darshana- Suteekshana samaagama- Anasuya and Sita devi together for some time [Devi Anasuya the daughter of Kardama Muni and the wife of Atri Maharshi residing in their hermitage in the periphery of Chitrakuta- being the mother of Dattatreya as Tri Murtis sought to test her chastity but converted them as toddling babes, popular as Maha Pativratas like Ahalya, Draupadi, Sita, Tara, Mandodari, Anasuya and Sumati] Having heard the background of Devi Sita's life, Anasuya gifted a miraculous ointment which could maintain her beauty and paativratya for ever!] - Maharshi Agastya darshana as he gifted Vaishnava dhanush to Rama- confrontation with Surpanakha and Lakshmana's cutting off her ears and nose- Shri Rama's killing of Khara- Dushana- Trishira's killings by Rama- his killing of Maricha disguised as a golden deer desired by Devi Sita- avenging his sister Shurpanakha's act, Ravanaasura disguised as a Muni forcibly abducts Devi Sita- Shri Rama's heart -pangs of due to Devi viyoga- Jatayu vadha by Ravanaasura- Rama Lakshmana getting snared by Kabandha the headless demon and their killing of the demon-Rama Lakshmana thrilled by the surroundings of Pampa sarovara- Shabari blessed by Shri Rama- the latter's severe pangs of Devi Sita Viyoga- meeting Hanuman at the foothills of 'Gandhamaadana' mount and along with Hanuman escorted to the exiled Vaanara King, Sugreeva- firming up friendship with Sugreeva-Baali Sugreeva battle- Rama's killing Baali- Sugreeva regained the Kingship- Devi Tara the widow of Baali cries away and Rama assuaging her sorrow-'sharatkaala' interrugn months put a stop of Sugreeva's search for Devi Sita's whereabouts- Sugreeva 'pratijna' or swearing for 'Sita anveshana' or her whereabouts and his extensive for her- the blind Kite Sampati, the brother of Jatayu, with inner vision bestowed by Surya Deva, finally makes a break through of pointing out at Lanka the other side of the ocean shores under King Ravana's rule-Hanuman despatched to Lanka with Rama's golden ring to convince Devi Sita in exile- Hanuman seeks cross the ocean- Sumudra Deva warns Hanuman about 'Minaaki' who would rise up to halt but to be warned by Hanuman, Raakshasi 'Simhini' the shadow detector as Hanuman was flying be killed by him and ' Trikuta' mounttain the indicator of Lanka. Hanuman clearly followed the indicators by Samudra and entered the kingdom of Ravana's Lanka at midnight time. Being lonely he pondered over the next step as he peeped in the palace of Ravana who was enjoying liquor and then waited for the day break assuming a mini monkey form in the Ashoka Vatika and having spotted Devi Sita brooding with successive cryings when he saw Ravana visiting her too as she was surrounded by female rakshasis headed by Trijata. On the exit of Ravana, Hanuman sneaked in and having assumed his normal form approached Devi Sita with prostrations and gave his introduction as the devout follower as a Rama Bhakta. To convince Devi Sita, he handed over Lord Shri Rama's finger ring of gold- in return she gave her 'choodaamani'. Thereafter Hanuman resorted to violent destruction of Lanka's capital city helter-skelter as the army of Lanka was annihilated and the survivors fled away. He then purposively surrendered by himself so that he would be taken away to the King Ravana who was seated the royal court. In the court, Hanuman thundered and with his tail elongated and got lit up by the Ravana sena burnt off all over the city regions creating a huge scare of the Lanka Capital. There after, Hanuman crossed back the ocean, participated in a revelling party to the waiting co-monkey comrades in the Madhuvan, approached Shri Rama and conveyed about the welfare of Devi Sita and gave back her 'choodamani' the hair ornament as a memoir, made preparations for travel to Lanka, Rama's interaction with Samudra Deva, Nala the architect constructs a setu bridge across the Sea to let the Vanara Sena and the Selves walk over, overnight surrounding by Rama Sena around Lanka, Vibhishana- Shri Rama 'maitri', Vibhishana giving hints of killing Ravana, Rama's killing of the massive Kumbhakarna, killing of Meghanatha the son of Ravana, Ravana Vinaasha, Devi Sita's final relief, Vibhishana pattaabhisheka at Lanka, Rama's pushpaka vimana yatra with Sita-Lakshmana- Hanuman and Vibhushana and the full entourage to Ayodhya, Bharata's warm reception, Shri Rama - Devi Sita pattaabhisheka celebrations, warm send off to vaanara sena, Devi Sita 'tyaaga' to forests on false accusations by a washerman in Ayodhya, her subsequent happenings and the future episodes were picturesquely described by the outstanding Valmiki Maharshi of eternal fame.

[This Valmiki Ramayana of 24000 stanzas was sung by Lava- Kusha kumars of Shri Rama Devi Sita at a Conference of Muni Mandali before Shri Rama]

As Shri Rama returned to Ayodhya and took over the Kingship, Maharshi Valmiki had deftly reconstructed the proceedings of Ramayana in which he scripted 24000 shlokas over five hundred sargas and seven khandas including Uttara Ramayana. Then Maha Jnaani Valmika wondered whether there could be any personage who could recite as a musical sonnet to let the contents be publicised to the public. Even as he was wondering likewise, the two popular Raja Kumaras Lava and Kusha appeared on his memory screen in the robes of Muni Kumaras and touched his feet respectfully. These two illustrious lads were very intelligent having learnt Veda Vedangas as also the Kshaatra Dharmas from himself! Then he had taught the proceedings of Ramayana upto the date so far. pāṭhye geye ca madhuraṁ pramāṇais tribhir anvitam, jātibhiḥ saptabhir yuktaṁ tantrīlayasamanvitam/ hāsyasṛṅgāra -kāruṇyaraudravīrabhayānakaiḥ, bībhatsādirasair yuktaṁ kāvyam etad agāyatām/ Valmiki Maharshi described to Lava-Kusha Kumaras not only the full details of Ramayana but also the methodology of singing the entire sonnet as per the Nava Rasas as also of sweetness of shortened-medium-elongated ‘swaras’ of voice sounds; further the singing should be as per anvitas- shadaja-and sapta swaras, my the veena the stringed musical instrument. The singing needs also as per ‘taala- and nava rasaas’ of shringara-karuna-hasya-rouudra-bhayanaka and so on. Both Lava and Kusha were also saturated with Gandharva Vidya and its ‘sthaana shabda’ comprising ‘mandra-madhyama and taararupa trividha swaraas’. From the hridaya grandhi or of the heart base or kantha grandhi and shira grandhi, the sounds originating from heart-throat-and head, the swaras are originated as mandra-madhyama-taara or bass-medium-pitched up.

Vishleshanaas:

[Nava Rasaas: Soundarya Lahari stanza 51 as explained: Shringara Rasa is representative of romance- Bibhibhatsa Rasa is on account of reaction to the appalling behavioral pattern of the nature of human and other species-Roudra Rasa is generated by anger-Adbhuta Rasa is the outcome of high esteem and awful wonder of Bhagavan’s bravery and valor- Bhaayanka Rasa emanated from instant reaction of several hissing cobras all over-Veera Rasa reflects the puzzling awe of such as of the blood red colour imbibed into the red lotuses-Haasya Rasa is due to ‘sakhee- sakhaa jana kreedaa svabhaava- Karuna Rasa in response to Bhakti jana’s unstinted and heartfelt devotion- and Shanti is as the Final Destination of ‘Tadaatmyata’ with Prakriti and Parameshwara!]

[Gandharva Vidya: Narada Purana explains: In the Swara Shastra, the Swara of Archika is related to Rig Veda, ‘Gaandhik’ is to ‘Gaadha’ and ‘Saamik’ is to Sama Veda. A ‘Swara’ is according to ‘Ruchas’ (Hymns) and their variations, while in ‘Gathas’ or metered rhythmic verses Sama Veda has

‘Vyavadhaanas’ or pauses. The Yagjna stotras, karanas and Mantras are required to be pronounced as per Swaras; otherwise they turn out to be ‘Viruddha Swaras’. In the entire ‘Vangmaya’ Shastra (Vocabulary), pronunciation originates from ‘Vakshasthala’ (chest), ‘Kantha’ (throat) and ‘Mastaka’(head); from the chest emerges the low level sounds normally resorted to morning singing, from the Kantha emerge the medium and very broad variety of sounds and from Mastaka are emanated high pitch sounds and their variations of volume. The Sapta Swaras-Sa, Ri, Ga, Ma, Pa, Da, and Ni-are ‘Prathama’ (Shadaja), ‘Dwitiya’ (Rishabha), ‘Tritiya’ (Gandhara), ‘Chaturtha’ (Madhyama), ‘Mandra’ (Panchama), ‘Krushtha’ (Dhaivata) and ‘Atiswara’ (Nishadha). Shadaja-Sa- stands for ‘Sagar’ (Sea) with peacock as the representative bird, ‘Muladhara’ (the base of the spine) as the Chakra (body part) and the ruling Deity as Ganapati. Rishabha Re-means bull representing the bird Skylark, ‘Swadhishtana’ or genital as the Chakra and the ruling Deity is Agni. Gandhara Swara ‘Ga’ means Gagan or Sky with goat as the representative animal, ‘Manipura’ (solar plexus/ naval) as the Chakra and Rudra is the concerned Deity. Madhyama-Ma-means the Middle, represented by the bird dove, Anahata (heart) being the relevant body part and Vishnu as the Ruler concerned. Panchama-Pa-means the fifth, represented by nightingale and ‘Vishuddha’ (throat) as the relevant body part and the Ruling Deity is Sage Narada. The Swara titled Dhaivata-Dha-means Dharti or Earth, the representative animal being horse, the relevant Chakra being ‘Aajna’ or the third eye and the Ruler being Sada Shiva. The Seventh Swara viz. Nishada-Ni- meaning Hunter and standing for the animal Elephant, has ‘Sahasrara’ (the crown of the head) as the body part, the Ruler being Surya as the Deity. Besides the Swaras, Shadaja, Madhyama and Gandhara are known as three ‘Graamaas’ (gamut or scale in music). Those who render ‘Saama Gana’ approve twenty graamas in Madhyama Swara, fourteen in Shadaja and fifteen in Gandhara. Also there are seven Murchanas (Intonations / Modulations) meant for Devatas viz. Nandi, Vishaala, Sumukhi, Chitra, Chitravati, Sukha and Bala; and seven for Pitaras viz. Aapyaayani, Vishwabhruta, Chandra, Hema, Kapardini, Maitri and Baarhati. For Rishis too there are seven Murchanas viz. Uttara Mandra in Shadaja Swara, Abhi Rudrata in Rishabha, and Ashvakra in Gandhara. Besides, there are other Murchanas like Souvira in Madhyama Swara, Harshika in Panchama and Uttarayata in Dhaivata Swara. The seven Murchanas utilised by Rishis are also normally used by humans. Normally, there are ten ‘Gunas’ in music viz. Rakta, Purna, Alankrita, Prasanna, Vyakta, Vikrushta, Slakshana, Sama, Sukumara, and Madhura. When ‘Venu’ (Flute), ‘Veena’ (stringed instrument) and Vocal are rendered together then that combination is known as Rakta or ‘Ranjana’. Swara and Shruti (for eg. Kshobini Shruti in Shadaja, Tivra in Komala Rishabha, Dayavanti in Komala Gandharva, Prasarini in Tivra Madhyama, Alapini in Shuddha Dhaivata in Komal Nishad) as also ‘Chhanda’ (Prosody) along with clear pronunciation are called ‘Purna’; Alankrita denotes the Swara from the throat down to the place of heart and taking the sound up to the head; Prasanna emerges from kantha in ‘gadgada’ sound; Vyakta or clearly pronounced by the ‘Pada’(letter), Padartha (material), vachana (eka or bahu / single or many) etc. When the sound is clear in high pitch and understood by the letters of Alphabet is Vikrushta; Slakshan is that Shruti which is devoid of either Dhruta or quick and Vilambita or elongated; Sama is that Shruti which normal by aspects without ups and downs; Sukumara Shruti is of soft nature and Madhura is sweet and sonorous. In regard to the Swaras of Padas (letters) there are eight varieties viz. Antodaatta (like Agnih in ‘Agnirvritraani’), Adyudaatta (like Somah in Somah pavatey), Udaatta and Anudaatta respectively are like Pra and vah in the word ‘Pra voyahvam’; Neecha Swarita is the word Veeryam in the expression ‘Balam nyubjam veeryam’; Madhyadaatta like Havisha in the word ‘Havishaa vidhema’; Swarita like Swaha in the expression ‘Bhurbhuvah swaha’ and finally Dirudaatta as ‘V’kara and ‘spa’ in ‘Vanaspatih’. ‘Adi Swaras’ are three in number viz. Udatta (high tone), Anudatta (low tone) and Swarita (medium). The Swarita is known as ‘Swaar’ and there are seven Swaars viz. Jaatya, Kshepra, Abhinihit, Taira Vyanjana, Tiroviraama, Prashlishta and Paadavritta. [The wide range of Musical forms includes simple ‘Sarali’ (Easy to the beginners) with single or double digit variety like ‘S-R-G-M-P-D-N or SS-RR-GG-MM-PP-DD-NN; ‘Taara Sthayi’(elevated pitch); ‘Alankaram’ or musical ornamentation; ‘Geeta’ or simple musical forms; ‘Swarajati’ with complexes like Pallavi, Anupallavi and Charanam; Kritis or fulfilled singing; Varnam; Kirtana or lyrics; Kriti (higher form of singing); Ragamalika (garland of Raagas), Jaavali, Tillana and so on. [Select Raagas according to timings of day/ night: Before Sun rise- Bhoopaala, Bauli, Malayamaaruta; Early morning: Bilhari, Kedaram, Dhanyasi; before noon: Asavari, Saveri, Deva Manohari; Mid-day and later: Sri Ragam, Madhyamavati; before Evening: Mukhara, Begada; Evening: Vasanta, Purva Kalyani; Night: Neelambari, Kedaragoula; any time: Bhairavi, Kambhoji, Shankaraabharanam or Kalyani.]

Rupalakṣaṇasaṃpannau madhurasvarabhāṣiṇau, bimbādivoddhṛtau bimbau rāmadehāt tathāparau/ Lava Kusha Kumars are stunningly handsome with excellent natural qualities, speaking in sweet voices in their conversational style. They are just like Shrirama’s prototypes worthy of high appreciation; as and when they converse in the congregations of Rishis or Brahmana panditas, Shri Rama charitra’s singing was always thrilling. Once in one of such ‘sabhas’, the Munis were in trance shedding tears of ecstasy responding with expressions of boundless joy as the stanzas and their tuneful singing was par excellence! As the incidents of Ramayana were described as per the contexts, the Munis and Panditas were so much enraptured that some gifted them stood up clapping and gifted valuable clothing, ‘mriga charmas’ on which they were seated and ‘rudraaksha malaas’ and ‘yagjnopaveetaas’ even! Some gifted ‘kamandulas’ or carrying sacred water vessels, ‘mekhalas’ or traditional shawls, walking sticks, ‘yajna paatras’ or vessels for Fire Sacrifices, and even their own ‘koupeenaas’ or underwears even;. All of them were clapping in high appreciation and blessings for the long life and auspiciousness to the boys.. As the lads were singing, they were dancing away as per the tune and the emotion concerned, while swinging the veena instrument, and swaying their fresh flower garlands drawing ready attention to the flocking onlookers. One day, Bharat noticed the gathering appreciative of Lava Kusha’s Ramayana’s song and dance sequence in the open public, and invited them to a concert in the Royal Court in the presence of Shri Rama himself. At the conclusion, Shri Rama remarked addressing Lakshman, Bharata and Shatrughnas: ‘These young lads had rendered Ramayana with such gusto and passion in such realistic style and this concert could be worthy repeatedly to organised manner’. Tatas tu tau rāmavacaḥ pracoditāḥ; agāyatām mārgavidhānasam padā, sa cāpi rāmaḥ pariṣadgataḥ śanair; bubhūṣayāsaktamanā babhūva/ As per the royal decree, crowds got bewitched to trances concert after concert to the unparalleled ecstasy and excitement of the public crowds at various theaters and road shows.

From the ongoing Vaivaswa Manvantara till King Dasharatha to Shri Rama, the entire Earth had been under the administration of kingships in chain Ikshvaku, Mandhata, Ambarisha, Harischandra and Sagara. It was Sagara who got the Great Ocean dug up by his sixty thousand sons; it was the perseverance of Bhagiratha that Ganga was brought down from the skies keeping the entire Aryavarta fertile till date! It is from this glorious past that this eternal Ramayana Maha Itihasa got originated. Both Lava and Kushala decided to sing and extol all about! Koshala Desha was an illustrious Kingdom under the sovereignty Dasharatha in the banks of River Sarayu famed for self sufficiency of fertility and prosperity. Its Capital city was Ayodhya well famed in the contemporary world.; the city was known to have originated from Manu himself spread over twelve - yojanas - 12 to 15 km of length and 3-4 yojanas of width as surrounded by huge trees and green pastures and very broad and roads extremely well lay down. The high roads led to countless lanes and by lanes to excellent individual houses of breadth and width, sprinkled with popular market areas offering a surprising variety of goods and services at competitive and uniform pricing at cost and reasonable profits well controlled. Tām tu rājā daśaratho mahārāṣṭravivardhanaḥ, purīm āvāsayām āsa divi devapatir yathā/ The city of Ayodhya was conceived in the pattern of Indra Deva's Amaravati puri, glorious for dharma and nyaaya. Ayodhya was popular as the destination for 'Lalita Kalas' of music-dance-paintings-shilpikala or stone works and architecture besides the yantra-astra-shastra kalaas too related to battle regulations. Nataka- Natana Mandalis or Dramatics- Action-oriented institutions was yet another Fine Art Institutions were several of contemporary repute. The city of Ayodhya was surrounded by deep ditches impossible to jump across and is tightly guarded massive iron gates and was crowded with horses, elephants, camels, oxen, cows, and their overloaded carts bristling with activities day in and out. Innumerable tourists of men, women, children from all over Bharat and overseas too add to the charisma of the city. The women of Ayodhya were wealthy ornamented with rich and rare jewellery and pure and well embroidered pure and high quality silk dresses of glamour and arresting attractions recalling the brilliance of Indra Loka. vimānam iva siddhānām tapasādhigatām divi, suniveśitaveśmāntām narottamasamāvṛtām/ As though Siddhi Saadhakas having accomplished high lokas, the city of Ayodhya was of such reminiscence and glory. King Dasharadha had at the same time got readied such brave and gifted sena of cavalry, elephantry, and other disciplines who defend the defenceless and destroy evil forces so varying gradations be it a cruel animals in the surrounding forests or by an enemy of any origin within or outside. At the same time, Dasharadha had genuine care and respect for Agnihotris, Learned Panditas of veda vedaangas, and was always engaged in daana dharmaas, besides uplifting the poor and lower rung men and women with instant help and guidance .

[Vishleshana of Sagara Chakravarti and Bhagiratha: Maha Bhagavata Purana is quoted: Harischandra and his wife displayed unprecedented determination and tenacity to uphold Virtue and Self-sacrifice. The Son Rohitasya was brought back to life and was made the King, while Harischandra and wife Chandramati were provided instant places in Heavens. Visvamitra helped to populate the Kingdom and set examples of Dharma and surrender to Almighty. Harischandra's lineage after his son, Rohitasya was followed by sons Haritha-Champa-Sudeva-Vijaya-Bharuka-Vakra-Bahuka and Sagara (Sa-Gara ie born with poison, as Bahuka's co-wives tried to poison the boy's mother). Emperor Sagara performed Asvamedha (Horse) Sacrifice and Indra hid the horse which was discovered by the unruly 60,000 sons of Sagara, nearby the place where Sage Kapila was practising Sankhaya Yoga and when disturbed badly, the Sage burnt all of them into ashes by his power. Sagara's son by another wife, Asamanjasa or Ansuman pursued the search of the Sacrificial Horse and found the Horse where Kapila was in meditation. Ansuman begged of the Sage about the whereabouts of his cousins and was informed that the hooligans were burnt to death and could be brought back to life only when washed by the River of Ganges which could only be brought down to Earth from the Skies. The Sacrifice of Horse having been performed by Sagara, Ansuman began his devotion to Lord Siva to bring Ganges down to Earth. But neither he nor his father Dilipa could succeed in the mission. It was for Bhagiradha to pursue the operation further. If Harishandra gave an eternal memory in truthfulness and integrity, a person of the same dynasty proved as a role model in tenacity. His life's mission was to bring Ganges down to Earth from Heavens. Bhagiradha's prayers were indeed granted by Mother Ganges to the devotee but warned him that the force of the flow from the Heavens to Earth could be withstood by no less than Lord Siva Himself! Bhagiradha never stopped his grand endeavour and worshipped Lord Siva with austerity and purity who agreed, not only because of the sincerity with which the devotee desired to fulfill the long-standing family wish but also owing to the reason of Universal advantage. The Lord assumed a massive body and controlled the force of the River flowing from Lord Vishnu's feet and bore the brunt of the impact on His head in His 'Jatajut' or twisted hairs and released but a portion of the Holy River. Bhagiradha directed the fiery flow by riding a fast Chariot and brought it to the place where the ashes of his forefathers were purified and their souls liberated to Heavens. Till date, humanity continues to be grateful to him for the ever lasting memory of his gigantic efforts in our reaping the fruits of his labour in the huge land-mass covering entire 'Aryavarta' (Northern India)!!]

[Vishleshana on Ayodhya: Ayodhya: Akaaro Brahmatah proktam Yakaaro Vishnuruchyate, Dhakaaro Rudra rupascha Ahodhyaanaama raajate/ Sarvopa Paatakaairyuktair rahmahatyaadi paataakai, Na yodhyaa shaktate yasmaattaam ayodhyaam tato viduh/ (Skanda Purana, Vaishnava Khanda Ayodhyaa) Ayodhyaa is defined as ' A- kaara is Brahma, Ya-kaara is Vishnu and Dha-kaara is Rudra Swarupa; thus Ayodhya is a composite form of Tri Murthis. Maha Pataakas too are demolished by naming the Name of Ayodhya!) Valmiki Ramayana in Bala kaanda exclaims: Manunaa Maanavendrena saa Puri nirmitaa swayam/ (Manu confirms that he himself constructed Ayodhya himself!) In his opening introduction of Ayodhya Kaanda of Skanda Purana, Maha Muni Suta greets Bhagavan Shri Rama saying: Namaami Parama- atmanam Ramam rajiva lochanam, Atasikusuma shyamam Ravanaantaka mavyayam / (My greetings to Lord Shri Rama the Paramatma who is lotus eyed and of blue colour the terminator of the cruel and vile Ravana-sura). Ayodhya puri is so sacrosanct that sinful beings could ever enter it, let alone reside there! From his right foot thumb emerged Ganga and Sarayu river got manifested from left foot thumb. That is why both the Rivers are Sacred and worthy of prostrations and bathing in these rivers is as effective as destroying Brahma hatya sin. Even before the Avatara of Shri Rama, Ayodhya was the Capital of Surya Vamsha Kings of Ikshvaku; the latter was the son of Vaivashwata Manu and to this dynasty belonged to the illustrious Bhagiratha, Ambarisha, Nahusha, Yayati, Nabhaga, Ajan and Dasharatha. Skanda Purana in Vaishnava Khanda, Ayodhya Mahatmya gives the account of Veda Vijnana Vishnu Sharma whose severe Tapasya attracted Maha Vishnu darshana and the Pandita's request to him him the boon of constant Vishnu darshana; in turn Maha Vishnu instructed Sudarshana Chakra to dig up Bhumi and bring up Ganga from Patala Loka and the resultant Sacred Water flow was materialised as Chakra Tirtha. Earlier, Brahma himself resided at Ayodhya even before the incarnation of Shri Rama and hence the emergence of Brahma Kund. Brahma conveyed to Devas about the significance of this Tirtha -as given in Skanda Purana- would be such as that whoever performed formal snaana at the Kund and gave away daana would have been deemed as securing Ahwamedha yagna phala and blessed to fly as clad in Divya Vastras to Brahma Loka for residing there till the ensuing Pralaya. From Brahma kunda to the not too far Sarayu River is Runa Vimochana Tirtha where Muni Lomasha popularised specially among his followers who were delighted as the debts of one's very existence by way of births and deaths to parents and sons and the teacher, quite apart from the material debts of the current and past 'janmas' are cleared by snanas at the Tirtha. To the east of the Runa Vimochana Tirtha is the Paapa mochana Tirtha. Skanda Purana narrates the story of Panchala desha Brahmana was Maha Paapi who became conscious of his heaping stocks of sins and casually heard the conversation of a Group of Sadhus visiting Ayodhya. He visited Paapa Vimochana Tirtha along with them and happened to bathe on a Maagha Krishna Chaturdashi and also performed daana karyas and he realised an unusual transformation in his psyche and was surprised to vision a Viman beckoning him and flew to Vishnu dhaam. Ahead of the glorious Paapa machana Tirtha is the Sahasra dhaara Tirtha which is known for demolishing all obstacles in life and overcoming enemies by mere snaana with faith and mental discipline. This indeed was the very Tirtha where after the close of the entire Ramayana, Lord Shri Rama instructed Lakshmana to bathe and by his own Mantra Shakti assume the Form of Adi Sesha! Actually, the background was that when Shri Ram who had once had an important visitor viz. Kaal Devata about which even Lakshman was unaware and instructed Lakshman not to enter and allow any visitor to enter either. Lakshman was faithfully guarding the entry of Rama Nivas by taking sincere rounds up and down the 'dwaar'. Meanwhile Maha Tapaswi Durvasa Maharshi who is noted for his short temper arrived and affectionately asked Lakshmana to let Ram inform of his arrival for Rama darshan. Lakshman being aware of Duravas's shaapa shakti alerted Rama of the Muni's arrival. With a view to protect his own Satya Vak Paripalana of Lakshman's disobedience despite his instruction, Rama had to resort to the extreme step of asking Lakshmana to perform Prana tyaga of Lakshmana. As Lakshmana took the form of Adisesha and visited Indra Loka even as the Sahasra Manis and their luster vanished, the lest the Tirtha place on Sarayu diminish significance, Indra and Devas arrived on the Spot ensured and in fact doubled its glory and sanctity and named it Sahasra Dhaara Tirtha and Lord Shri Rama blessed the title too for the benefit of posterity and Loka Kalyan. Swarga dwara dhaara: Skanda Purana further describes as follows: Every Tirtha darshana has one's own benefits yet Swaga dwara Tirtha has its own: Pratah kaala snana, japa-tapa-havana-upavasa-darshana-dhyaana-adhyana- daanas have their distinct results and those beings like the Chatur varna humans, mriga-pakshi-jala chara-krimi keetakaadi pranis happen to die at this Tirtha are qualified to direct access to Swarga and Vaikuntha dhaam. Bhagavan Vishnu in his Avatara Swarupas, especially of Shri Rama with his wife and brothers are stated at this Tirtha to select beings for their respective Punya Phalas and decide their 'nirnyas' based on their own past karmas overshadowing their contributions at the Swarga dwaar snaanas and punya karma mix. And so does the presence of Kailasha Vaasi along with Devi Parvati and their followers woul oversee the process of selection of Beings for the Higher Loka Prapti, asserts the Skanda Purana. Near Swarga dwaara is the Nageshwara nath Mandir; it is stated that originally this Murti was originally made of Kusha grass but later King Vikramaditya resurrected and re-established the Idol with Veda mantras in a move to revive several 'Praachina' or age old Mandirs in Ayodhya. Yatis perform Pinda daana at Swarga dwaar Ghat with great devotion and bhakti. Chandra Sahasra Tirtha where Chandra sahasra vrata Udyapana is performed as also Argha danas are done on every Purnima Tithis to Chandra-Rohini Devis. Swarna Tirtha where Maharshi Vishwamitra's sishya Koutsa Muni called on Raghu Rama once and said that he wished for so much of wealth which he desired to give to his Guru which Rama too might not possess. Shri Rama thought for a while and requested the Muni to please stay back in his court of Ayodhya overnight. Then Shri Rama invited Kubera Deva to bring considerable gold and on receiving it gave it away to Koutsa Muni. Next morning, Rama gave away all the gold given by Kubera and kept up his word by redonating the same to the Muni and truly satisfied him. This Swarna Tirtha had thus attained a gold-bestowing reputation and fulfill the material desires of who ever performed worship by way of snaana- daana-Japas with utmost faith. One of Ayodhya's major Mandirs is Kanak Bhavan which is quite big and mention worthy which was supposed to be of Shri Ram's 'antahpura' or the interior palace hall where Devi Sita resided too. (There are big sized Sita Rama Idols seated on a throne together in the Mandir as also the idols of the very past which were however smaller. From Kanaka Bhavan away is the most famed Shri Rama Janma Sthaana which was stated to have been rebuilt as Masjid Babri ; this Masjid which became the hot controversy was partially destroyed to make way for the original now albeit as a small make believe Mandir. Near to Rama Janma Sthaana are Sita Rasoyi or kitchen, Kopa bhavan or the Place where the love-fight Rama- Sita couple stayed; Ratna Simhasan or the Royal Throne made of jewels, Ananda Bhavan or the Palace of Joy, Ranga Mahal or the Hall of Music and Dance etc. The other Places worthy of visiting in Ayodhya's Sarayu River banks include Lakshman Ghat with a five feet Lakhmana Swami in the Mandir exclusively dedicated to him; Ahalya Ghat where Lord Rama is stated to have performed Yagna; Hanuman gadhi on an elevated sixty steps an Lord Hanuman in seated form; Darshaneshwar, Mani Parvat with Ashoka Stupa of broken 200 ft; Dantana Kund where Rama was stated to have had his mouth wash, where also Gautama Buddha, while in Ayodhya too rested. Dasharatha kund was the Place some few km. away on Sarayu River banks where King Dasharatha's 'Antya Dahana' was stated to have been performed. A mini- Parikrama of some 4 km around Ayodhya touches Ramaghat, Raghunadha Das gaddi, Sita kund, Agni Kund, Vidya kund, Mani Parvat, Kubera parvat, Sugriva parvat, Lakshman ghat, Swarga dwaar and back to Ram ghat. While no doubt Shri Rama Navami Celebrations on Chaitra Shukla Navami are famed for several days every year, Shravana Shukla Paksha festivities and Sarayu River snanaas are considered as sacred, especially on Kartika Purnima)]

Vishleshana on Kingship Duties : A King is expected to be an earthly version of God, responsible for creating happiness and welfare, preserving security and prosperity and punishing the evil and disobedient. He is expected to set examples, without favour or fear. He should be above suspicion or indiscipline, promote competition and justice, encourage diligence and duty. His Coronation is a multi-splendered spectacle with elaborate Rituals and Sacrifices, fun and fanfare, feasts and festivities and gifts and gratitudes to poor and unprivileged. On taking over the Kingship, he makes a series of appointments and postings of Priminister and Ministers, Top Officials and Advisers and a whole lot of Workforce at various levels. A Military General has to be a Kshatriya or Brahmin, a Treasurer has to have keen knowledge of Jewels, a Charioteer should be an expert of horses & elephants as also an outstanding ability of conducting chariots with alacrity on the battle fields, Doctors of experience and proven merit, and likewise persons of outstanding ability in each and every discipline and tested loyalty to the King and the Court. Each official of any level has to be well behaved, honest, diligent and above all types of temptations. There has to be a completely decentralised system of Governance, within a well- set and publicly announced framework of Rules and there could never be an exception unless with the approval of the King who makes the Law or its Interpretation. There has to be a strong and widespread network of espionage and surveillance to the grass root levels to protect the interests of the Kingdom, the King, Officials and law-abiding citizens. Criminals are severely punished and Loyalists are assured of peaceful existence. The course of Law is not only just and swift but also should look to be convincing, transparent and unambiguous. The fiscal and monetary policy of the Government should also be uniform, impartial and well defined. Taxes are fixed as per the Sacred Texts and the process of tax collection has to be smooth, timely and automatic. Defaulters or protesters have to get opportunities to approach the Concerned Officials. Property Rights are also to be well defined, especially in respect of the poor, women, children, orphans and disabled and regular courts of civil and criminal cases are to be dealt with within approved time frames. There are various techniques used to let the offenders make confessions, the most significant ones being, 'Sama' (persuasion), 'Dana' (Gifting), 'Bheda' (divide interests), 'Danda' (punish), 'Maya' (Deceive or create make-believe situation), 'upeksha' (ignore) and 'mayajal' (jugglery). Punishments accorded to offenders not only punitive but more than that they serve as examples to ensure that others perpetrate similar offences. For example, a thief who steals Gold or Jewellery has his hands cut. A Brahman who provides wrong or misleading witness would be banished from the Kingdom. In case anybody kills cows, horses, elephants or camels would be summarily executed. Cases of abduction of a woman, or of poisoning, arson too attract execution. Disloyalty by a woman to husband or vice versa have their facial parts cut, torn by dogs and paraded in public. (Manu Smriti)

King Dasharatha, the glorious ‘Atiratha’ who could face a battle of ten thousand ‘Maha Rathaas’ or great charioteers was an outstanding administrator with incredible far sight. He was a reputed yajna karta, dharma paraayana, jitendriya, and in the contemporary world a ‘Rajarshi’ akin to popular Maharshis. He was mighty, enemyless, and a known friend among all the contemporary Kings, comparable to Mahendra himself! He was the epitome of ‘chaturvidha aakankshas’ or the fourfolded human aspirations of dharma- artha- kama- mokshas or virtue-prosperity-desire fulfillment- and finally bliss of Unity with Paramatma. He was administrator par excellence. Accordingly, his subjects too had imbibed the features of the King as the followers of virtue and justice, truthfulness, tolerance, spirit of compassion and self contentment. In this exemplary Ayodhya, there was no citizen who did not have valuable possessions, no achievement of aspirations of ‘purusharthaas’, and no opulence of domestic animals and grain-money surpluses. None of the citizens of Ayodhya had unfulfilled desires, meanmindedness, cruel, ignorant, and unaware of Almighty. The men and women, child and elderly and even domestic animals are ever contented. All the citizens were not only with proper dress but also adorned with ear rings, headgears, garlanded with fresh flowers and body perfumes besides being well protected against insects and reptiles. There was no example of persons consuming stale and unsavoury food, none who were not ready to help others, and none again without public presentability. In the City of Ayodhya, varnaashrama dharmas were adhered too strictly as Brahmana-Khatriya- Vaishyas were respecting their respective duties and the lower rung was sincerely service minded. Ayodhya puri Brahmanas were dedicated to yajna-svaadyaayis and indriya nigrahas and none ever were nastikas, asatyavaadis, agnanaanis, and asamarthas of sadhana. All of the ‘dvijas’ of the twice born varnas of brahmana-kshatriya-vaishyas were conversant with the awareness and even of expertise of Veda Vedangas, vrata deekshas, daana and atithi seva paraayanans, and of self contentment. Family life and affinity of stree-purusha-santaanas- parivaaras was unquestioned in the Kingdom. In that ideal Society, there was total affinity of Brahmana- Kshatriyas, Vaishyas were always toeing the thoughts and actions mutually, while vaishyas were ready to follow the steps of kshatriyas. In fact, King Dasharatha was a role model of Manu Himself. Just as lions in their own caves, the citizens of Ayodhya are fiery, cunningless and straight forward, and replete with self confidence and initiative and are fully armed with astra-shastraas armoury and mastery of archery. On the battle fronts, the soldiers of Dasharatha were equipped with battle horses from Kamboja and Vaahneeka Deshas and well trained in Vanaayu Desha just as ‘ucchaisharvyas’ the celestial horses of Indra Loka. The Dashatratha sena was also equipped with elephants originated from the forests of Vindhya- Himalaya mountains with grit and power as comparable to the clan of ‘Iravata’ of Swarga, and well trained like Anjana and Vaamana Diggajaas. The elephants of Ayodhya were of the nativity of Bhadra from Himalayas, Mandra from Sahyadri and Mriga from Vindhya, and of Bhadra-Mandra and Mriga cross-breeds. Maha Raja Dasharatha’s administration of Ayodhya was indeed like that of Chandra Deva administered the akshatra Mandali on the high skies and of invincibility of the entire forces of enemies far and near!

At the same time they were ever of the supreme interest of the King, the Kingdom and the subjects of the Kingdom. Their outlook was traditional as per 'dharma and nyaaya' and at the same time keeping the larger interests of the 'Prajā' and in close alignment of the directives of the Kingship. These eight Ministers were named Dhrishthi, Jayanta, Vijaya, Suraashtra, Rashtravardhana, Akopa, Dharmapaala and the expert of Artha Shastra or of excellent financial management. Among the Rishis of the Royal Court are the unparalleled Vashistha and Vaama Deva as the 'Purohitas' or the regular Chief Priests:

[Saptaishis are stated as Agastya-Atri-Bharadvaja-Gautama- Vashishtha and Vishvamitra vide Jaimini Brahmana. Vamadeva mentioned by Rigveda's IV Mandala, besides Brihadaranyaka and Aitereya Upanishads]

Besides, Maharshis Suyajna, Jaabaali, Kashyapa, Goutama, and Markandeya the Deerghaayu, and Katyaayana were the visiting Ministers cum Dharma Darshakas or Advisers of Virtue and Nyaaya. Additionally, the various Ritviks who had all organised yajna kaaryas for the Kingdom were also on the board of ministerial advisers as they were all of the traits like vinaya sheela-karya kushala-jetendriya-Shri Sampanna- mahatma- shastravidya nipuna-parakrami-raja karya saavadhaana- rajaagjnaanukula- kshamasheela- sadaananda keertimaantu; they were never the victims of kama krodhaadi gunas. From the// 'Gudhacharis' or Intelligence persons especially from the neighbouring and even from distant kingdoms, the King of Ayodhya was well informed about the activities of the other Kings and their present and planned objectives. On the domestic front too the King was ever alerted and at the right time, the wrong doers were trapped and suitably punished; in that context, even own progeny or close relatives were never spared. In respect of the Treasury Funds the evaders and avoiders of taxes were hunted and the upkeep and activities of soldiers in respect of 'chaturanaga balas' of foot-horse-elephant-chariot soldiers, the day to day maintenance well monitored. But the offenders either in the army or those foreign agents caught were treated as per established norms of justice. At the same time, King Dasharatha was imbued with the spirit of proactive encouragement to the soldiers and from all the classes of the Kingdom. Those citizens outside his kingdom were duly protected too. The King was in the habit of addressing chaturvarnas, and took special care. The entirety of the citizenry of Ayodhya and the Koshala Rajya had the mind-body-and psyche of virtuosity uniformly and there was total negation of awareness, villiany, illegal sex and corruption. There was total orderliness and peacefulness prevailing either on Ayodhya or the Koshala Rajya as a whole. The Ministers are not only dressed to perfection but also in their behaviour, performance, and deeds. This they become worthy of trust and esteem of the King. The King too having imbibed the manners of the incredible Ministers was enabled to upkeep his huge kingdom with virtue and justice as famed in Trilokas.

King Dasharatha as saturated with all the principles of Dharma and earnestly felt as to why he ought not perform the Ashvamedha 'Yajna'; as soon as this thought got flashed, he instructed Sumantu the charioteer to call for all purohitas, Gurus and all the advisers concerned. Then arrived Suyagjna, Vaamadeva, Jaabaali, Kaashyapa, Kula Purohita Vasishtha, and all the various 'dhaarmic' advisers; the King having welcomed them all with ‘satkaaraas’ addressed them about his decision to execute the Yajna and the experts had all one voice responded most positively. They suggested that the Sacrificial Horse be released from the banks of River Sarayu, yajna saamagri be procured and world wide announcements be organised forthwith. Thus the yajna program’s minute detailing was worked out thoroughly and execution was fulfilled with fool- proof arrangements. In this connection, the Ministers apportioned duties to respective agencies and thus the entire machinery of the kingdom was alerted to the orientation of the singular task of the Kingdom. The three famed queens of the Kingdom welcomed the decision of the King as though their countenances got brightened as never before just as of fresh and fragrant arrival of the Season of Vasanta and took over responsibilities under their respective commands.

In the ninth sarga, Sumantra the able and well wishing Royal Charioteer of King Dasharatha who had been most actively involved with the hot preparations of the Ashvamedha Yajna, approached King Dasharatha when the latter was alone and stated in all humility and sincerity that keeping in view the yajna in the offing, why not request the unique Rishya Shringa Maharshi to perform the horse sacrifice! In the days of yore, the illustrious Sanat Kumara was heard to have headed similar Yajna. Sumantra further stated that one had known two distinct Brahmacharis: one danda dharana- mekhala and brahmacharya and another type is brahmacharya of a married person who avoided stree samaagama in the wife’s menses period which is known as ‘Gouna brahmacharya’. Rishya Shringa Muni was qualified on this preliminary count. More so, a far more significant context be cited as follows: In the distant past there was a King named Romapaada whose Kingdom of Anga desha, there had been a number of years and decades without rains and his subjects were alarmed. In desperation, the King decided to convene a conference of Panditas and appealed to them to reveal a way out to bring in rains; they had unanimously suggested to invite Rishyashringa as a remedy to the ‘anaavrishti’. Accordingly, they suggested to marry off the princess to Rishyashringa named Devi Shanta. On hearing the narrative suggestion of Sumantra, King Dasharatha convened a meeting and the invited Muniganaas and Maha Panditas, and as per their unanimous approval, Sumantra asked to reach and request Muni Rishyashringa to head the priests in the context. But with a view to ensure that the latter might or might not agree to the request, the Muni Kumara lured by a group of professional dancing girls to invite the Muni Kumara and keeping in view the genuineness of the yajna, there would not be any impropriety involved!. Evam aṅgādhipenaiva gaṇikābhir ṛṣeḥ sutaḥ, ānīto ‘varṣayad devaḥ śāntā cāsmāi pradīyate/ ṛṣyaśṛṅgas tu jāmātā putrāṁs tava vidhāsyati, Sanat kumārakathitam etāvad vyāhṛtaṁ mayā/ That was how, Rishyashringa was approved by the conference of Munis to be invited to head the Ashvamedha yajna’. As the Muni Kumara was invited to the Yajna, King Dasharatha approved the proposal and despatched Sumantra to bring Rishyashringa but asked him as to how and by which method that the Muni was made to consent the invitation of King Romapada.. Vishlesana about Rishyashringa: Vibhandaka the son of Kashyapa Maharshi sighted Apsarasa Urvashi while bathing in a River and his semen dropped out and a female deer got conceived and gave birth to Rishyashringa with deer horns. His father desired to bring up the child in isolation in a hermitage even without the awareness of females and thus Rishyashringa learnt veda vedangas thoroughly under Kashyapa Muni. Then there was a persistence of famine in the kingdom of Anga and was advised that a youth named Rishyashringa be brought to the kingdom so that the kingdom would be blessed with ample rains. The King and his men took away Rishyashringa even without the awareness of Vibhandaka by luring him away from the ashram with the help of his courtesans and married off his daughter; as soon as Rishyashringa arrived in Anga desha, Indra blessed the kingdom with ample rains.

As per the behest of King Dasharatha, Sumantra addressed King Dasharatha and the Ministers stating that Sage Romapaada followed the manner in which Rishyashringa was made to consent to visit Anga Desha. The Sage suggested that a few attractive dancing girls be selected for the purpose. This was arranged to perfection. Rishyashringa never hither got exposed to femininity of attractiveness and charm as he was always known for tapasya, swaadhyaa, and celibacy. Once he had suddenly met during his visits to forests, he saw a group of dancing girls. Even as he was surprised to see them, one of the girls folk was singing in a melodious tune. Rishyashringa approached her and asked her who was she, from where had she come, and why had she visited this lonely forest all by herself. Adrishtarupaastaastena kaamya rupaa vane striyah, haardaattasya matirjaataa aakhyaantu pitaram swayam/ As Rishyashringa never saw in the same forest which was of visited by him many a time, and was never knew of femininity of beauty and fascination while singing a tuneful song; he went near to her with a view to making friendship and initiated his conversation by introducing himself as the son of Vibhandaka Muni and was named as Rishyashringa popular all over as well recognised for his tapasya. He further stated that his ashram was quite nearby. He exclaimed that she was quite beautiful and charming and invited her to his ashram where she would be a honoured guest with formal respects. The highly polite and respectful manner with which Rishyashringa invited her, the damsel with her companions agreed to do so. As the girl entered with her friends, Rishyashringa offered water for foot wash, fragrant flowers and a large variety of fruits as a hearty meal and expressed many thanks for the excellent hospitality offered by the Muni Kumara and embraced him for his way of conduct and generosity but having realised the background of the Muni Kumara as his father was the famed Vibhanda Muni bid farewell quickly as she departed along with her companions. The Muni Kamara at the departure of the womenfolk gradually started feeling the pangs of separation. He went back to the same place of the forest and the co friends of the charming Princess warmly offered return hospitality to him and as per his enquiry took Rishyashringa to Anga Desha. As the clouds got dark and rain drops got initiated from the skies, the King of Anga Desha realised that Muni Kumara Rishyashringa was on way to the kingdom. On his arrival, the King prostrated at the feet of Rishyashringa and requested him and his father Vibhanda Muni to kindly marry his daughter and become his son-in-law. As the father too consented, the wedlock was celebrated and Anga Desha never faced the struggle of ‘kshaama’ or rainlessness for a long spell of years thereafter.

Sumantra further addressed King Dasharatha as to what Maharshi Sanatkumara appeared to have asserted: ‘ In the future there would be a renowned King named Dasharatha of the Ikshvaaku vamsha as a ‘dharmika satya pratigjna’ or a high virtue and ever truthful one. He would be a great friend of Anga Desha King and his daughter was named princess Shanta and his son the Prince named Romapaada. The famed Dasharatha would approach the Anga desha’s King and conveyed that he was not blessed with male progeny yet and would hence like to perform ‘ashvamedhaa yagjna’. ‘Tam ca rājā daśaratho yaṣṭukāmaḥ kṛtāñjaliḥ, ṛṣyaśṛṅgam dvijaśreṣṭham varayiṣyati dharmavit/ yajñārtham prasavārtham ca svargārtham ca nareśvarah, labhate ca sa tam kāmam dvijamukhyād viśam patiḥ/’ The King of great celebrity Dasharatha then would then request with folded hands that the popular Rishi Rishyashringa be asked to take up the Ashvamedha Yagjna and fulfill my desire’. Dasharatha Maha Raja! that was how Sanatkumara Maharshi proclaimed, said Sumanta. King Dasharatha was immensely pleased with what Sumantu quoted and that was conveyed to Vasahishtha Maharshi also for the latter’s approval too. Then the King along with his Ministers and Queens left for Anga desha. On the way they had to cross several rivers and forests and finally reached the Court of Anga desha King where Maharshi Rishyashringa too was present. Both the Kings exchanged pleasantries mutually even as Sage Romadpada the father of Shanta Dedvi and King Dashratha exchanged the details of the proposed Yajna for days together and finally Romapada approached Rishyashringa and requested the latter to take over the ‘kartavya’ of heading the auspicious ‘Yajna kaarya’. The instruction by Romapada to Rishyashringa was that the latter’s wife too be accompanied! As King Dasharatha and company returned back to Ayodhya, accompanied by Rishyashringa, there were loud cheers, street dances and reverberations of musical instruments welcoming them all with the Rishyashringa Rishi, the chief guest of honour along with his wife Shanta and entourage.

Subsequent to the arrival of Rishi Rishyashringa, an auspicious day and time were selected and the former extended his approval to initiate the collection of the material and services concerned by the King and his associates. Then came about the announcement to let the sacrificial horse be readied to be freed to move forward as per its own movement in any direction as it pleased for ‘bhu bhramana’ and that would be protected by very energetic and brave army round the clock, besides constructing a mammoth ‘Yajna shaala’ at the northern direction of the banks of River Sarayu. The King instructed Sumantu to bring vedavidya experts as Ritviks. Suyajna, Vaamadeva, Jaabaali, Kashyapa, purohita Vasishta and various other experts and having brought them all, the King honoured them all with vastu-kanaka-vaahanaadi daanaas and all conveniences of food-housing-and facilities for them and families. He addressed them all and requested them to make the yajna a huge success as he had been feeling the absence of excellent sons for many years now and he was not happy thus far with fame and name for himself alone. He further stressed that the presence of the popular Rishyashringa Maharshi as the Head of the Horse Sacrifice. The King then promised to instantly attend to any problem or hardship or inconveniences faced by them or families either big or minute. chidraṁ hi mṛgayante 'tra vidvāṁso brahmarākṣasāḥ vidhihīnasya yajñasya sadyaḥ kartā vinaśyati/ He also cautioned that through out this yajna and preparations thereof, there might be evil energies of natural and supenatural nature and that ample precautions were well in place. Having made the address to the huge conference, the delegates especially of Sages and Veda Vidvans, the King provided a glimpse of the preparations of the Maha Yajna.

 As the rainy season concluded, King Dasharatha approached Maharshi Vasishtha and requested him to initiate him to assume 'yajna diksha' as also enlighten him as to how to ensure that no hurdles might not be faced by issues created by evil energies including the interference by 'brahma rakshasis' and so on. Since the King expressed his anxiety and concern, Maharshi Vasishtha assured that he would take up all the arrangements of the yajna; he called for engineering experts of architecture, construction and maintenance; engaged the agencies for physically procuring the material and periodical replenishments; groups of expert vipra panditas work out the designs and the methodology of vedic pramaanas and of , jyotishadi vedangas; thousands of workforce; nata- naatya -nartaka groups, and so on. Groups of kitchen appliance suppliers, and huge halls for cooking and catering were constructed quite apart from culinary-cooking experts were appointed too. Construction of hundreds of colonies of charurvarnas as per gradations and expected facilities to live in with comfort. Conferene Halls of varying sizes as per seating capacities were got readied. The concerned associations to provide all the relevant facilities assured Vasishtha Maharshi accordingly. Then the Maharshi instructed Sumantra to organise forwarding invitations for the Maha Yajna to the Kings and their Subjects all across Bharat. Also, he asked Sumantra to presonally invite the Kings of Mithila as he would certainly reciprocate the invitation with warmth and affection. Similarly the Kings of Kashi of excellent tradition, Kaikeya desha's aged King Dharmatma, Anga desha King the outstanding arrowsman and King Dasharadha's dear friend, Koshala King Bhanuman, Magadha King the sarva shastra visharada, the Kings of the Eastern Region especially Sindhu-Souveera and of Saurashtra, and of the Dakshina Bharata be extended invitations personally and collect their acceptance acknowledgements. Accordingly, Sumantra proceeded with the invitations from King Dasharatha. Back home, all the tasks and duties og big or minute nature were taken up as per Maharshi's instructions in earnestness. Vashishtha then addressed the panditas and brahmanas stating : 'That when ever charities were to be distributed with sincerity and care as only such kind of 'daanaas' are fructified which the person giving away would not be adversely affected even instantly and certainly subsequently otherwise! Having thus reported to King Dasharatha, Maharshi Vasishtha narrated the details of instructions so that the latter needed not to get concerned about the entirety of the duties. Meanwhile, the 'yajna mandapa' got readied and accordingly on a most auspicious 'muhurta', Vashishtha accompanied by Rishi Rishyashringa and his entourage were ushered in and initiated the preliminaries of the Yajna kaarya.

The famed 'Yagjnaashva' the Sacrificial Horse after successful run all over the Earth had since returned back as a proof of Dasharatha's invincibility and popularity, even as the Sacrifice was initiated. At the northern side of River Sarayu. On the Yagjna Vedita was replete with groups of vedic experts totally engrossed with countless significant tasks of the 'ishti' as per the stepwise 'karyakrama'. The 'Angabhuta Devatas' were respectively invoked as per the pratih savana- madhyahna savana - and the triteeya savana or the morning- mid day- and after noon rituals as per Shastras. Indra devata was formally invoked to accept the 'havishaanna'. 'Somalata rasa' was extracted by keeping a sacred stone on earth with the accompanying mantras as specified. Thereafter the midday ritual was initiated. Then the king Dasharatha took up the third savana for the day as per the clear and loudly pronounced 'manrotcchhaa - rana' of the 'ritviks'. Rishyashringa and other Maharshis during the 'abhyaasa kaala' had loudly and clearly recited the 'devata ahvaana mantras' or the invoking stanzas of Devas in 'svara and varna' or the voice and tone as per the prescription. Gatirbhirmadhurair snighairmantrairiyathaarhataḥ, hotaaro dadur - aahvaa havirbhaagaan divoukasaam/ The sweet and readily appealing 'ahvaana mantras' or welcome stanzas were pronounced in melodious tunes while making the offerings of the havish. There was no tune or pronunciation blemish of the mantras rendered most perfectly as per the ideal most 'uchharana'. The 'aahutis' to Agni were precise, perfect and tuneful. In the entire duration of the yagjna, none of the ritvik brahmanas ever looked hungry or thirsty nor in alert or fatigued but ever enthusiastic unconcerned except the task on hand.

Vishleshana on Ritviks: Homa Kunda [Taittiriya Aaranyaka: Construction of Homa Kunda: As the northern side altar, a knee deep pit be dug up filled with water up to the ankle as covered with lotus leaves, stalks and lotus flowers. There on flat platform be devised and Agni is placed. Then the Brahmapada notionalists raise questions: Why this Agni is stated to be 'pranite' or revered and 'chiyate' or gathered together! The replies are given: Agni is revered as placed waters; Agni is gathered as it is called 'Ahitaagni' the one fostering auspicious -ness as also to safe guard the trilokas with celestial mobility. There is another type of 'abhitaani' or stationary Fire especially due to the concern of water sprinkles and also to protect 'abhishikta' deities. This procedure termed 'Arunaketuka' is stated common to yajna varieties such as 'Agnihotra- Darsha purnaamaasa-Pashubandhana and Chaturmasya; these applications are practised with yajnas or more appropriately the Yajna kratu. Shandika Maharshi when raises a question as to which kind of Agni's worship is commended; the reply obviously states that such yajna karya as yields advantages all through the year as termed as 'Saatvitram Agni' apparently targetting Surya Deva and even beyond. Indeed the universe is full of water and nothing else and Prajapati emerged on a lotus leaf with a unique wish. As a thought appeared on his mental retina, that thought got converted as a speech; tad vaachaa vadati, tatkarmanakaroti or once the speech emerges, then that leads to action; then that action symbolises a Veda Mantra! Initially thus a desire led to mind. The primary thought blossomed as the flower of reality. Rig Veda vide 10.129.4 is aptly quoted: Kaamastadagre samavartataadhi manaso retah prathamam yadaaseet / sato bandhusati niravindann / hrudi prateeshyaa kavayo maneesheti/ or right at the very beginning of Virat Swarupa had the wish to manifest 'Srishti' and that thought like a 'beeja srijana saamardhya' or the ability to generate the seed was caused. Once the unique thought of a highly personified knowledge occurs then that intense thought takes the form of Reality! It is said that Sages have the impulse of mind which leads to fruition. This very Vedic Triplet of 'hridaa-manasaa-maneesha' is confirmed vide Rig Veda I.61.2 : Asmaaidu praya iva prayaami bharaamyangyusham baadh suvritti, Indraaya hridaa manasaa maneesahaa pratnaaya dhiyo marjayanta/ or we offer a limited 'havishya samaana stotra' as an ideal chant for 'sharu vinaashana'; Rishi ganas offer sacred stotras by way of hridaya-manas-buddhi! Consequent on the desire to undertake creation, Prajapati having performed tapas, shook off his body and a small mass of flesh got generated and three Maharshis appeared viz. Aruna-Ketava-Vaaraashana and stood up. From His long nails appeared Vaikhaanasa; from His long hairs or 'Vaalaas' emerged Vaalakhilyaas from whose essence water got generated. There after from the waters, kurma or tortoise crawled therein. Prajapati addressed the kurma: have you emerged from my 'twang' or skin and 'maamsa' or flesh. Kurma replied in the negative and said that even in the ancient times, that the concept of 'Purushatvam' or virility of the universe accomplished its existence; the tortoise then assumed thousand heads and thousand eyes; the thousand eyes flashed from the waters. Then the Creator Prajapati exclaimed : Tamabraveet / tvam vai poorvagn samabhoohu / tvamidam poorvah kurushveti / or 'indeed, you were born well before I came into existence; since you were the first, you created the universe well before me! Having confessed thus the Virat Purusha picked water from the primordial ocean from his hands and deposited a fistful water towards the easterly direction uttering the mantra 'evaa hyeva'! Tat Aditya udtishthat, saa praachee dik/ Aditya then stood upwards towards the easterly direction; Arunaketu Deva then deposited water in the southern direction pronouncing the mantra : 'evaa hy vagna' when Arunaketu Agni manifested. Then Arunaketu offered firstful of water to the western direction with the mantra 'eaahi vaayu' and Vayu Deva manifested upwards from the ocean. Then Arunaketu Deva offered water in the northern direction with the mantra 'evaahi Indra' and Indra Deva manifested. As Arunaketu offered to the 'Antariksha' with the mantra 'evaahi Pushan' and the Antariksha Devata Pushan manifested. Arunaketu further deposited water into the space stating 'eahi deva' then 'Deva manushyaa Pitarah Gandharva apsarasas' got manifested. Further on, waterdrops were sprinkled by the Virat Prusha and the waters fell down: 'taabhyo~suraa rakshaagmsi pishaachaashchodatishann | tasmaatte paraabhavann | viprudbhyo hi te samabhavann' or there got manifested asuras, raakshasaas, pishachis and were defeated and destroyed subsequently. Then the waters enveloped the mighty womb and Swayambhu Manu . Rig Veda vide 10.121.7 states: Apo ha yadbrihareer vishvamaayangarbha dadhaanaa janayantiragnim, tato Devataanaam samavarta - taasurekah kasmai Devaaya havishaa vidhema/ or even before srishti, a massive form of water or the 'Mula Kriyaasheela Tatwa' got overshadowed; this got conceived as a 'garbha' and from there emerged Agni-Akaasha and there followed the primeform of Praana the Vital Energy which was worshipped with unanimity and utter sincerity! From the waters in mass or in smaller units got created and so did the Celestial Swarupa of Pajapati on his own as 'atmaana aatmaanam' as Self Created. Thus Prajapati the Self Generated, created the worlds, all the Beings, Directions, Intermediate Lokas, and so on. He enters within every Being, every feature and facet, within-without, inside and outside out, comprehensively and intrinsically. Indeed He is omni-present, omni potent and omni-scient! 125.1-9: Preparation of Homa Kunda: The preparation of the homakunda or the Fire Altar arranged in the northern direction as dug up knee deep and filled with water. On the top of the altar are lotus leaves spread over and the 'Hiranya Purusha' installed; Tapo vai pushkaraparnam satyagmrakmaha amrutam purushaha, etaavadvaa vaasti yaavadetat yaavadevasti tadavarundhe / The lotus leaf is the tapo vedi; Satya or the personification of Truth as the 'rukma' or the golden shine- and Amritam or Immortality; indeed the divine combination is of 'satyam-rukma-amritam'. He next step is to instal Kurma the Sacred Tortoise which indeed is the 'medha' or the essence of water as stated to have been derived from Swarga; Kurma is the Supreme Purusha existent well before Prajapati the 'karta of srishti' or chief of Creation. Now the prayer of the Karta of the agjna: May we secure continuous flows of water by the help of 'Tisra Paramaja' Agni, Vayu, Bhaskara. Thereafter, let this Homa Kunda be filled in by the powers concerned. Let the powers represented by the bricks at the Homa Kunda be enhanced by the mantra of Indra ghosha vasubhih. The Yagjna karta may then prepare five compartments or sections each with Agni in 'pancha chitayh' or five layers decorated by special things like Yavan et.c. The worshipper then places five lotus flowers in each compartment representing 'Panchaagnis' viz. Aahavaniya, Gaarhapatya, Dakshina, Sabhya, and Vasatya. Now the second brick named 'lokaprana' or the large brick named Virat of five feet representing bhumi, antariksha, swarga; dishas or directions, and 'paroraja' or what is beyond swarga; the space fillings are of 'loka praana'. ya etamagninchinute / ya uchainamevam veda / or He who worships Agni Deva illuminates like the Viraja or the Emperor !]

There were maganimous bhojanas of bhakshya-bhojya-lehya- choshya- paaneyyaas [Pancha Bhakshya or fried and other savoury or sweet food items, Bhojya basic eatables like cereals, Lehya or those consumed with the use of tongue, choshya or consumed by using lips and paaneyyas or drinkables] daily in separate halls as per varnas of Brahmana-Kshatriya- Vaishya-Service classes and of respective sex. The elderly- youth-child of men and women besides of disabled or ill persons were served and ever contented. Deeyatam deyataamannam vaasaamsi vividhaanicha, iti sanchoditastra tathaa chakuraneshah/ The watch words among the invitees as pronounced loud and clear often declared by the volunteers of the kingdom's 'annashalaas' were: Take the Food and Take New Clothes! The freshly cooked food, especially the cereals were of the magnitudes of mountain heaps! All the populace as the guests of the yagjna coming from far and near were of uniform voice of total contentment and happiness. There were several voluntary groups of Brahmanas performing recitations of 'vedamantras' attracted by the mesmerised audiences. In fact there were 'sadasyas' of the contingent of panditas engaged in the yagjna

karmas were such as not all round erudites, veda vyakarana -adi panditas, brahmacharya paalakaas and 'bahushrutas' or experts in more than one vedas, besides being 'tarka-meemaamsa pravenas'. In the formal yajna in progress, there arrived a time for tying six sturdy and standing bulls to be tied to firmly fixed wooden polesticks on earth. The strong poles be preferably made of devadar wood. These should be six some with twenty one clothings dressed up and arranged in six rows firmly. The work force needed to be well trained and the hardening of the erectness of the poles, tying the clothings and their presentable uniformity of cloth, colour and design pattern. The poles should be 504 inches height with eight angled each and the overall presentability be smoothening to the objective looks. The designed and colored clothing on the polls be scented with 'pushpa chandan' in worship and looked up in an areal manner would look awesome to the celestials above. Now, the bricks arranged on the yagnavedi were sprinkled with mantras by brahmana panditas and placed inside the 'agni kunda' by the King. The emerging 'Agni jvaalaas' gradually pick up speed and wide spread by way of convection, conduction and radiation in eighteen directions. Further, the polls as arranged are stated to bundle up with tree hundred each of pashu-pakshi-sarpas as having been under the control of various Devas and thus get subdued. Meanwhile, Patta Mahishi or the Prime Queen Devi Koushalya already seated with the King would be requested to sprinkle sacred waters on the Horses for the sacrifice as also on the three swords of length and sharpness and touch them. Then she would spend the entire night beside the sacrificial horses at the 'Ashva shaala' voluntarily in the name and glory of 'dharma'. Then Hotaardharvyustathathod graataa hastena samayojayan, mahishyaa parivritthhaaya vaavaataamparaam tathaa/ Subsequently, the priests named hota-adharvyu and Udgaataa joined their hands together on the sacrificial horse.

Vishneshana on the Ritviks of Yajna: The main priests of Yajna Karyas are the Hota who recites the invocations especially of Rigveda; Athavyu is responsible for the physical and material details of the yajna and an erudite of Yajurveda; Udgaata is the chief chanter of the suktas and specialist Saama Gaana and responsible for pressing the Soma juice. Besides these are Brahmanas as Agneedhi and Prashastar, besides Purohita of course. Thereafter, the private part of the Horse for the Sacrifice is burnt and the specified body parts of the animal are sacrificed in the flames of Agni Deva along with the recitation of the relevant chants in chorus. As per the Kalpa Sutra, the duration of Ashvamedha yajna comprises three phases; on the first day the phase comprises Chatushtoma or Agnishtoma. The second phase on the following day is called Ukthya and third phase in the final day is named Atiraatra. Jyotishthomaayusheechaiva atiraatrou cha nirmittou, abhijit vishv ajit chaivamaaptoryaamou maha kratuh/

Maha Kratus are considered as Jyotishthoma, Aayush homa, Ari raatraas twice over, Abhijit the fifth, Vishvajit the sixth, Aptyoryaamas as the Maha Kratu as the substitutes in times thereafter the relevance of Ashvamedha Yajna. After the successful execution of the Ashvamedha Yajna, King Dasharatha donated away the eastern part of Ayodhya to the Hota, the northern portion to Udgaata, the southern part to Brahma and thus his empire. Then, the Rikvikas stated that instead of giving away the territories of the land, the King be pleased to donate them : Maniratnam suvarnam vaa gaavo yadvaa samudyatam, tat prayacchha nrip shreshtha dharanyaa na prayojanam/ Narashreshtha! You might as well donate to us Mani- Ratna-Suvarnas or Cows and such precious materials and what avail could be the territories of land to us! Then Dashartha entrusted the task of distribution of ten lakh cows, crores of gold mudras and four time more of silver mudras for distribution. The totality of the Brahman hood then blessed the unique King who had successfully performed the Maha Yajna stating: Bhavishyanti sutaa raajaschatvaaraste kulodvaahah/ You should be blessed with foursome capable sons of everlasting virtue and glory!

Having successfully executed the Ashvamedha, Maharshi Rishyashringa expressed his wish to organise Putra Kamekshi Yagna for the King's favor as per atharva veda mantras. Accordingly ahutis in agni were initiated invoking Deva-Siddha- Gandharvas and they responded positively and accepted their respective portions of 'havish anna' to their contentment.

Even as the celestials were collected in the yagjna shala without being seen and noticed by humans, they had collectively made an appeal to Brahma Deva that on the earth itself there was a 'maha rakshasa' named Ravanaasura who had been continuously tormenting them all and soon they were reaching a no return point of his harrassment. The sins of Ravana had even reached a stage of defeating Indra Deva who was even about to be dethroned. Ravanaasura was earlier blessed by Brahma and it was on that strength of boons granted by him, Ravana had since become invincible in trilokas! Nainam Suryam pratapati paarshve vaati na Maarutah chalormimaalee tan drushtvaa samudropi na kampate/ Ravanaasura was such that Surya Deva could not radiate and burn off Ravana, nor Vayu Deva blow him down and let alone Samudra Deva would get terrified into submission out of fear That Ravana Rakshasa looked fierce, ruthless, and merciless. Brahma Deva! we all seek your refuge, shelter and a way out to rid of this Rakshasa! Then Brahma too became too pensive and on his mental screen of thoughts argued within himself and realised that when Ravana asked for the boon of invincibility he mentioned that he should not be killed by gandharva-yaksha- devatas or even by co- rakshasaas even, but he omitted human beings probably by his arrogance and ego! Brahma now declared that only a human being could bring up Ravana's death! Having heard this outstanding suggestion from Brahma, Deva- Gandharva -Yaksha- Maharshis became thrilled with joy and made a frantic headway to Maha Vishnu seated far above the clouds with the radiance of Surya Deva riding comfortably on Garuda Deva dressed in 'peetaambara' or yellowish robes with four hands sparkling shankha-chakra-gada-sharanga while his shoulders were bright with golden 'keyuras'. The entirety of Devas prostrated before Him with veneration and said in one voice: 'Deva Deva the Omni Present! You are shouldering the heavy responsibility of preserving the Universe and its Subjects! King Dasharatha is a dharmagjna and a renowned benevolence of Ayodhya; he has three queens bestowed with 'hree-shri-keerti'. Our collective appeal to you would be to bless them as their sons with your 'amshas', as the Mahasura Ravana had been tormenting Trilokas and your 'avataara' or incarnation as a 'manava' could most certainly destroy evil and vindicate Dharma and Nyaya for ever in a battle. Bhagavan! This Rakshasa Ravana has come to establish himself as an invincible and ruthless warrior against Deva-Gandharva-Siddha- Maharshis and only you and you alone could save us and reestablish the principles of virtue and justice. Indeed this is our unanimous and ultimate request out of sheer spirit of survival and safety as you are our ultimate refuge! Maha Vishnu replied: Bhayam tyajat bhadram vo hitartham yudhi raavanam, suputra poutram saamaatyam samitra jnaatik baandhavam/ Hatvaa kruram Dashratham Devarshinaam bhayaavaham/ Dashavarsha sahasraani dashavarshaani - cha, vatsyaami maanushe loke paalayhan prithiveemimaam/ Deva Gana! May you all be blessed with tidings of auspiciousness and relief from fear. The totality of Ravana Kingdom including him, his sons and grand sons, sinful relatives, ministers and associates should be uprooted in one go battle and my incarnation as Rama should reestablish virtue and justice during my tenure as of eleven thousand years on earth! At the sametime, Maha Vishnu appeared before King Dasharatha who was stand - still in a joyus stupor! Deva, Rishi gana, Gadharva-Ekaadasha Rudras and Apsaras were relieved and taken to a non stop greetings of relief and excitement.

Devas headed by Indra Deva approached Lord Vishnu, the latter replied that only in human form that Ravana'suru could be destroyed. Santushtam pradadou tasmai raakshasaaya varam prabhuh, naanaa vidhebhyo bhutebhyo bhayam naanatra maanushaat/ Brahma therefore replied happily that thus there would not be any other encounter except by an Illustrious Human himself. As Narayana Himself assured that Ravana Vadha was imminent, Indra in turn addressed Devaadis in some detail that Maha Vishnu had consented to assume human form as Lord Brahma explained earlier that Ravanusura could be destroyed only by Narayana in human form and as the son of King Dasharatha. In fact Dasharatha was performing Putra Kameshti Yagjna being anxious to beget sons at that time. The King was taken aback at the successful concluding phase of the Yagjna, there emerged a Maha Purusha from the flames of the Agni Kunda with dazzling and gigantic black form robed in red brightness, with scintillating ornaments, as if Surya Deva had descended on earth and Agni Deva's own form got exhibited; his voice was thunderous and akin to earthshaking roars of groups of lions. He was carrying in both of his hands a huge lustrous golden vessel with a silveren lid; He addressed King Dasharatha to say: 'Take me as from the Prajapati as I am His representative.' King Dasharatha at once folded his hands stood still and shocked waiting for what the Huge Personality would instruct him Prajapati's message. The Maha Purusha stated that as the King had been a habitual follower of dharma and venerator of Devas, the latter had sent along with me as the representative of Prajapati a golden pot of 'Paayasa' or the cooked rice soaked in sweet milk for distribution to your queens as per the proportion of his own choice. King Dashrathatha prostrated and profusely thanked the Maha Purusha who disappeared instantly. *kausalyāyai narapatiḥ pāyasārdham dadau tadā, ardhārdham dadau cāpi sumitrāyai narādhipaḥ/ kaikeyyai cāvaśiṣṭārdham dadau putrārthakārāṇāt, pradadau cāvaśiṣṭārdham pāyasasyāmṛtopamam/ anucintya sumitrāyai punar eva mahīpatiḥ, evaṁ tāsām dadau rājā bhāryānām pāyasam pṛthak/*The highly elated Dasharatha walked in to the palace of the Queens and approached Devi Koushalya the Prime Queen and offered half of the Payasa to her. Of the remaing half, Dasharatha offered half to the second wife Devi Sumitra. Half of the remainder half was offered to the third Queen Kaikeyi. But still there was further remainder which was awarded to Devi Sumitra yet again. The queens were extremely delighted at the final outcome of the Putra Kameshti Yagjna, the grand appearance of the Maha Purusha from the 'homaagni jvaalaas', his offer of the 'paayasa patra' to the King and the distribution of the paayasa as per king's own reckoning. The populace of the Kingdom were thrilled with joy too at the swift events in the kingdom starting off from the horse sacrifice to Putra kameshti to the appearance of Maha Purusha from the flames, the entire episode thereafter, now awaiting the arrival of Raja Kumaras!

Most essentially, may the wombs of apsaras, and of female gandharvas, yakshas, kinnaras, and vidyadharas be filled up with innumerable Vanaras to make a formidable 'Vanara Sena'. Brahma also stated that he had already created Jambavan the invincible Bear formed Maha Veera. Then Devaraja Indra created Vanara Raja Vaali, Surya Deva manifested Sugriva; Brihaspati created Tara Devi; Kubera created Ganbhamadana named vaanara; Vishvakarma the Deva Shilpi created Nala vaanara; Ashvini Kumaras created Mainda and Dvidida; Varuna created Sushena Vanara; Parjanya Deva created the brave Sharabha; Maarutasyou Shriman Hanuman naama Vaanarah, vajrasamhananopeto vainateya samo jave/ Vayu Deva manifested Hanuman as his 'aourasa putra' from Devi Anjana whose body was of vajra and body speed was of Garuda! In this manner, thousands of the Vanara Sena was manifested by various Deva-Devis with the singular objective of destroying Ravanaasura and his clan. They were all mighty with Ashta Siddhis.

[Vishleshana on Ashta Siddhis: or Supernatural Powers are Anima or the ability of miniaturising oneself; Mahima is turning one self giant like; Laghima is the capacity to get oneself unusually light; Garima is to make the Self too gross and heavy; Prapti is to achieve any kind of mental desire; Prakamya or providing fulfillment of other's wishes; Vashitwa or capacity to control any other Party; Ishitwa or fully dominating over others as wished. Among many other Siddhis include Para Kaaya Pravesha or totally entering other's body and even Soul; Doora Shravana or distant hearing, Doora Darshana or Distant Vision or ability to see things or actions any where from other places; Manojavam or reaching a place as fast as a thought as also thought reading; Kamarupa or assuming the physical form of another Being-be it a moving species or an immobile like a mountain etc; Swacchanda Maranam or the gift to die at one's own wish; Deva Saha Kreedha Anudarshanam or the gift to view Deva Devis playing among themselves; Yatha Sankalpa Siddhi or accomplishing any thing by a mere thought; and so on.]

Likewise Devatas-Maharshis- Gandharvaas-Garudas- Yakshaas-Naagaas-Kimpurushas-Siddhas- Vidyadharaas-had all created thousand sons of strength and decisiveness. Quite a few of Vanaras were of the strength and grit of tigers and lions. Some could slice off the mountain cliffs even with their hand nails or bite off trees with their strong teeth. Some could create havoc to rivers and even seas or have the strength to trample their feet and dig up deep trenches on earth. Without exaggeration, some of the Vanaras could fly high and pierce through thick black clouds and enen hold them with their hands and feet. Some of these vaanaraas who were born and brought up were present in thick and long jungles or on mountain tops and mostly the followere of either of the Vaanara King brothers of Vaali or Sugreeva. Of the respective Vaanara Kings, Surya putram cha Sugreevam Shakraputramscha Vaalinam/ Vaali was of the ‘amsha’ of Indra and Sugreeva was of the origin of Surya Deva. Bharata was of cool and steadfast temperament always, as having been born in Pushya Nakshatra in Meena Lagna. Devi Sumitra's twin sons to be named as Lakshmana and Shatrughna were born in Ashlesha Nakshatra- Karka Lagna when Surya was in 'ucchha sthaana' or of elevation. King Dasharatha's four sons of glory were thus of lasting eminence as were born of the stars of Bhadrpada viz. Purvabhaadra and Uttaraabhaadra as being renowned in Jyotisha Shastra.

[Vishleshana on Nakshatra Phala (Star-wise birth results)]: Readings as per Nakshatra (Star)-wise birth of various human beings were narrated by Sanandana Maharshi to Narada Muni as follows: Those born in Ashwini are handsome and fond of wearing ornaments. Bharani-born are capable to perform and speak truthfully. Krittika-born tends to eatless, steady-minded, and conversational but have soft corner for other women. Rohini born are wealthy, Mrigashitaites are luxurious; Ardra-born violent, stubborn and criminal-minded; Punarvasu born are even-minded, and well behaved but suffer bad health; Persons born in Pushya Nakshatra are imaginative like Poets and are happy-go-lucky. Celebrations broke out across the kingdom as the public got thronged in heavy crowds in the lanes and byelanes as well as high roads in feverish enthusiasm and passionate gusto of celebrations, as street dances and singings. King Dasharatha had liberally given away dhana-dhanya-pashus along with gold and jewellery to the royals and the public alike. After twelve days thereafter the births of the Raja Kumaras, on the lines of the kshatriya sampradaaya, the names of the boys were declared; Ateetyakaadashaah tu naama karmam tathaakarot, jyeshtham Ramam mahatmaanam Bharatam Kaikeyee sutam/ Soumitreem Lakshmanaamiti Shatrughnam param tathaa, Vasishthah parama preeto naamaani kurute tadaa/ Following the day of birth, on the eleventh day the ‘naama karan a samskara’ was duly executed. Vasishtha Maharshi named the eldest boy as Rama, the son of Devi Koushalya, the next boy as Bharata the son of Devi Kaikeyi, and the twins born to Devi Sumitra as Lakshmana and Shatrughna.

Visleshana on Naama karana vide Dharma Sindhu:

Nama karana: On the eleventh or twelfth day of the child’s birth, Namakarana is required to be performed. Some say that although ‘Ashoucha’ continues upto the tenth day of the birth, Nama Karana might as well be performed on that day itself. To Kshatriyas this function needs to be done on the thirteenth or the sixteenth day; to Vaishyas on the sixteenth or the twentieth day and to Shudras on twenty second or the month-end. However, in the ‘Mukhya Kaala’ on the birthday of the child, it is stated that there is no deed for specially ascertaining the Punya Tithi Nakshatraas for the Nama karana if done on the ‘Mukhya Kaala’ or the day of the birth although the Gouna Kala or the time of birth would need be examined from the angle of Yoga since one should avoid the Vaidhruti-Vyateepaata Sankranti Grahanaas, Amavasya etc. If not possible to perform the Namakarana in the Mukhya kaala, then the Propitious timings are on Tithis barring Chaturthi, Shashthi, Ashtami, Navami, Dwadashi, Chaturdashi and Purnima; Soma, Bhdha, Guru and Shukra Vaaraas are suitable; Ashwini, Uttara, Uttaraashaadha, Uttaraabhadra, Rohini, Mrigashirsha, Punarvasu, Pushya, Hasta, Swaati, Anuraadha, Shravana,

Dhanishtha, Shatabhisha and Revati are good; Vrishabha, Simha and Vrischika Lagnaas are good. Now there could be four kinds of names that are ascribed to a child: Devataa naamaas are as per Ishta Devas; second alternative is on the basis of Maasaas as illustrated as follows: Chaitraadi maasa naaani Vaikunthodha Janardana Upendro Yagna Purusho Vaasudevastathaa Harih Yogishah Pundarikaakshah Krishnonantochyuta stathaa Chakreeti Dwaadashaitaani Naamaani kramaadaahurmaniishinah/ (All these names are on the basis of Chandramaana). The third criterion is as per Nakshatraas in : Ashvayuk, Aapabharanah, Kartikah, Rouhinah, Margasirshah, Ardrakah, Punarvasu, Tishyah, Aasleshah, Maghah, Purvaaphalgunah, Uttaraaphagunah, Hastah, Chaitrah, Swaatihi, Vashaakhah, Anuraadhah, Jyaishthah, Moolakah, Purvaashaadhah, Uttaraashaadhah, Abhijitah, Shraavanah, Shravishthah, Shata bhishak, Pooravaa –Proushtha paadah, Utaraa proushthakpadah, and Raivatah/ As per Jyotisha Grandhaas the names could be on the lines of ‘chu-che-cho-la Ashwiniproktaa’ like Chelesha, Cholesha or Lakshmana starting with the name of the Nakshatra. But Shrouta Granhaas are not in agreement to this method. Shaankhaayanaas follow the method of naming the boys on the basis for Nakshatra in another way: like those born in Kritika are named as Agni Sharma. The fourth method is of Vyaavahaarika use or socialised version. For boys the name might contain ‘Samaakshara’ or of even number like of the second, fourth, six letters and for girls odd-number names. Normally the words like Sharma-Shastri are suffixed to Brahmana boys or Varmanas in the case of Kshatriyas, Guptaas in reference to Vaishyas and Daasas for Shudras. Even if the earlier Samskaaraas like Garbha dhaana, Pumsavana, Seemanta, Paada Kruccha, Artha Krucchaadi were not performed earlier, the ‘parihaara prayaschitta homas’ and ‘pratyaaamnaaya daanaas’ be executed and make the Sankalpa of Namakarana vidhaana: Asya Kumaarasyaayurabhi vridhhi dwaaraa vyavahaara siddhi beeja garbha samudbhavaino nibarhana dwaaraa Shri Parameshwara preetyartham Naama karmka cha tantrena karishye/ --Then the Swasti Vaachanaas would be recited: Jaata karma naama karmanoh Punyaaham bhavanto bruvantu/ --Asya Kumarasya Jaata karmaney yetannaamney cha Swasti bhavanto bruvantu/ Then Brahmanas would write down on rice grains in a silver plate the Vyavaharika Naama of the son which the father would announce to the invitees audibly and clearly followed by other formalities including Mangala Geetas, Brahmana Dakshinas and Bhojanaas.]

Teshaam janmakriyaadeebi sarva karmaanya kaarayata, teshaam keturiva jyeshtho Ramo ritikarah pituh/ Maharshi Vasishtha had performed various ‘samskaaraas’ at the appropriate timings of days, months and years.

He was indeed like an untarnished full moon. He could ride on an elephant top with grace and self confidence or ride on a speedy horse with the same ease as an intrepid warrior. He was an ardent son following the basic principle of 'pitru vakya paropalata' or true follower of what the father's word of wish would in spirit and will. On top of all these attributes of glory, Rama was a champion of Dhanur Vidya.

Vishleshana on 'Dhanurveda' (The Science of Archery and Weaponry) and Rules of Battle:
'Dhanurveda' or the knowledge of Archery and Weaponry is an important aspect covered in Agni Purana. Mainly five categories of weaponry are stated to have been used in the days of yore, viz. 'Yantramukta' launched from Yantra (machinery/ engines), including arrows released from bows; 'Pani Mukta' or thrown by hands, like stones or spears; 'mukta sandharita' ie. flung or withdrawn by hands; the weapons like swords invariably used by hands; and 'amukta' used by brute force such as duels/wrestling. The use of bow and arrows is an art by itself: the bow ('dhanush') with a tightly fitted strong string, making an arch form and the arrow drawn back as far as possible to be released while chanting a prayer to the respective Gods like 'Agni' (Fire), 'Vayu' (Wind), 'Indra' (Chief of Devas), 'Varuna' (God of Rain), Serpent ('Naga') etc. appropriate to an occasion. The opponent would naturally retaliate and the initiator should have the knowledge to anticipate an opposite action and the fight keeps going depending the tolerance and attacking power of an archer. In addition to the set of bows and arrows, a warrior is also equipped with an arrow-hive to store the arrows to be hung behind in the back, armoury protecting the chest, neck, hands, legs, feet, groins, back and of course the head, a belt to accommodate a sword, a dagger, a noose, a mace, an iron chain, and most of all a shield. The charioteer, the horses and a strong chariot are to be suitably equipped too. The art of handling each item of defence and offence to one's own advantage is an integral part of 'Dhanurveda' training and skill management, which alone is the answer for the success of the battle discipline.

Baalyaat prabhriti susnigdho Lakshmano lakshma vardhanah, Raamasya lokaramasya bhraatrujyesh-tasya nityashah, sarvapriyakartasya Raamasyaapi shareeratah/ Lakshmano lakshmasampanno bahirpraana ivaaparah, na cha tena vinaa nidraam labhate purushottamah, mrishtamannamupaaneetam annaati na hi tan vinaa/ Lakshmana- the Lakshmi vardhana or the sign of Lakshmi the Wealth- was of the incarnation of Adi Shesha and mutually dearmost to Shri Rama. Purushottama Shri Rama was stated to never had comfortable sleep except Lakshmana was not on guard. Further when excellent food was offered to Shri Rama, the latter never accepted it without sharing the same. As and when Rama went on riding a speedy horse, Lakshman was to run along as speedily keeping his 'dhanush' with arrows drawn for Rama's protection.

Vishleshana on Lakshmana the manifestation of Adi Shesha: Adi Shesha was the first born to Kasahyapa Maharshi and Devi Kadru, followed by Vaasuki- Airavata-Takshaka and thereafter the sarpa generation of Iravata, Mahapadma, Kambala, Ashwatara, Shankha, Karkotaka, Dhananjaya, Kaliya and so on. As most of Shesha's younger brothers were cruel bent upon harming other beings, especially the cousin brothers like Garuda, Shesha was disgusted by the cruel took to austere penances, lived on air and meditated in places including Gandhamadhana, Badrikashrama, Gokarna, Pushkara and Himalayas. His penances were so severe that his flesh, skin and muscles dried up and became skeletal. Lord Brahma was pleased and blessed as Shesha requested Brahma to let his mind under control for ever. Brahma then instructed to go beneath the unstable earth and stabilize it. Shesha agreed and went to the netherworld and stabilized earth with his hood. Shesha is also depicted with a massive form that floats coiled in space on Ksheera Saagara as the bed on which Maha Vishnu lies as of thousand hoods each ornamented with glittering precious crowns.

Bharatasya Shatrughno Lakshmanaavarajo hi sah, praanaih priyataro nityam tasyachaaseet tathaa priyah/ Like wise King Dasharatha was in great joy possessing Bharata, Lakshmana and Shatrughna apart from the singular source of Rama the blissful. These boys as they grew up turned out increasingly as of 'jnaana sampanna', 'lajjaasheela' or modest, 'yashasvi' or popular and famed, 'sarvagina' or well informed, and 'Dooradarshis' or far-sighted; the King was as contented as Brahma himself as the creator of such progeny of glory. In due course, the illustrious foursome were of daily veda swaadhyayas, pitru seva, and dhanur vidyaabhyasa.

One fine day, the King called up a meeting of purohitas, his queens, and close relatives broached the topic of wedding to the sons. Mean while Maharshi Vishvamitra too arrived. The Maharshi sent a message to the King about his arrival as the Koushika Vamsha Gaadhiputra Vishvamitra. The King was rather nonplussed about Vishvamitra's sudden arrival. Yet as accompanied by purohita Vasishtha Maharshi he welcomed so heartily as Indra would to Brahma Deva himself! Maharshi Vishvamitra informed the King that he was planning for a rigorous 'Vrata' with 'agni karyas' and then enquired of the King's welfare, the plumpness of the kingdom's treasury, the control and intactness of the Kingdom's boundaries, the welfare of his family and associates, and contentment of his Subjects. Later on Vishvamitra enquired of the wellbeing of Vashishta Maharshi and co Rishi- Brahmana ganaas too in the Conference as well. Now having the Guest been seated comfortably, the King made his introductory welcome remarks stating that the visit of Vishvamitra was pleasurable and he would be too happy to assist for the successful completion of the Great Yajna proposed. The visiting Maharshi became too happy at the King's generosity as the latter expressed.

Sargas Nineteen and Twenty

Maharshi Vishvamitra then addressed King Dasharatha: 'On hearing my earnest request, you must swearingly assure me that it should be indeed fulfilled. Maharshi continued to state: Aham niyamamaatishthe siddhyaratham purusharshabha, tasya vighnakaro dvou tu raakshasou kaamarupinow/ Vrate tu bahushacchrenaam samaaptyaam raakshasaavimou, Maareechascha Subaayuscha veerya vantou surakshitou/ Tou maamsa rudhiroughene taamabhyavarshataam avadhute tathaabhute tasmin niyamanishchaye/ Kritaschamo nirutsaahastasmaad deshaadapaakrame, na cha me krodhamatsrishtham buddhir bhavati paarthiva/ Tathaabhutaa hi saa charyaa na shaapastatra muchyate, sva putram raaja shaardula Ramam satyaparaakramam/ ity evam uktvā dharmātmā dharmārthasahitam vacaḥ, virarāma mahātejā viśvāmitro mahāmuniḥ/ iti hṛdayamanovidāraṇaḥ; munivacanaṁ tad atīva śuśrūvān, narapatir agamad bhayaṁ mahad; vyathitamanāḥ pracacāla cāsanāt/

King Dasharatha! The maximum part of the YagiMaharshuna is over but now am concerned of the attacks of Rakshasaas. As you are aware, I am bound by the principles of shanti- mouna-shama- and dama and hence would not be able to get irritated and angered . The Rakshasaas tend to pour rains of blood and minced meat and all my earlier endeavors would get to nought. Indeed, I feel tempted to get angry and give 'shaap' to the rakshasaas but by doing so then what all had been achieved would be negated. That is why : sva putram raaja shaardula Ramam satyaparaakramam/ Kaakapakshadharam veeram jyeshtham me daatumarhasi, śakto hy eṣa mayā gupto divyena svena tejasā, rākṣasā ye vikartāras teṣāṁ api vināśane, śreyaś cāsmāi pradāsyāmi bahurūpaṁ na saṁśayaḥ/ Trayāṇāṁ api lokānāṁ yena khyātīm gamiṣyati, na ca tau rāmam āsādyā śaktau sthātum katham cana, na ca tau rāghavād anyo hantum utsahate pumān/ vīryotsiktau hi tau pāpau kālapāśavaśaṁ gatau, rāmasya rājaśārdūla na paryāptau mahātmanah/ na ca putrakṛtaṁ snehaṁ kartum arhasi pārthiva, ahaṁ te pratijānāmi hatau tau viddhi rākṣasau/ ahaṁ vedmi mahātmānaṁ rāmaṁ satyaparākramam, vasiṣṭho 'pi mahātejā ye ceme tapasi sthitāḥ/ yadi te dharmalābhaṁ ca yaśaś ca paramaṁ bhuvi, sthiram icchasi rājendra rāmaṁ me dātum arhasi/ yady abhyanujñāṁ kākutstha dadate tava mantriṇaḥ, vasiṣṭha pramukhāḥ sarve tato rāmaṁ visarjaya/ abhipretam asaṁsaktam ātmajaṁ dātum arhasi, daśarātraṁ hi yajñasya rāmaṁ rājīvalocanam/ nātyeti kālō yajñasya yathāyaṁ mama rāghava, tathā kuruṣva bhadraṁ te mā ca śoke manaḥ kṛtāḥ/

Kindly allow as per your own promise your magnificent Shri Rama the Kaakutsa vamsha dhaari, satya parakrami, shuravera and your eldest son. He should indeed be able to uproot the Rakshasa groups with ease and instantly. This would eventually earn name and fame as the proud son of yours in trilokas! The principal rakshasaas named Mareecha and Subahu could never ever dare to face him and that should also send a warning to the rest of rakshasaas too. Maha Raja! never imagine Rama as your affection and attachment worthy feeling of a son only but I should be able to swear that the two Rakshasas should soon meet their logical conclusions of death and fright! Maharshi Vasishtha and all other Rishis present here are fully aware of Shri Rama's 'satyaparakrama' or of truthful gallantry and heroism. In case, if virtue and truthfulness are to be sustained on Earth, do allow the unique hero to accompany me. Surely, Vasishtha and other Maharshis present here should vindicate my stand asserted Vishvamitra. Katutstha nandana Dasharatha! Do therefore spare Shri Rama for ten days to let him prove his heroism worldwide and without further procrastination, do suppress your affection for now so that any further delay would very adversely thwart my timings of my yajna karya. As Maharshi Vishvamitra pleaded so vociferously, King Dasharatha had lost his balance of body and mind and fell unconscious.

But even to think of Rama facing the Rakshasaas would be fanciful. Rama is yet to be aware of the nuances of battles against Mayavi Rakshasaas. If insisted, then I too might at the most allow him to accompany me but by any fair way of asking him to face the evil knowingly might not be a constructive proposition. Ravana is a notorious Rakshasa, born in the Maharshi Pulastya. He had taken a boon from Brahma Himself and as such had become a huge menace to Trilokas and thus invincible;[the boon was that only a renowned human of the ‘amsha’ of Vishnu himself]. It is learnt that Ravana was the cousin brother of Kubera himself as the latter was born to Maharshi Vishva himself. That being the background of Ravanaasura, the latter was encouraging the rakshasa duo named Maricha and Subahu to create troubles wantonly in my yajna. Unfortunately the hint that Vishvamitra gave could not be digested by King Dasharatha. But kept on insisting that he would still intend to protect the Maharshi’s Yajna by killing Maricha- Subahu rakshasas all by himself!

Despite Maharshi's request that Shri Rama be asked to save his yajna as he could terminate the Rakshasaas even after the subtle message about the invincibility of Ravana as per Brahma's boon, the King kept up his adamancy and the Maharshi angrily stated that even after the King's initial assertion that he could do anything to preserve the glory of his ancestry, 'may the King be happy that he had gone back on his- fake -assertions! Tasya roṣaparītasya viśvāmitrasya dhīmataḥ, cacāla vasudhā kṛtsnā viveśa ca bhayaṁ surān/ Aa Maharshi Vishvamitra was rattled with anger, it looked that Earth might not be shaken and even Deva ganaas witnessing the proceedings were in panic. To avert the crisis, Maharshi Vasishtha intervened: 'King Dasharatha! You are the symbol of Ikshvaku Vamasha and of its sustained glory. You are the famed torch bearer of the clan and should not allow any scope for its infringement now. May your assertion to Vishvamitra that his yajna would be concluded successfully be so honoured truthfully without inhibitions of 'ifs and buts' and accordingly let the famed Maharshi with outstanding foresight be pleased to let Shri Rama accompany him most certainly! Whether Shri Rama was well conversant with 'Astra Vidya' or of the full knowledge of archery or not would be irrelevant, but one reality was definite that no Rakshasa in the universal creation could face him never ever! As the fierce fires should keep the pot of Amrit in steady position, Maharshi Vishvamitra should safeguard Shri Rama and no mighty rakshasa could ever dare to go anywhere near him. Shri Rama himself as also Maharshi Vishvamitra are the symbols of Dharma, knowledge and intense concentration. King Dasharatha! The Maharshi was steeped in the knowledge Astra-Shastra Vidya unparalleled. Na devā narṣayaḥ ke cin nāsurā na ca rākṣasāḥ, gandharvayakṣaprarāḥ sakimnaramahoragāḥ/ Deva-Rishi-Rakshasa-Gandharva-Yaksha-Kinnara-Maha Naagas too were disabled too to realise their magnificence. Probably Prajapati Kushaasva was in the past was aware of the niceties of the astra-shastra vidya and his son Vishvamitra then a King had inherited it. Raghunandana Dasharatha! That is precisely why the finesse of Vishvamitra turned a Maharshi from an outstanding expert in archery! Indeed he as a Maharshi now is steeped in the knowledge of the past-present and the future. That is why you should never hesitate even for a moment to let Rama happily accompany the Maharshi!

Vishleshava on Brahmarshi Vishvamitra:

1. Gayatri Mantra: Thrice a day dvijas are expected to perform Gayatri Mantra and during the Invocatory and Viniyogas or attributions of Gayatri / Shiro Mantras state: Tatsavituriti Vishwamitra Rishih Gayatri chaandah Savitaa Devataa Apojyotiriti Sirasah Pajapatirishi yajuschhando BrahmagniVaayu Suryaa Devataah/ Brahmarshi 'Vishva Mitra' credited as the unique reviver of Gayatri Mantra vide Rigveda's third mandala.

2. Origin of Vishvamitra: In the days of yore, Sage Bhrigu's son Maha Muni Rucheek was on 'Tirtha Yatra' and reached a Place called Bhojkat on the banks of River Kaushiki, ruled by King Gaadhi. As the Muni was at the River for taking his 'Snaan', he saw an extraordinarily pretty girl and on enquiry came to learn that she was the daughter of the King named Tribhuvan Sundari who arrived there to worship Devi Gauri in the Temple there with the desire to secure a suitable husband. Sage Rucheek approached King Gaadhi with a proposal to marry his daughter and the latter did not relish the offer since the Sage was old and none too handsome but could not directly convey the negative reply as the Sage might curse either the King or his daughter. He had indirectly suggested that he would expect 'Kanya sulkam' or dowry as per the Royal Tradition and the dowry would be seven hundred white horses with black ears which could run as fast as wind; the King felt that this kind of difficult demand would surely dissuade the Sage. On the other hand, Sage Rucheek prayed to Devatas and recited sixty four Ruchas (stanzas) in Chanda or symmetry invoking seven hundred mighty horses coloured white with black ears along with strong riders who could run like wind! That specific Ghat of Ganges was thus known as 'Ashva Tirtha'. As per the earlier understanding the King could not wriggle out and had to marry off the daughter to the Muni. Almost after the wedding, the Muni told the bride that he was going off for performing Tapasya and asked her for a boon. The bride's mother advised the daughter to ask the Sage for an excellent boy full of Brahmana's virtues for herself and for a brave Kshatriya boy for the Queen. The Sage performed 'Putreshtu Yagna' to fulfill the desires of the daughter and her mother, viz. a boy of great Brahmanik radiance and another boy with unusual Kshatriya's vivacity respectively and gave away two seedlings one for herself and another for her mother. He instructed that his wife should embrace a Pipal Tree and her mother should embrace a 'Bargad' Tree after consuming the respective seedlings. But the daughter and the mother wanted to test the Sage and thus exchanged the seedlings and the trees. The Sage discovered that exchanges of the seedlings and the trees took place and got quite angry, but the young wife sincerely begged the husband to conceive a boy with Brahmanic qualities although he might have the Kshatriya background. The Sage replied that there could not be a reversal of the situation, yet the boy born of Kshatriya origin might however be an illustrious Sage or a Rajarshi. Thus were born Vishvamitra to Tribhuvansundari and Jamadagni to the Queen. Jamadagni begot Parasurama who not only destroyed King Kartaviryarjuna for killing Sage Jamadagni but also wiped out Kshatriyas in a series of twenty one battles and uplifted the supremacy of Brahmanas as a race. On the other hand, Vishvamitra became a Rajarshi with the qualities of a Brahmana. After Gaadhi, Vishvamitra became the King. (Skanda Purana)

Thus Vishvamitra was of the Kshatriya clan as the King of Kanyakubja, a famed warrior of koushika vamsha and the son of King Gaadhi. Once King Vishvamitra on a hunting spree with his mighty entourage happened to visit Maharshi Vasishtha at his ashram and was treated him and his large army with a sumptuous lunch and discovered Kaama Dhenu the celestial cow the ashram. Vishvamitra was fascinated and wanted the cow for himself so that his 'praja' would never face shortage of food. As Vasishtha refused, the King pondered that true might never wrested with battle skills but only with austerities and relentless tapasya. Vishwamitra spent many years in the pursuit of his goal and faced many obstacles like . For instance, his meditations were once interrupted when he was seduced by Menaka.[Mahabharata describes Vishwamitra's relationship with Menaka resulting in a daughter, Shakuntala]. He returned to his meditations, but was forced to re-start again and again. Finally, he returned to Bramarshi Vasishtha and eavesdropped and heard the conversation of Vasishtha and his wife Arundhati, and learnt that Vasistha had been always encouraging Vishwamitra all along as the King turned Maharshi was steadfast in his Tapasya despite several hurdles and material attractions and physical weaknesses throughout his journey to enlightenment. Ashamed of his anger towards Vasistha, Vishwamitra began to hit his head against a wall. Vasistha rushed out to stop Vasistha and Vishwamitra fell to the ground. As his head touched the feet of Vasistha, Vishwamitra felt a divine current course through his body. He also went into spontaneous state of 'samadhi' when he heard Gayatri Mantra which he kept on repeating for long. Vasistha during Vishwa -mitra's Enlightenment and acquisition of Celestial Energies conferred the title of 'Brahma-rishi' to him.

2. Vishwamitra and Harischandra: King Harishchandra on a hunting expedition, he heard the cries of a woman asking for help. Armed with a bow and arrow, he went in the direction of the sound. The sound was an illusion created by Vighnaraja, the Lord of the obstacles. Vighnaraja was trying to disturb the tapasya of Vishwamitra and entered the body of Harishchandra who in turn started abusing Vishwamitra. This disturbed Vishwamitra's tapasya even as Harishchandra came to his senses and realized that the Sage was extremely angry with him, and apologized. Then commenced the 'Agni Pareeksha' Harishchandra who was renowned for his outstanding Truthfulness. As though Ganesha prompted Vishwamitra by testing the tenacity of Vishwamitra and the glory of Truthfulness of the King alike, the episode of Satya Harishchandra got initiated. The King promised to fulfill any of the Vishwamitra's desires to get rid of his guilt. The King requested to perform Rajasuya Yagna. There after, when Harishchandra offered 'dakshina' to Vishwamitra, the latter surprised the King and demanded his entire kingdom and all his possessions excepting him, his wife Devi Chandramati and son Rohitasya and left the palace. Vishwamitra further demanded another dakshina when Harishchandra sold off himself, his wife and son too. The Sage maltreated them all and Harishchandra decided to leave for Kashi in utter poverty. Vishwamitra reached there too and reminded about the dues of Dakshina since a month passed meanwhile. Harishchandra's wife offered that she could be sold off to pay for the Dakshina. The King fainted at her proposal and she fainted too. But since the Sage gave an ultimatum to pay off at least a part payment by that evening, the couple decided that she was sold in an open market place as a slave of any taker. A Brahmana came forward to buy her and some amount was paid to Vishwamitra, but the young son Rohit did not leave his mother and she begged the Brahmana, who already started insulting and even beating her in the presence of her husband and the Public, finally agreed to allow the son to stay along with her in his home. A few days later, Vishwamitra appeared in the form of 'Kaal' (Mrityu/ the Deity of Death) and demanded that atleast another instalment of the payment due to him at once; Harishchandra had no other option to sell himself to a Chandala, even while reminiscing his past stature and the absence of his virtuous wife and the dear son. The Chandala gave him the duty of holding a stick to burn off dead bodies and be loyal to the Master and carry out his meanest errands. The Great Harishchandra finally got rid of Vishwamitra even if he had to perform the most wretched and heinous duties; he lost his identity and carried on with past memories which also faded away with the passage of time and led a mechanical and handful existence. One fateful day, a woman arrived at the burial ground with a dead body of her son, stated to have been dead as a result of a snake bite. The crying woman recognised the person with his stick with which he was used to burn off dead bodies for years now, and even as he had a dishvelled and ugly hair and beard, with depressed cheeks and hollow eyes. The former Queen- the wife of King Harischandra was herself half clad and hardly identifiable, with her dead son on her lap; she had tired eyes after incessant cries and was looking completely exhausted and hysteric. A man called Harischandra- a non-entity- vaguely felt he saw her somewhere! At last, he recognised her and their dead son and hugged her and the son's body, arranged the dead son on a huge pyre and was about to consign to flames. His wife decided to immolate herself but Harischandra felt that he was not free even to do so without his Master's permission. Finally he decided to join his wife's immolation even if he were to go to hell and the couple performed their last prayers to Almighty. Just at that nick of time several Deities headed by Dharma made their appearance; they included Sadhyaganas, Vishvadeva, Marutganas, Lokapalas, Nagamani, Siddhaganas, Gandharvas, Rudraganas, the two Ashvani Kumaras, Sage Viswamitra and Lord Indra too. The dead Rohit was revived and presented himself in a Prince's attire Harischandra and his wife were blessed and were invited to reach Heaven but the King hesitated as he did not secure his Master's permission; Dharmaraja declared that he himself was the Chandala and approved of the Royal Couple to fly by the Pushpak Vimana to Swarga. Lord Indra stated that all the Deities were extremely happy with the Values of Dharma, Sacrifice, Dedication and Truthfulness that were amply demonstrated by the King, his wife and their son and as such the three were fully entitled to Swarga. Indra sprinkled 'Apamrutyu vinaashaka Amrit' / the Ambrosia that negated death on the Pyre where the dead body of Rahul was kept and the various Deities showered fresh fragrant flowers and Indra personally invited the Threesome to Swarga; .but Harischandra hesitated and said that the Citizens of Ayodhya were highly anguished at our misfortune and hence the King and family alone could not depart to Swarga committing betrayal; the sins of Brahmahatya, Guruhatya, Gohatya, Streehatya are as deplorable as Bhaktahatya; therefore Bhagavan Indra! Kindly return to Swarga, since the pleasure of visiting that Place would not accord as much happiness of our reaching Swarga as our staying in this 'Bhu Naraka' along with our Bhaktas! Thus our resolve is to stay back with our own well-wishers only. Lord Indra was taken aback by the decision of Harischandra and did concur with his proposal as an unusual and exceptional occurrence! Sage Sukracharya commended the example of Harischandra and stated as follows: Harischandrasamo Raja na bhuto na Bhavishyati!

3. Vishvamitra and Vashishtha: an interesting rivalry of Vasishtha and Viswamitra and their mutual curses to become birds : After emerging from his penance under water for twelve long years, the Guru of the King Harischandra, Sage Vasishtha, came to learn that Viswamitra tormented the King and his family to such unendurable limits as taking away their Kingdom, freedom of existence, and near extinction of their lives. It was due to the enduring capacity of the King that even Deities like Indra, Dharma and Dikpalakaas complemented him and his family as was so felt by Vasishtha too.. Quite incensed by the deplorable acts of Viswamithra, he gave a Curse saying: Tasmadduraatma Brahmadvida yajvinaamavatopakah macchhapahato moodhaha sa bakatvamavaapsyati (Due to this reason, that evil-minded stupid who is a hater of Brahmanas and who seeks to spoil Yagnas being performed by them be cursed to become a stork!). But Viswamitra came to know of the curse and gave a return curse to Vasishtha to say: Twamaadi bhavasvet (You become a Partridge!). By virtue of their mutual curses, both the Sages turned out to be birds and kept on quarrelling with each other screeching and shrieking and becoming a nuisance in the surroundings. Lord Brahma himself, as accompanied by Deities sought to bring about truce to the fighting Baka (Stork) and Aadi (Partridge) but to no effect. Finally, Lord Brahma over-ruled the mutual curses of the Sages and restored their original forms. Vasishtha and Viswamitra felt ashamed of them; Brahma explained to Vasishtha that the extreme actions taken by Sage Viswamitra against Harischandra and family were only to put them to test but not out of spite or jealousy; even Dharma Raja was an actor in the drama that was initiated by Maha Ganapati Himself! Harischandra and family as also the great illustrious Well-wisher Subjects of Ayodhya were amply rewarded at the end thus explained Lord Brahma.

As Brahmarshi Vasishtha assured King Dasharatha about Shri Rama's safety in safeguarding the Vishvamitra Yajna, the King was satisfied and allowed Shri Rama to accompany Vishvamitra even as Lakshmana followed Shri Rama. Then the King and queen Koushalya recited 'mantras' of auspicious - ness and blessed the departing sons. Dasharadha touched the forehead of Rama with affectionate and off and handed over to the Maharshi. As cool breezes of winds were passing, it looked that Devas were showering flowers from the skies while tuneful songs and farewell dances were generating send off music by the crowded onlookers on the way. The boys with a container of arrows on their backs and a 'dhanush' on the shoulders proceeded with smiling composure behind the Maharshi as though Ashvini Kumars were accompanying Brahma Deva. Both Rama and Lakshmana were dressed illustriously and wearing glittering ornaments appropriately, along with a sharp knife hanging around a waist belt. In fact the scene was that of Maha Deva being accompanied by Agni Kumara Skanda and Vishakha. As the threesome proceeded towards the banks of the Sacred River Sarayu, then the Kumaras were asked to have a quick 'aachamana' and 'prokshana' in the river soon to return. Mantragrāmaṁ gṛhāṇa tvaṁ balāṁ atibalāṁ tathā, na śramo na jvaro vā te na rūpasya viparyayaḥ/ Na ca suptaṁ pramattaṁ vā dharṣayiṣyanti nairṛtāḥ, na bāhvoh sadṛśo vīrye pṛthivyām asti kaś cana/ Vishvamitra explained that these are two potent mantras named Bala and Atibala, and by their recitations they would be never fatigued but fortified with energy, fitness and alertness, conquering illnesses or diseases of any kind whatsoever and of hunger and thirst too. Now, Raghu nandanas! By practising these two mantras, none indeed could ever face you as being Singular and Invincible. Be it well understood that these two mantras of magnificence are the dear and radiant daughters of Brahma Deva Himself! Brahmarshi stated with emphatic selflessness that he himself accomplished Bala and Ati Bala Mantras by his own long and uninterrupted tapsya of several years and blessed Shri Rama: Vidyaasamudito Raamah shushubhe bheema vikramah, sahasra rashmir bhagavaangsharadeeya Duvaakarah/ Thereafter the threesome had comfortable rest for the night.

Early morning as Rama Lakshmana Vishvamitras had comfortable night sleep, the Maharshi addressed Rama! Your dear mother Devi Koushalya might have perhaps addressed you on your getting back from sleep that you should proceed with your morning duties of devas. Both Rama and Lakshmana had thus performed the duties including deva tarpanas and Gayatri Japas. There after both of the Kumaras prostrated to the Brahmarshi and were ready to move forward. On the way ahead, the three some reached the banks of the Sacred Ganga. There they noticed the Ashrams of Maha Munis and both Rama and Lakshmana were thrilled at the wonderful scene of the hermitages of Mahatmas deeply engaged in Tapasyas. They then enquired of the Brahmarshi Vishvamitra and smilingly the latter replied: There was a Maha Muni named Kandarpa who was in deep tapasya addressed to Sthaanu Shiva. One day, the Muni got up from his ‘samaadhi’ or deep trance felt that he fancifully witnessed a scene of Deveshvara Shiva along with Marud Ganas was passing through even as Maha Deva made a ‘humkaara’ sound. The terrifying and reverberating sound was such that the Muni in the trance got all his limbs burnt off and since then He came to be popular as the Ananga Muni or the Limbless Sage. This was reminiscent of Manmadha becoming Ananda and thus this had become popular as Ananga Muni Ashram thereafter! Having thus explained the Maharshi asked Rama Lakshmanas to rest for the night on the banks of Ganges near the Ashram. As this exchange of views were being exchanged the Ashrama vaasis from their ‘doora drishti’ or far sight noticed the arrival and ran ahead to warmly receive them with ‘atithi satkaaraas’. Having performed the evening duties, Rama Lakshmana Vishvamitras rested there for the night.

Next early morning Rama Lakshmanas after the prescribed duties followed Vishvamitra on the banks of Ganga and the inmates of Ananga Muni Ashram arranged for a boat and while crossing the river midway, they heard a sound of the confluence of Ganga with another water flow and while Rama asked the Sage about it, the latter explained that there was a huge lake named Brahma Manasa Sarovara as per Brahma Deva's Mind and the origin of River Sarayu was therefrom that flow and asked Rama to salute that confluence. Both Rama Lakshmanas had accordingly greeted the waters at the confluence. On crossing the River, they entered a thick and frightening forest; Vishvamitra explained that it was infested with cruel animals, startling and scary screeches of huge birds. Lions, tigers, boars, wild elephants and so on in the forest and huge trees like Ashvakarna or a kind of Shaala vrkisha, Kakubha or Arjun trees, Bela, Tinduka or tendru, paatala and so on were present in that fearful forest. Vishvamitra explained about the origin of the 'Aranya': There were two villages named Malada and Kurusha as manifested by Devas themselves; purā vṛtravadhe rāma malena samabhiplutam, kṣudhā caiva sahasrākṣaṁ brahmahatyā yadāviśat/ tam indraṁ snāpayan devā ṛṣayaś ca tapodhanāḥ, kalaśaiḥ snāpayām āsur malaṁ cāśya pramocayan/ In the days of yore, Indra killed Vritraasura and hid himself in a deep drench of mud as he was aware of the maha pataaka of of Brahma hatya and also distressed with hunger and thirst for several years [Pancha Maha Patakas include: Stree hatya, Bhruna / Shishu hathya, Brahmana hatya, Go hatya and Guru hatya / Guru Bharya Gamana]. Then Devas and Tapodhana Maharshis pulled out Indra Deva and washed him with the Sacred waters of Ganga the 'Mala and Karusha'. nirmalo niṣkarūṣaś ca śucir indro yadābhavat, dadau deśasya suprīto varam prabhur anuttamam/ imau janapadau sthītau khyātim loke gamiṣyataḥ, maladāś ca karūṣāś ca mamāṅgamaladhārīṇau/ As Indra Deva was thus washed away, these two villages had thereafter were named as Malada and Karusha and Indra blessed the mud to take the shape of two popular villages after the mud and hunger and that they would be totally rid of both.

Vishleshana on Vritrasura and Indra's Brahma hatya dosha:

Indra kills Trisira and Vritra and his penance: Prajapati Visvakarma, the famed Architect of Devas, had a son named Trisira or the three headed Brahmana boy who used to practise ascetism with one head, drink wine with another and look around in all directions with the third. Being an ardent student of Vedas, he was always engaged in severe Tapasya, especially 'Panchagni Sadhana' hanging upside down a tree branch exposed to Summer Sun, winter cold and heavy rainy season without food conquering worldly desires. Being highly suspicious of the intentions of Trisira who might pose problem his own throne, Indra despatched Apsarasas to disturb Trisira's rigorous meditation but to no avail. Indra thus killed him even when he was in meditation, even as he knew that killing a pious Brahmana in meditation was the highest possible sin. Furious with Indra's dreadful deed, Visvakarma performed an inexorable Sacrifice by 'Abhichara' process (taking revenge) reciting Atharva Veda Mantras, created a mountain like and ferocious boy with the sole objective of killing Indra. The huge boy was named Vritra or who could save his father as Vrinjina. Visvakarma equipped him with all kinds of war tactics and divine armoury including a swift and sturdy Chariot, a 'Sudarshan' like Disc, and a 'Trisula' like spear. As Vritra grew, Indra was getting nervous and approached Deva Guru to prevent any risk from the Demon. Brihaspati warned Indra that he should better be prepared for a Big Battle as the forebodings were not conducive, as after all Indra had committed a heinous crime of killing a Brahmana out of pride and fear. Meanwhile Vritra formulated his plans of attack and grouped a vengeful and desperate army of Danavas as his support. As the dooms day arrived, Indra and Devas were attacked and a furious Danava clan fought for hundred years and Indra leapt for life from Elephant 'Airavata' and ran by foot and Varuna, Vayu, Agni and all other Planetary heads and Devatas, Gandharvas, Kinnaras and so on fled too incognito. At one stage Vritra caught hold of Indra and literally devoured him. All the Deva Chiefs prayed to Deva Guru to some how save Indra and Brihaspati managed Vritra to yawn with his mouth wide open and somehow helped Indra to manage to bale out from his mountain-cave like mouth of Vritra! As Indra and Devas fled and hid themselves from Vritra, the latter ruled Heavens for thousand years and Devas continued sporadic efforts to defeat Vritra and Danavas but to no avail. Indra and Devas approached Maha Deva for help and together along with Maha Vishnu prayed to Maha Devi and got Her blessings. Some senior Sages went in a delegation to Vritra requesting for truce with Indra and Devas. Vritra agreed that the truce be agreed provided that his death should take place neither during day or night, with a dry or liquid substance or by wood, stone, thunderbolt and similar substance. The Sages agreed to the conditions. But Vritra's father Visvakarma cautioned the son that past history was a witness to Indra's vicious acts and that he would certainly strike Vritra at an opportune time; he said that Indra was such a crook that he killed the foetus of his own mother's sister Diti by entering into her womb by Anima and other Siddhis and killing it into pieces; by taking the form of Sage Gautam and cheated the Sage's wife Ahalya into bed, and recently killed Trisira on the suspicion that he might usurp his throne and so on. In course of the function like 'Suthika Sauchak' ie one month after birth till 'Samavartan' or boy returning from 'Gurukula' after studies. Meanwhile Rahul came to realise that Varun had been demanding the Naramedha and ran away. After some time when he came to know that his father was extremely ill with dropsy as a result of Varuna's curse, Rahul wanted to return home but Lord Indra advised him against it. Sage Vasishtha the well wisher Guru of Harischandra suggested that an alternate way of performing Naramedha as approved by Scriptures was neither day nor night but the twilight time. It was wrongly deduced that it was Indra who killed Vritra, but the actual position was that Maha Bhagavati entered and energised the Sea foam and terminated Vritra. That was why Maha Bhagavati was known as 'Vritranihantri'. [Srimad Maha Bhagavatha Purana stated that Maha Vishnu advised Devas to implore Sage Dadhichi to spare his backbone which was converted into a thunderbolt by Visvakarma the Architect of Devas with which was killed Vritra by Indra.] Badly hurt by the sense of guilt that he killed a Brahmana the result of which would be that of a Great Sin of 'Brahma paataka' as this would be a second sin of killing Trisura, who was also a Brahmana, Indra felt miserable and hid himself in the stalk of a lotus in the deep ditch in Manasarovar lake. As Indra was absconding for a long time, another Indra King Nahusha was installed, and puffed up by the new position Nahusha asked for Sachi Devi to serve him, as he was the King then. Sachi asked for some time Indra befriended Vritra and when the latter was roaming on the Sea beach he took advantage of the situation and sent his thunderbolt to dip itself in the froth of the Sea waves and killed Vritra as the time time to make sure that her husband was really hiding or dead. She prayed to Devi Maha Bhagavati and explained her predicament to Her. Maha Devi asked Sachi to accompany a female messenger named Visvakama; they went by an air-borne vehicle to Manasarovar where she met Indra who was frightened with the sense of guilt hiding inside the stalk of a lotus. On narrating the happenings of the new Indra, his desire to own Sachi as his wife, her asking him for time, praying to Maha Devi and the messenger Visvakama helped locating Indra, the latter advised Sachi to allure Nahusha into a forest by a Vehicle meant for Sages. She returned to Nahusha who borrowed the 'Vimana' (air plane) of Sages who understood the deceit of Nahusha and allowed both of them to board the vehicle saying : SARPA SARPA, which had the double meaning of 'Get In and go' and also 'Serpent, Serpent'! The Great Muni was whipped by Nahusha to let the Vehicle go fast. The Vehicle dropped Nahusha in the thick of a forest who took the shape of a huge serpent and picked up the real Indra and Sachi Devi back to Heavens safe, when all the Devas were happy that original Indra returned! Nahusha secured his liberation only after the Maha Bharata was over and the Five Pandavas passed through the forest and King Dharmaraja answered the questions correctly from his serpent formation and liberated him too. By the Grace of Devi Bhagavati, Indra was reinstated and the curse of his 'Brahma Hatya Pathaka' (killing a Brahmana) was already dissolved by way of atonement and sufferance in hiding at 'Manasarovara'. Such was the Supreme Justice that Devi Maya did to every being without favour or prejudice. The powerful 'Karma' or Fate works equitably to Tri Murthis downward to a grass blade, but the norms change with the passage of Yugas from Satya to Treta to Dvapara and Kali Yuga when the percentage of Gunas would witness radical change by way of reduction to Satvik, medium to Rajas and maximum to Tamas and when the peak reaches to Tamas, it then would be time for Universal Dissolution! Sarga24 contd:

As Maharshi explained about the origin of the ferocious Forest which was in the ancient ages was of Indra's blessed villages of Nalada and Kurusha, there appeared as follows: Kasya chintastha kaalasya yakshini kaalarupini, balam naagasahasrasthasya dhaarayantee tathaa hyubhrut/ Taatakaa naama bhadram te bharyaa sundrasya dheematah, Maareecho Rakshasah putro yasyaah Shakraparaakramah, Vtittabaahurmahaasheersho vipulaasyatanurmahaan/ Raakshaso bhairavaakaaro nityam traasayate prajaah, imou janapadou nityam vinaashayati Rahgava, Maladaamscha Karupaamscha Taatakaa dushtacharini/ A rakshasi which Vishvamitra named as Tataka of mountain like form as of several elephants was the wife of Sunda; her son was Mareecha with round shoulders and huge head with open and extended mouth of giant form. They had been frightening and constatly tormenting the villagers of Malada and Karupa. These Rakshasaas had been in the regular habit of distressing the passers by for a spell of ten to fifteen miles and the entire forest had the notoriety of Tataka Vana. Vishvamitra then declared: manniyogād imam deśam kuru niṣkaṇṭakam punaḥ na hi kaś cid imam deśam śakroty āgantum īdṛśam, yakṣiṇyā ghorayā rāma utsāditam asaḥyayā/ etat te sarvam ākhyātam yathaitad daruṇam vanam, yakṣyā cotsāditam sarvam adyāpi na nivartate/ Rama! My instruction to you should be revived back this forest back to normalcy and worthy of beings moving around freely and fearlessly by throwing away this rakshasi Tataki and company, lest your dutiful loyalty and faithfulness would not be fulfilled.

Shri Rama replied to Mahatma Vishvamitra that this Rakshasi being basically a woman as an 'Abala' or without physical strength as per normal usage yet is stated as one with the stature and strength coupled with severe trait of cruelty and courage. Then smilingly, the Maharshi replied that the background of Tataki was that of an yakshini married off by her father viz. Yaksha Suketaki. The latter was bound by dharma but was issueless and hence resorted to severe tapasya. Brahma Deva was pleased and the resultant boon got fructified as of the form of Tataki with a massive physical form and of the might of thousand elephants. In course of time, the girl Tataki became youthful and attractive and the father married her off to Sunda the son of Jambha. Tataki gave birth to Mareecha. Mareecha on becoming youthful played pranks with Agastya Maharshi while in deep tapasya and the Muni cursed that Mareecha would turn out as a Rakshasa. As Sunda protested violently, Agastya Muni killed Sunda too. Picking up the dead body of Sunda, both Taataki and Maricha now turned a Rakshasa roared and broke into the ashram of Agastya. Agastyah paramakruddhas tātakām api śaptavān, puruṣādī mahāyakṣī virūpā vikṛtānanā, idam rūpam apahāya dāruṇam rūpam astu te/ Then Agastya gave a curse to Tataki to turn out at once as a frightful faced ‘Nara bhakshini Rakshasi’ or a human devourer rakshasi thus the yakshini since turned as a rakshasi. Rama! Now that I have given the background of the Rakshasi, kill her off at once as you are the singular human warrior capable of destroying her. Nara Shreshtha! Do not for a moment get concerned of the established principle of dharma that ‘stree hatya’ be not resorted to since indeed the general concept of Raja dharma would be hardly applicable in this context. Prajapalaka Naresha ought to uphold the golden duty of being cruel and even sinful as a responsibility in the exceptional instances and hence the instruction in this specific context. Tataka was a maha paapi and had no scruples of dharmam and nyaya even bit and therefore richly deserved of straightaway being killed mercilessly. In the remote past, Devi Mandhara the daughter of Virochana desired to destroy the earth in entirety and that was why Lord Indra decided and killed her. Similarly the mother of Shukracharya and Maharshi Bhrigu’s wife desired to destroy Indra Deva and Lord Vishnu himself killed them mercilessly. Now, follow my instructions Rama! Obey them and kill Tataki, affirmed Vishvamitra!

On hearing the spirited appeal to Rama to kill Rakshasi Surpanakha, the former politely greeted the Sage with folded hands and recalled his father’s earnest advice to him to follow the Maharshi’s advice as a command and as such he ought to follow the advice undoubtedly. So saying Rama lifted his dhanush and with strong fists and straightened it as a thunderous sound reverberated in the entire forest. On hearing the sound, Tataka wondered as to what was that about and stood up at once angrily and ran towards the direction as to where the deafening sound emerged from. As she was too tall and frightening, her figure could be seen and Rama told Lakshmana that her figure was indeed ferocious and furious and normal human beings could easily get frightened even to death! As she was a ‘mayavi’ possessive of evil energies she could assume several forms: Etaam pashya duraadharshaam maauaabala samanvitaam, vinivrittaam karomyadya hatakarnaagranaasikaat/ Lakshmana! Now watch and witness as to how I would snip off her ears and nose so that she would scream loud and run away! Na hy enām utsahe hantum strīsvabhā - vena rakṣitām, vīryam cāsyā gatim cāpi haniṣyāmīti me matiḥ/ As she was of the nature of woman that she could get saved as other wise I should have her disabled even to walk let alone run away by snipping off her legs and feet! By stating so Rama jumped forward with his uncharacteristic fury ran near her, while Maharshi blessed Rama Lakshmanas raising his voice saying: May there be an auspicious victory to the Princes ushering success of glory! As soon as they jumped forward thus, there appeared a hurricane with dust and fury as the princes were suddenly taken aback but swiftly realised the play of 'maya' even she sought to hurl heavy stones and boulders towards them. The angry Rama Lakshmanas swiftly cracked them to pieces with rains of their arrows, approached her huge figure jumping up on her shoulders and with their knives readily hanging on their waist belts snipped off her ears and nose while she roared and roared repeatedly. In that condition, she appeared in several forms of make belief and finally disappeared. Vishvamitra exclaimed to Rama that it was a sheer waste of kindness towards the Rakshasi who had been always seeking to break up yagnas and should be able to soon recover and repeat her ruthless deeds again and again. Vishvamitra reemphasised that she ought to be killed even now, before the fall of dusk as rakshasis recover and revive themselves at the 'asura sandhya'. In response to what the Maharshi emphasised, Rama Lakshmanas sent rains of arrows to totally disable the rakshasi. She roared ferociously and attacked the brothers while in response she fell down on earth unconsciously terminated. Indraadi Devatas felt so thrilled and applauded especially congratulating Vishvamitra for constantly exhorting the brothers for their heroism. The groups of Devas entreated the Maharshi to methodically teach Rama Lakshmanas the complete nuances of Dhanur Vidya as they would have to face innumerable challenges of battles to be encountered in times ahead. Prompted by what Devas advised, Brahmarshi Vishvamitra touched the heads and foreheads of Rama Lakshmanas and advised them to rest for the night in the Tataka forest itself and then return to the ashram next early morning.

Having rested in the Tataka vana itself overnight, Vishvamitra addressed Shri Rama smilingly and expressed his great satisfaction at the Tataki samhara and initiated his teachings of applied astra vidya/

He stated that initially he would teach the celestial missiles of danda chakra, dharma chakra, kaala chakra, vishnu chakra, and the most powerful Aindra chakra. Then the Sage instructed the arts of application and throwing away of Indra's Vajrastra, Shiva Deva's trishula praharana, and Brahma's granted Aishikastra and Shira -chedana astra. Then the Maharshi taught the boys of the magnificent vidya of 'gadaa praharana' or the art of battling with maces like 'modaki' - 'prahari' - shikhari of forcible applications of mace strokings, throwings and mace head rubbings. Then Vishvamitra taught the astras of 'dharma paasha-kaala paasha-and varuna paasha'. Subsequently they were taught two kinds of dry and wet rounded applications of astras viz. 'ashani- pinaka-narayanaastras'. Then Rama Lakshmanas were taught Agneyastra fond of Agni Deva resulting in fierce flames of fire renowned as Shikharaastra- Vayavyastra which sweeps away the opponent with virulent sweeps away. Then the Maharshi teaches the Kakutsa nandanaas of 'Hayashira Astra' - 'Krounchana Astra' and 'Shakti Dvayaastra' or of high potent twin astras attacking the opponent with doubled up potency. The Maharshi was pleased to instruct Rama Lakshmanas the astras named 'kankala' -the devastating 'musala' - and the destructive 'Kapaala' and 'Kinkini' and such astras which could lift up and throw the opponents forcefully. Then in the series were taught the famed 'Nandana Astra' of Vidyadharas as well as the associated mace of fame. The 'Gandharva Priya' astras of 'Sammohana' for relapsing into senselessness like 'Prastaavana- Prashamana-and Soumya' were taught too, besides the 'Mohanaastras' such as for varshana-shoshana-santaapana-vilaapana-maadana which was the beloved of Kama Deva Manmadha himself, and the Gandharvapriya 'Maanava astra', besides the Pishacha priya 'Mohanastra'. Brahmarshi Vishvamitra then instructed the Astras named 'Taamasa-Soumana-Samvarta-Durjaya- Mousala-Satya-and Mayamayaastras too. Then the Maharshi imparted to Rama Lakshmanas the glorious 'Surya prabha Astra' which when once released as an arrow would destroy the enemies to ashes. Simultaneously, the Maharshi conferred 'Shishira naamaka Chandraastra', 'Tvashta (Vishvakarma) naamaka 'Daarunaastra', Bhaga Deva namaka 'Bhayankaraashtra' and 'Sheetoshna' naamaka Astra of Manu Deva. Thus with facing the able disciples of Rama Lakshmanas, the Maharshi Vishvamitra was pleased to bestow the 'astra vidya' of his entire learning. He then addressed Rama most endearingly and affirmed: 'we the sages are all your guides and followers alike as the earlier teachings of mine were not so much of teachings but for the enhancement of knowledge of the contemporary and following public. Shri Rama along with Lakshmana prostrated with reverence and gratitude and got readied to follow the Maharshi of the next steps forward. .

Having acquired the fantastic knowledge of the magnificent depths of astra-shastra vidya, Rama on the move addressed the Maharshi that as he had since acquired the celestial awareness of all the vigjnaana, the astra samhara vidhi or the methodology of the reversal of the astras too be kindly taught to them. The Maharshi replied: Rama! What all that had been taught so far was perhaps incomplete and hence the following other astras be also worthy of further learning; the Maharshi therefore complemented additional mantras too viz. Satyavan-Sarva keerti-Dhrishtha-Rabhasa-Pratihaaratara-Praangmukha-Avaangmukha-Lalshya- Alakshya- Dhridha naabha-Sunaabha-Dashaaksha- Shatavaktra- Dasha sheersha- Shatodara- Padma naabha-Maha naabha-Dundunaabha- Svanaabha-Jyotisha- Shakuna-Nairasya- Vimala-Daityanaashaka yougandhara- Vinidra-Shuchibaahu- Maha baahu-Nishkali- Virucha-Saarchimaali- Dhriti maali-Vrittimaan- Ruchira-Pitrya- Soumanasa-Vidhuta- Makara-Parivaara- Rati-Dhana- Dhaanya-Kaamarupa- Kaama ruchi-Moha- Aavarana-Jumbhala- Sarpanaadha-Panthyaana- Varuna- all these being the sons of Krushaasha Prajapati all of them being the energetic and radiant forms. Rama Lakshmanas learnt these astra mantras too with humility and dedication even as they were bestowed with fire like purity. Having futher learnt the reversal mantra stanzas too, Rama Lakshmanas prostrated before the Maharshi repeatedly out of irrevocable gratitude. As the trio of Rama Lakshmana Vishvamitras proceeded further, they spotted a mountain and enquired of the name and fame of the same. The mountain was full of greenery even seen from a distance . As they went nearby they located an ashram and Rama asked Vishvamitra about the same.

Brahmarshi replied Shri Rama's query as to whose was the ashram that was sighted. That indeed was the famed 'Siddha Ashram' of Vamana the incarnation of Maha Vishnu attained 'siddhi' and narrated the legend of Vamana. King Virochana's son the universally glorious Bali Chakravarti who conquered Tri Lokas including Indra Deva himself along with Devas, Marud ganaas and all the celestials too. Bali decided to perform a Maha Yagjna and commanded Agni and other relevant Devas to appear instantly. Then Indraadi Devas approached Maha Vishnu to apprise of the then happenings especially of the proceedings at the Maha Yagjna of Bali Chakravarti, his daanaas of ‘go-bhumi-suvarna adi sampatthi’ and so on. Then they made a special request to appear in the context of the Bali’s ongoing yagjna to redeem the celestials from their bondage and suppression. Sa tvam surahitārthāya māyāyogam upāsritah, vāmanatvam gato viṣṇo kuru kalyāṇam uttamam/ They entreated Maha Vishnu to take up human incarnation to bring back the universe to normalcy and reassert ‘Dharma and Nyaaya’ and descend down to earth at Yoga maya ashram as of Vamana swarupa and take the daanaas at the Yagjna. Shri Rama! At that very time in response to Indraadi Deva’s supplication, Maharshi Kashyapa along with his wife Devi Aditi appeared and prayed to Vishnu that the latter was indeed the preserver of the Universe as per the desha- kaala-parishtitis as the omniscient. Vishnu responded to ask for a boon from the Maharshi Couple desired that Maha Vishnu be born as their dear son. Thus Maha Vishnu descended as a Brahmachari Brahmana Kumara. Atha viṣṇur mahātejā adityām samajāyata, vāmanam rūpam āsthāya vairocanim upāgamat/ trīn kramān atha bhikṣitvā pratigrhya ca mānataḥ, ākramya lokāṁl lokātmā sarvabhūtahite rataḥ/ mahendrāya punaḥ prādān niyamy balim ojasā, trailokyam sa mahātejāś cakre śakravaśam punaḥ/ Thus Maha Vishnu was born to Aditi Devi and having assumed the form of the short statured Brahmachari Vamana, stayed at the SIDDHASHRAMA appeared at the Bali Chakravarti’s yagjna, sought a meagre three feet of Bhumi for his tapasya, and occupied three lokas suppressed Bali Chakravarti to the nether lokas and reinstated Mahendra as the King of Indra Loka! Maharshi Vishvamitra thus narrated the background of the Ashram. Many times Rakshasaas keep tormenting the ‘ashrama vaasi tapasvis’ and they need to be punished too. Then Rama Lakshmanas followed the Brahmarshi and entered the ashram when the inmates warmly welcomed them with unprecedented joy and excitement. Simultaneously they expressed their anguish that the evil minded groups of Rakshasaas for long times now spilt their efforts to dutifully perform their yagjn karyaas. The very next morning the group of Rishis initiated an yagjna having taken the blessings of Maharshi Vishvamitra.

Vishleshana on Bali Chakravarti and Vaamanaavataara: Maha Puranas especially Matsyaadis described but Vamana Purana is quoted:

Chakravarti Bali of Daityas took over the reins of Trilokas from Virochana the son of Prahlada and the great Grand father of Hiranyakashipu, Devas lost power in Swarga and the mighty Mayasura and Shambara flew the Flag of Vijayanti too. Yet, the Daityas were steeply engaged in Dharmik deeds, and they were guarding the Sky providing stability all-around. There was complete absence of sinners in the Kingdom and Dharma was predominate; Dharma was established on four feet except on one; all the Deputised Kings were performing Administration ideally and all the Four Varnaas of population were observing Dharma perfectly. It was at that opportune time that the Coronation of Bali Chakravarti took place amidst the chantings of Victory by all concerned. Devi Lakshmi appeared and congratulated at Bali’s Elevation to Supremacy along with her ‘Amsaas’ like the Devis named Hreem, Kirti, Dyuti, Prabha, Dhruti, Kshama, Bhuti, Ruddhi, Divya, Mahamati, Shruti, Smriti, Ida, Shanti, Pushti, Kriya, and also select Apsaraas. Meanwhile, Devataas were disillusioned at their discomfiture and the climax of Bali’s high status especially because of Daitya King’s unchallenged success owing to his Dharma Paalana and the lack of any record of Evil deeds by Daityas; they were also denied their shares of Yahna Phalaas. They approached their mother Aditi for solace and advice and in turn she reached her husband Kashyapa Muni. Kashyapa found the situation was delicate and even Brahma might find it difficult as strictly speaking the record of Daityas was above board! Brahma advised that the only way out would be that Tapasya and Aditi would perform strict Tapasya to Vishnu Deva and seek the most difficult boon of Vishnu taking birth as their son! The Couple reached the Banks of Kshira Samudra at a holy spot called Amrita, performed austere Tapasya and ‘Kaamada Vrata’ for thousand years by controlling their Indriyas, observing silence and Kashyapa chanted Veda Yukta Sukta called Parama Stuti as follows: ‘Deva Deva, Eka Shringa, Vrishaarchi, Sindhuvrusha, Vrishaakapi, Suravrisha, Anaadi Sambhava, Rudra, Kapila, Vishvaksena, Sarva Bhupati, Dhruva, Dharmadharma, Vaikuntha, Vrisha Karta, Anadi -

I prostrate before you and touch your feet; You are commended as Sahasratva, Pushpahaasa, Charama / Sarvotthama; You are known as Vushta and Vashatkaara; You are Agrya or Sarvotthama, Yagna Praashita or Bhokta, Sahasra dhaara; You are the Bhur-Bhuva-Swah Swarupa; Veda Vedy or Recognisable through Vedas; Brahmashaya, Brahmanapriya; Dhyouh or Sarvavyapi like the Sky; Maatarishwa or Speedy like Vayu; Dharma, Hota, Potha / Vishnu; Mantaa, Netaa, Homa hetu or the Root Cause of Homa; Vishvateja, Agrya or Sarvasreshtha, Subhanda or like the Huge Patrarupa encompassing all Dishaas; You are worthy of Yajana or Ijya; Sumedha, Samidha, Mati, Gati, and Daataa; You are Moksha, Yoga, Srashta or the Supreme Creator; Dhata / Dhaarana and Poshana Karta; Parama Yagna, Soma, Dikshita, Dakshina and Vishwa; You are Sthavira, Hiranyanaabha, Narayana, Trinayana, Adityavarna, Aditya Teja, Maha Purusha, Purushottama, Adi Deva, Suvikrama, Prabhakara, Shambhu, Swayambhu, Bhugtaadi, Maha Bhuta, Vishwa Bhuta, and Vishwa; You are the Samsaara Raksha, Pavitra, Vishwa bhava or Vishwa Srashta, Urthwa Karma or Uttama Karma, Amrita or Everlasting, Divaspati, Vaachaspati, Ghrutaarchi, Anantakarma, Vamsha, Pragvamsha, Vishwapa or Vishwa Paalaka, Varada or the Bestower of boons; and finally, You are the Hotraatma or who is responsible for producing Agnihotra by way of the seventeen counted Aksharaas or Letters viz. Four 'Aashraavayas' plus four 'Astu Shroushads' plus two 'Yajaas' plus five 'Yajaamahyes' and again two 'Vashats' Aditi made a commendatory appeal to Janaardana separately and said: 'Prabho! I am grieving with unimaginable anguish which could be destroyed only by you. My Salutations to You Bhagavan who sports lotus garlands and Pushakara malaas; You are the Adi Vidhata who is an embodiment of propitiousness! You are Kamala Nayana, Padmanaabha, the Creator of Brahma, Atmajanma, Lakshmi Pati, Indriya damana, worthy of darshan only by Samayama Yogis, Sudarshana and Khadga dhaari! Only those 'Atmagyanayuta' Yagnakartas, Yogadhyaanis and Yoga Saadhakaas could aspire to visualise your Gunarahita Brahma Swarupa! May I pay my obeisances to you Sharanga Dhari Deva! as you occupy the whole world in a Gross Form and yet possess the tiniest Form which is invisible! Those persons who do not make efforts to visualise you do not get your Darshan any way, but those who have no other desire in life excepting you would readily witness you are blessed with your image in their hearts always for the asking! Your unbelievable Jyoti or extraordinary Radiance is all-pervading in the entire Universe in which you are present invisibly and contrarily the Universe is but an integral segment of You Parama Deva! In other words, You are all over the Universe, the Universe was created by you and in fact the Universe is of Yours! My humble greetings to you the original Prajapati! Pitara Sreshtha! Devata Swami! Shri Krishna! Here are my Pranaams again and again! You are the Supreme Objective of Pravritti and Nivritti Deeds (Ritualistic and Directly unswerving approach) and the Unique Decider of bestowing Swarga or Moksha the Eternal Bliss! My namashkaaraas to you Vishuddha Swarupa as even my taking your very name and memory would smash all my sins! You are the Avinaashi or Indestructible; Akhilaadhara or the Mighty Clutch of the Entirety; the Only Reliever of the Trap of Birth-Death Cycle! You are perceptible through Yagnaas, the Yagna Murti, the Yagna Sthita and Yagna Purusha! Vedas commend you, Vedajnaas sing your hymns, You are the 'Vidwadjanaashraya' or the one who is fond of the Company of Vidwadjanaas. My Most Revered Paramaatma! The whole Vishwa is your Creation, Sustenance and also the Termination thus You are the Vishva Kartha, Vishva Bharta and the Vishva Harta! I pray to that Highest Magnificence who materialised Surya Swarupa and destroyed darkness for good. To that Sarveswara, the Ajanma, Avyaya, Srashta and Vishnu who is fully aware of the Truth about me and the transparency and earnestness of my Prayers that I am prostrating with humility craving him to grant my wish! As both Kashyapa Muni and Devi Aditi made their Soul-full Prayers, the impossible Darshan of Bhagavan Vishnu appeared and granted the wish that he would indeed assume His Incarnation with a view to reinstate Indra and Devas to Swarga and Trilokas.

As Aditi got conceived and Bhagavan Vishnu agreed to do so, Prithvi got tremored, Mountains were shaken, and Sapta Samudras were agitated with wobbles of waves and there was strangeness all-around! Bali Chakravarti felt that there were considerable changes in the Nature as mountains were trembling and high Sea tides were on new high and more so Daityas were experiencing paleness and loss of their normal instincts of courage, assertiveness and egoism. Bali approached his grand father Prahlada and asked for the causes of these omens and premonitions. Parama Bhakta Prahlada deeply meditated Bhagavan Srihari and visualised the latter in the Garbha of Devi Aditi and had fleeting scenes of Ashtaadasha Vasus, Ekadasha Rudras, Dwadasha Adityas, two Ashvini Kumaraas, Forty Nine Maruts, Sandhyas, Vishwa Devas, Gandharvas, Nagas, Rakshasaas, his Son Virochana, Bali Chakravarti, Jambha, Kujumbha, Narakasura, Baana, and several other Daityas, Pancha Bhutas, Seas, Mountains, Rivers, Satpa Dwipaas, Brahma, Shiva, Nava Grahas, Daksha and other Prajapatis, Sapta Rishis and so on. Prahlada gave a heavy exhalation and conveyed the details what all he visioned and said that the Greatest Narayana in would soon be descending on Earth in his incarnation as Vamana Deva! Bali could not comprehend the full import of what Prahlada underlined and expressed his surprise whether Vamana Deva could be ever comparable with the Senior most Rakshasaas like Viprachitta, Shibi, Sankha, Ayamshanku, Hayashira, Ashwa Shira, Bhanga kaara, Maha Hanu, Kakkuraaksha and Durjaya. As Bali talked in such thoughtless comparisons with Paramatma and some examples of Danavas however mighty they might be, Prahlada got highly infuriated and shouted at Bali that there could not be bigger immature fool and hollow minded; he said that Bali's evil frame of mind would certainly lead the entire Vamsha of Daityas to doom. 'Bali! I have not come across a King of this kind who is evil-minded and dull-witted that could blame the Devaadhi Deva, Maha Bhaga, Sarva Vyaapi Vaasudeva; the names of the Daityas that you have taken as the so-called Mighty as also of Brahma and Devas were created by that Paramatma; indeed with just one 'Amsha' of myriad of his Amshaas, he created the whole 'Charaacharaas' and 'Samasta Vibhutip' or Manifestations including you, me, Daityas, Parvataas, Vrikshaas, Rivers, Forests, Samudraas, Sapta Dwipas, and so on and He is Sarva-Vandya, Sarva-Vyapi, and Sarva-Vidita; would there be a Vivekaheen-Murkha-Durbuddhi like you who would pass judgments on Him! What-ever are the reasons due to which you are faulting your Guru/ your father, or his father who is me or the Parama Guru who is Paramatma might be best known to you! Your talking slightly against Narayana is by far the worst since it tantamounts to cutting my head and it is to set right those feelings of pride and egotism that I am giving you a 'Shaap' / Curse that soon you would be dislocated from your Kingdom, Aishwarya, and ego. Chakravarti Bali was distraught and distressed at this most unfortunate happening of Prahlada's curse and was ashamed of himself for his rash, thoughtless and sinful belittling of Bhagavan's uniqueness which had understandably stirred up the anger of a legendary Bhakta of the unparalleled stature of Prahlada. He confessed that there was a total loss of his mental faculties when he conversed at that time due to superciliousness and over-enthusiasm of having defeated Devas which propelled his traits of arrogance; indeed his remarks had correctly hurt his grand father who was fully justified in giving him an irreparable curse but far worse than the curse, his behaviour which hurt elders, like Prahlada, who built a reputation of the family as Narayana Bhaktas, was sullied in the memory of future generations. This was humiliating to the Vamsha that he was squarely responsible! He begged of Prahlada's forgiveness which he did not deserve and would feel repentant ever day and night. Prahlada appreciated Bali's remorse and said that he was incensed up at that moment and the anger led him to obsession which lost his mental equilibrium that caused the pronouncement of the curse, for which he felt extremely sad. But a lesson was provided to Bali and fully converted him as a Parama Bhakta of Narayana.

Mean while, Devi Aditi delivered a lovely male child in short stature when Nature assumed a blossomed freshness that was rare, the Gagana Mandala was clean without any trace of pollution and Vayu was pleasantly soft and nicely odoured quite unfamiliar in the human world. The proud parents invited Brahma to perform Jaatakarma and Namakarana as Vamana Murti. Brahma Stuti to Vamana Deva :It was at that time when Brahma could not suppress his emotions and broke in his ecstasy into an instant Eulogy as follows: 'Victory to you Adheesha, Ajeya, Vishwa Guru Hari, Ananta who is devoid of Birth and End; Achyuta, Ajiota, Asesha, Avyakta Sthita Bhagavan, Paramaatha Puri Nimita, Sarvajna who distinguishes Jnaana and Jneya, Asesha Jagat Saakshi, Jagat Kartaa, Jagat Guru, Jagat-Ajagat Sthita or

Existent in Charaachara; Paa lana-Pralaya Swami, Akhila, Asesha, Sarva Hridaya Sthita; Adi-Madhyama-Anta Swarupa; Samasta Jnaana Murti, Uttama, Visualisable only by Mumukshaas, Mukti Sadhana by Yoga sevitaas, Nitya Prasanna and Parameshwara who is ornamented by Dama, Kshama and such other qualities; Atyanta Sukshma Swarupa, Durjeya or realisable with great difficulty; Sthula (Gross) and at the sametime AtiSukhsma (Tiniest); Indriya Sahita and Indriya Rahita; Mayaayuta yogastitha; Sesha shaayi Avinaashi; Bahurupa dhaari; Ekadamshttra Prithvyoddhaara Varaha Rupa or Varaha Rupa who lifted Earth with a single tusk; Hiranyakahipa vakshasthala vidirna Nrisimha; Maya Vaamanarupa dhara; Mayaavruta Samsara dharana Parameswara or the Holder of Samsara surrounded by Maya; Dhyaananeeka Swarupa dhaarana karaa; Eka Vidhi Vibho! You are the epitome of Buddhi / Intellect; Jagaddharma marga Sthita Prabho! Myself, Shankara, Indra, Sanakaadi Munis and Maha Yogiganaas had failed to understand about you as we are all shrouded by Vishnu Maya; who else could gauge your personality excepting your self! Only those who are dedicated to you and are ever-engaged with your constant 'Araadhana' could have a chance of pleasing you and none else. Ishwreshwara! Ishaana! Vibho! Bhavana! Vishwatma! Pruthulochana! Vishwa Prabhava or Srishti kaarana! Vishnu! May you grow from strength to strength! Victory to you Paramatma!' As Bhagavan Hrishikesha was prayed to by Brahma, the former smiled and said that in the past Indra and Devas and Kashyapa Muni as also Devi Aditi paid their homages and recited Stotras to him and he assured that he would assume the incarnation of Vamamna Murti; he further assured that he would have Indra and Devatas reinstated as Trilokaadhipatis soon. In course of time Brahma offered Krishna Mrigacharma to Bhagavan and Brihaspati performed Upanayana and Yagnopaveeta dharana; Marichi Maharshi gifted Palaasha danda, Visishtha gave kamandalu, Angira Muni gave a Silk Vastra, Pulaha Muni gave a mat as Aasana, and various other Munis taught the Vatu the purport of Omkaara, Vedas, Shastras, Sankhya Yoga, Darshana Yuktis etc. Having been trained in all these disciplines, Vamana Deva had one fine morning left for the Yagna Shaala of Bali Chakravarti as the latter was executing a Sacred Yagna while carrying his mat, danda /stick, chhatra / umbrella and kamandulu / water vessel. Danava Guru Shukracharya was aware that Vishnu Deva in the form of Vamana Murti was arriving at the Yagna and briefed Bali Chakravarti to be extremely careful as Vishnu was a saave and highly talented person to put words in the mouths of the opponents. The Guru reminded Chakravarti that the latter denied the age-old practice of rights to yagna's shares to Devataas and that Vamana Murti might as well ask for the revival of the practice but those shares were now enjoying by Danava Chiefs. Bali replied to Danava Guru that in case Vishnu in the incarnation of Vamana Murti came and requested for any thing then how could a King say 'no' to it! Bali told the Danava Guru: *Brahman katha -maham bruyaamanyapihi yachitah, Naastiti kim Devasya Samsaarasyaaghahaarinah/ Vratopa- vaasairvividhairayah Prabhurgrunhatey Harih, Sa mey vakshyati deheeti Govindah kimato -dhikam? Naasteeti yanmayanoktamanyeshaamapi yaachataam, Vakshyaami kathamaaya -tey tadadya chaamarechutey/Shlaagha eva hi veeraanam Daanaacchaapt samaagamah, Na badhaakaari yadyaanam tadanga Balavat smrutam/ (Brahmanaachaarya! How could I deny any body requesting me for a favour! And if that Supreme Deva asked me for a charity, then what else would be the alternative! While Parameswara received the fruits of Vrataas, Upavaasaas, and so on from one and all, and if that Parameswara himself asked a boon from me, could there be a greater fortune to me! When even an ordinary person approached me for a favour, then too that could not be denied by a King; then when Narayana himself asked for it, could such an opportunity presented itself, this chance could never indeed be missed. Even if there are difficulties in executing a charity, the value of charity would get multiplied and 'Veera purushaas' would never deter from performing the deed) Having said the above, Bali asked Shukraachaarya: YatagjnaatwaaMunisreshtha!Daanavighna karenamey, Naiva Bhavyam Jagannaatheey Govidey samupastitheey! (By understanding the above, Munisreshtha! Please do not create 'Daana Vighnaas' or hurdles in the execution of the Charity!). As Vamana Deva arrived at the Yagna shaala, Bali welcomed him, offered 'Arghya', 'Aasana', Puja and offered him limitless gold, jewellery, elephants, horses, cows, women, clothes, bunches of villages or townships or whatever would be his wish! Vamana Deva replied smilingly: Mamagnisharanaaarthaaya dehi Rajan Padatrayam, Suvarnagraamaratnaadi tadarthibhyah pradeeyataam/ (Raja! Please provide to me three feet of land to enable me to set up an Agni- Shaala). Bali said that after all three feet would be nothing as he could ask* for a lakh of feet which could be given away, but Vamana Deva replied that he was indeed satisfied with that much of Bhumi and if the King were to offer more he might as well provide to the other needy! Bali Chakravarti readily agreed not understanding the implication and as the deed of Daana was being executed and Vamana Deva extended his hand to the King and expanded his Vamana Rupa gradually immediately: Sarva Devamayam rupam darshayaamaasa tatksanaat/ Chandra Suryoutu nayaney dyouh shirascharanou Kshitih, Paadaangulyah Pishaachaastu Hastaangulya –scha Gruhakaah/ Vishvedevaascha jaanusthaa janghey Saadhyaah Surottamaah, Yakshaa naksheshu sambhuta rekhaapsaraastathaa/ Drushtirrukshaanya seshaani keshaaah Suryamshvah Prabho, Taarakaa romakupaani romeshu cha Maharshayah/ Baahavo vidishatasya Dishaah Shrotrey Mahatmanah, Ashvinou Shravaney tasya naasaa Vayurmahaatmanah/ Prasadey Chandramaa Devo Mano Dharmah samaashritah, Satyasyaabhavad Vaani Jihvaa Devi Saraswati/ Greevaarditirdeva mataa Vidyaastadvalayastathaa, Swargadwaaramabhunmaitra twashtaa Pushaa cha vai bhruvou/ Mukhe Vaishvaanarschaascha vrushanou tu Prajaapatih, Hridayamcha Param Brahma Pumstwam vai Kashapo Munih/ Prushtesya Vasavo Devaa Marutah Sarva saandhishu, Vakshasthaley tathaa Rudro Dharryachaasya Mahaarnavah/ Udarey chaasya Gandharvaa Marutascha Mahaabalaah, Lakshmirmedhaa Dhrutih Kaantih Sarv Vidyaascha vai Katih/ Sarvajyoteesham Yaaneeha Tapascha Paramam mahat, Tasya Devaadhi Devasya tejah prodbhutamuttamam/ Tanou Kukshishu Vedaascha jaanuni cha Mahaamakhaah, Ishtayah pashavaschaasya Dwujaanaam cheshtitaanicha/ Tasya Devamayam rupam drushtaa Vishnormahaatmanah, Upasarpanti tey Daityaah patangaa iva paavaakam/ Chakshurastu Mahaa Daityaah Paadaangushtham gruheetavaan, Dantaabhyaam tasya vai greevaa mangushtheynaahana dharih/ Prathamya Sarvaansuraan Paadahastathalairvibhuh, Krutwaa Rupam Mahaakaayam Samjahaaraashu Modineem/ Tasya Vikramato Bhumim Chandraadityaou stanaantarey, Nabho Vikramamaanasya sakhidesho stitathaarvibhou/Param Vikramaanasya jaanumuley Prabhaakarou, Vishnoraastaam sthitasyaitow Devapaalana jkarmani/ Jitwaa Lokatrayam taamscha hatwaachaasura pungavaan, Purandaraaya Trailokyam dadou Vishnururukramah/

(Instantly, Vamana Murti displayed his Virat Swarupa: Chandra and Surya were his two Eyes, Shy was his head, Prithvi his feet, Pishachaas were his foot-fingers, Gruhyakaas were his hand fingers, Vishwa Deva Ganaas were in his jaanus /knees, Sadhyas were his janghaas, Yakshaas were his nails, Apsarsaas were his palm lines, Nakshatras were his Eye sight, Surya kiranas were his hairs, Stars were his body hairs, Maharshiganaas were in the hair roots, Vidishas were his hands, Dishaas were his ears, Ashwini Kumars were his faculty of hearing, Vayu was his nose, Chandra Deva was his joking faculty, Dharma Deva was his thinking capacity, Satya was his voice and Saraswati was his tongue, Deva Mata Aditi was his neck, Vidya was his valiyaas or long poles; Pushas were his eye brows, Swarga dwar was his anus, Vaishvanara his face, Prajapati his vrushanaas, Param Brahma was his heart, Kashyapa Muni was his Pumstwa, Vasu Devata was his back, Marutganaas were his Sandhis, Rudra was his Vakshasthala, Mahaarnavaa was his Dhairya, Gangharvas were in his stomach; Lakshmi, Medha, Dhruti, Kaanti and all Vidyaas were in his ‘Kati Pradesha’; the luster and radiance in the total Universe as also the Tapo teja or the power of meditation was the reflection of the magnificence of Natayana; Vedas and Scriptures and the huge Yagnaas and the Sacred Deeds of the Virtuous like Maharshis and Brahmanas were all inside in his ‘kukshi’ or belly. On viewing the Paramatma’s ‘Virat Swarupa’, the so called ‘Mahaasuraas’ referred to earlier in ignorance by Chakravarti Bali before Prahlada’s curse to him got burnt off like flies before a gigantic out break of Fire! Having thus occupied the Universe in totality including the sub-terrain Sapta Paatalaas, Vamana Deva stated that since Bali took the water in his hand and donated the THREE FEET of Land, and blessed him to be the King of the Sapta Paatalaas and granted him long life till the end of Manvantara of the on-going Vaisawata Manu. He also blessed Bali that all the ‘Homa Phalas’ at the time of Shraddhas to be performed even by Brahmanas, besides incomplete and defective Vratas, Agni Kaaryaas without ghee, and Kusha grass roots as also the daanas without detachment would belong to Bali and his followers.

Brahmarshi Vishvamitra s approached by Rama Lakshmanas to explain them vividly as to how and when the Rakshasaas were in the habit of destroying the yajni karyas of the tapasvees in the ashrama. Then the ashramavaasi rishis near Vishvamitra replied that Maharshi Vishvamitra had already assumed ‘mouna vrata’ for six days, and thus Rama Lakshmanas would need to be extremely vigilant for six nights long and safeguard from the attacks of the ‘nishaacharaas’. Accordingly Rama Lakshmanas being alert ‘dhanurdharaas’ had been vigilant standing just by the side of the Maharshi. As ‘agni jvalaas’ came up initiated by ‘Upaadhyaya’ or of the role of Brahma- ‘Purohita’ of the role of Upadrashtha, the flames went up too high as a forewarning indicators of the enrtty of the rakshasaas. Then Vishvamitra along with the Ritvijas initiated the ‘aahananeeyaagni’ [Panchaagnis being described as Garhapatya- Aahavaneeya- Dakshinaagni-Sabyha and Avasatya representing Heaven-Clouds-Earth- Man and Woman vide Kathopa - nishad]. Mantravac ca yathānyāyam yajño 'sau saṁpravartate, ākāśe ca mahāñ śabdaḥ prādur āsīd bhayānakah/ āvārya gaganam megho yathā prāvṛṣi nirgataḥ, tathā māyām vikurvāṇau rākṣasāv abhyadhāvatām/ mārīcaś ca subāhuś ca taylor anucarās tathā, āgamyā bhīmasaṁkāśā rudhiraughān avāsrjan/ As the resonance of the mantras recited in a pitch increased, there came up the high sounds on the sky with reverberations and dark clouds reflected the massive figures of rakshasaas named Maareecha and Subaahu and initiated pourings of blood from the high skies, even as groups of other rakshasaas started yelling and joined the task of pouring blood. Rama then addressed Lakshmana and stated that the rakshasaas had now arrived and both the Kumaras pitched up their arrows reciting the relevant mantras of ‘Maanavaastra’. The arrow from Shri Rama was shot at and pierced Maricha’s chest and the latter was farflung by hundred yojanas into the depths of the Sea. Smilingly, Rama told Lakshmana that this Mantra of ‘Manavasatra’ had only helped to faint and farflung Maricha but now let ‘agneyastra’ be released so that the other mighty Subaahu be killed for good! So saying as Subaahu was killed, the rest of the rakshasas fled away for good never ever to return. This was how Raghunandana Shri Rama got rid of all the rakshasa elements of evil energies wantonly spoiling the dharmic duties of yajna karyas by Munis for a very long time. The grateful indwellers of the Ashram praised Rama Lakshmanas under the supreme leadership of Brahmarshi Vishvamitra himself.

Maharshi Vishvamitra and Rama Lakshmanas were greatly contented and so were the ‘ashrama vaashis’ and after a night long restful sleep . Thereafter following the morning duties the visiting trio desired to perform farewell; the grateful hosts informed the Maharshi and Rama Lakshmanas that the ‘ashrama vaasis’ were all invited to a maha yajna which was to be soon organised by the King of Mithila named Janaka. The King was in possession of a colossal and celestial ‘dhanush ‘ worthy of seeing especially by Rama Lakshmanas. That dhanush was stated to be unparalleled and was reputed as unbreakable, let alone be lifted up even by Deva-Gandharva-Asura -Rakshasaas despite their physical and mental grit. Dhanuṣas tasya vīryam hi jijñāsanto mahikṣitāḥ, na śekur āropayitum rājaputrā mahābalāḥ/ tad dhanur naraśārdūla maithilasya mahātmanah, tatra drakṣyasi kākutstha yajñam cādbhutadarśanam/ With a view to assessing the weight and massiveness of the dhanush, hundreds of Raja Raja- Kumaras had arrived in teams but failed miserably to move it let alone lift it, maneuver and pull it down. It was learnt that King Janaka having performed a maha yajna in the past was blessed by Bhagavan Shankara assuming the form of the Yajna Purusha emerging from the flames gifted the Dhanush to the King as a mark of a series of such yajna karyaas. It was stated that the spot of holding and hadling the dhanush was marvellous to look at. ‘Raghunandana! This celestial dhanush was stated to have been placed after invoking Devas at the center of a huge hall and was duly worshipped with Vedic Verses daily with gandha-dhupa-pushpa- naivedyas. As the inmates of the ashrama had thus described, Maharshi Vishvamitra accompanied by Rama Lakshmanas moved forward into thick forests and seemed to have indicated to Vana Devatas that they would seek to reach ‘Siddhashrama’ located towards the northern direction of the sacred Ganga alongside Himalayas. Quite a distance of the difficult terrain followed and a few of the inmates of the Siddhashrama were sighted travelling by bullock carts. By that time they came up to reach the banks of River Shronabhadra, dusk had fallen; Rama Lakshmanas requested Maharshi Vishvamitra to provide details of the adjacent Kingdom which flourished with ‘sasyashyamala’ or enormous of green vegetation and the latter explained being seated amid the group of Rishis.

In another reputed clan named Vidarbha, there was a princess who was wedded to King Kusha. Out of their union, four princes were born viz. Kushamba, Kushanaabha- Asurtarajasa and Vasu. The King always instructed the sons to always follow Dharma and Praja seva. Eventually, he came to be popularly titled as ‘Praja Rakshaka Rupa’. The four sons had eventually built four cities of the kingdom viz. Koushaambi later on named as Kosama as of now. Kusha naabha built another township named ‘Mahodaya’. Asurtarajasa built Dharmaaranya while Vasu built Girivraja and acquired the title of Vasumati. Now toward the southwest of River Sona came up the popular Sumagaadhi. Thus these townships were placed in between mountains as of a necklace form. Further, Maagadhi on the banks of River Sona became popular as related to Vasu. Kushanaabha begot very pretty knayas from Apsara Ghritachi. As they were singing and dancing away in the mountain valleys their youthful prettiness attracted the attention of Vayu Deva who desired to marry all of them so that they could live forever happily. The pretty maidens heckled Vayu Deva and revealed themselves as the daughters of of Rajarshi Kushanaabha and Apsara Ghritachi. The Apsara Kanyas threatened Vayu Deva for his audacious impudence in his approach and as such could even give a shaap to Vayu but their upbringing prevented them to do so. Tāsām tad vacanam śrutvā vāyuh paramakopanaḥ, praviśya sarvagātrāṇi babhaṇja bhagavān prabhuh, tāḥ kanyā vāyunā bhagnā viviśur nṛpater gr̥ham/On hearing such prococative tone of the kanyas, Vayu deva out of his might and sweep disfigured the kanyas as balls of mere flesh and as ‘kubjas’. The kanyas were terrorised and ran to the King. The latter on realising the seriousness of the crisis took a long breath and took to silence pondering over the consequent worsening of the situation.

He further stated that he was proud of your forbearance and self restraint owing to your family background and hence you did not resort to cursing the Vayu Deva! Whether to a man or woman , forgiveness is like a precious possession, especially to celestials. My daughters! Forgiveness is a boon, truthfulness, a Sacrifice, a glory, an outstanding virtue and this kind of patience is indeed like the axis to the universe. This was how the famed King Kushanaabha reacted, told Maharshi Vishvamitra to Shri Rama. The dharma swarupa Kushanaabha when pondered deep about the weddings of the celestial maidens and tried to ascertain about the kingdoms and eligible bachalor princes all over. The King after extensive search then discovered a bright-well read Muni named ‘Chooli’ who was being served volantly in his pujas by a Gandharva Kumari named ‘Sonada’ the daughter of Urmila. Then the Muni was pleased and asked her granting a boon to her and the latter desired to beget an outstanding son of jnaana- vigjnaana. As a result, the Muni manifested a Manasa Putra ‘Brahmadatta’ as the son of Sonada. In course of time, Brahmadatta as he grew as a handsome youth of virtue lived at Kaampilya Nagari. The King then approached Brahmadatta who consented to wed the apsara kanyas as the latter at the auspicious time of the ‘paanigraha’ at the wedding, the apsara kanyas turned as kumbhas by the curse of Vayudeva were resooted of their original forms as Apsaras. Maharshi Vishvamitra thus narrated the glories of Brahma putra Kusha and of his illustrious’s sons.

Raghunandana! As King Kushanabha married off his daughters to Brahmadutta desired to secure a son and proposed the performance of Putra Kamekshi Yajña. Then the Grand King Kusha blessed Kushanabha stating that the latter should beget a famed son Gaadhi who would attain worldwide acclaim and having stated thus had reached Brahma loka prapti. Eventually Gaadhi was born and having become youthful declared himself as Koushika since he was born into Kusha Vamsha. Brahmarshi Vishvamitra then informed Rama Lakshmanas that he had an elder sister named Satyavati married to Richeeka Muni. On the death of Richeeka she reached swarga loka with her own body and eventually returned to Earth as Kaushiki Mahanadi originating from Himalaya Mountains as a ‘Punya Nadi’ of Famed Virtue. Maharshi stated that thanks to Shri Rama he had obtained the opportunity of visiting the Siddhashrama and was nostalgic of the memory of his dear sister now as a river. He then introduced about the territory of the banks of River ‘Shonabhadrā’ and about the furtherance of his own vamsha. By that time as Vishvamitra explained about the background of his own Koushika Vamsha and the night was ushered in and the three some halted for sleep even as animals and birds rested. Even the trees and their branches and leaves got quietened and in the darkness the sky too was lit up with the glitter of stars. In was in that atmosphere on earth, moon shine above ushered in coolness and tranquility. But in that very quietude and stillness, Yaksha- Rakshasa- Pishachas got busy roaming. As Maharshi was describing, Rama Lakshmana and even Vishvamitra himself slipped into sleep gradually.

As Maharshi slept off the remainder of the night and woke up, he woke up Rama Lakshmanas and after their morning duties the latter enquired as to cross the river for forward journey. Vishvamitra replied that he had already made the plan; they proceeded along the banks of Shonabhadra and reached upto the banks of Ganga while enjoying the scenic charm on the way. On their arrival on the banks, they all had refreshing baths in the river and a large collection of Munis gathered around while Deva Pitru tarpanas were duly performed. Further agni karyas were performed too and havishaanna bhojanas were concluded too. As groups of Maharshis surrounded Vishvamitra-Rama Lakshmanas, the latter asked about the origin and further flows of Ganges till its merger into the Ocean. Vishvamitra explained that the mighty Himavat Mountain range King surfiert with 'dhaatus' had two illustrious women of unparalleled beauty and grace one as the wife and another as a daughter named Devi Mena and Devi Parvati respectively. Tasyāṁ gaṅgeyam abhavaj jyeṣṭhā himavataḥ sutā, umā nāma dvitīyābhūt kanyā tasyaiva rāghava/ Raghunandana! Devi Mena was blessed with a daughter reputed as Ganga even before the birth of Parvati. But Devas requested for Devi Ganga for the reason of 'Loka Kalyaanna' and King Himavant agreed to their supplication: Yā cānyā śailaduhitā kanyāsīd raghunandana, ugraṁ sā vratam āsthāya tapas tepe tapodhanā/ ugreṇa tapasā yuktām dadau śailavaraḥ sutām, rudrāyāpratirūpāya umām lokanamaskṛtām/ Rama! The second daughter Devi Parvati took to severe tapasya for long number of years and amassed name and fame from that outstanding spiritual wealth and eventually got wedded to Maha Deva. Such was the glory of the two daughters of Himavanta viz. Ganga and Girija worthy of prostrations of the entire worlds.

As Brahmarshi Vishvamitra explained about the everlasting splendor of both the Devis of Ganga and Parvati, Rama Laxshmanas were excited to know of Devi Ganga first in detail. How was Ganga named ‘Triloka Dhaaraas’ or of the Three Flows of Bhur-Bhuva-Svargas! Then Maharshi Vishmamitra commenced explaining in detail. In the days of yore, Maha Parama Shiva and Devi Parvati as just married were enjoying the post wedding bliss. This was carried on for several divine years but still Devi Parvati did not conceive yet. Devas were worried that there was yet no conception of Parvati for a very long time. They approached Parama Shiva - Devi Parvatis and after due prostrations requested them to take to ‘tapasya’. Trailokyahitakāmārtham tejas tejasi dhāraya, rakṣa sarvān imāṁ lokān nālokaṁ kartum arhasi/ Maha Deva Devis! For the sake of the welfare of Trilokas, we all entreat you to deposit your combined semen together so that ‘loka raksha’ be made possible with the joyous birth of a son could indeed be reality and the entire universe be protected. evam uktās tato devāḥ pratyūcur vṛṣabhadhvajam, yat tejaḥ kṣubhitam hy etat tad dharā dhārayiṣyati/ evam uktaḥ surapatiḥ pramumoca mahītale, tejasā pṛthivī yena vyāptā sagirikānanā/ tato devāḥ punar idam ūcuś cātha hutāśanam, praviśa tvaṁ mahātejo raudram vāyusamanvitah/ Maha Deva however queried as to who indeed could ever possibly hold the semen so manifested of his union with Devi Parvati! Devas replied that Bhu Devi should be able to withstand the force the spell of the sperm. As Devas’s provided the solution, Maha Deva released the semen and Bhu Devi was rattled as the mountains and forests were inundated with the sperm. Instantly Indra directed to devour it with the assistance of Vayu Deva then the mountain like deposit. In turn the mammoth deposits got distributed on the flows of Ganga all over the ‘sarkandas’ or river bed sprouted plants. yatra jāto mahātejāḥ kārṭikeyo 'gnisambhavaḥ, athomām ca śivaṁ caiva devāḥ sarṣi gaṇās tadā, pūjayām āsur atyartham supṛitamānasas tataḥ/ Thus the agni born Kartikeya was manifested and Deva-Rishi groups were rejoiced as never before, especially due to Tarakasura was torturing ‘trilokas’ at that very time. But having realised all these manipulations by Indra and Deva Maharshis, Uma Devi was none too happy and gave a ‘shaap’ to Devas that there after they would be ‘santaana heenaas’ without offspring. She also cursed Bhu Devi that the latter would not of one uniform form and that she would be the wife of several husbands. As the Devas and Bhu Devi too were cursed by Gauri likewise, Shiva became unhappy and turned his face westward. There after both Shiva and Gauri disappeared long time to perform deep tapasya.

Vishleshana on Kartikeya: There are three versions of Skanda Deva janana in Padma Purana, Skanda Purana and Matsya Puranas; especially in regard to Skanda Kumara Janma

Padma Purana first :Tarakasura was too powerful to Devas whose soldiers were badly bruised and ran without direction. Indra and Devas approached Brahma and he replied that none excepting a seven day son of Shiva and Devi Parvati, called 'Kartikeya' could kill Tarakasura and none else in the world. At this juncture, Indra prayed to Sage Narada to advise further plan in the context of the birth of Kartikeya. The Sage designed a route-map of action, first to approach Himavanta and his wife Mena as also Parvati to prepare them to wed Mahadeva; to secure access to Mahadeva for his consent to let Parvati assist the former in his daily Pujas and approach Kama Deva and Rati Devi to stealthly despatch 'Pushpa Baanas' or Amorous Arrows of Love in favour of Parvati while she was in service to Mahadeva. But the Plan did not quite succeed as Mahadeva's eyes searched for Kama Deva and burnt him off with his third eye. As Devi Rati prayed to Maha Deva, the latter assured that Kama Deva would soon be created again as 'Ananga' or devoid of Physique. As Devi Parvati was shaken by the news of Kama Deva's turning into ashes, she decided to take to Tapasya; her father Himavan addressed the daughter to say: 'U' 'Ma' meaning 'Don't do so'! But still she left to such a Place to perform rigorous Tapasya where even Devas did not desire to visit and was so inaccessible at the heights of Himalayas. As the Plan as scripted by Narada Muni was not yet in place, Indra prayed to 'Sapta Rishis' to intervene. The Rishis tested her unambiguous decision to perform the severe Tapasya by arguing with her that she was bent on marrying Maha Deva and none else; in fact she became angry with the Rishis that she reacted sharply against them and even condemned them to suggest any other name as her spouse excepting Shiva Deva. Sapta Rishis approached Maha Deva, underlined Parvati's strong mental make up to wed only Maha Deva and emphasised the angle of 'Loka Kalyan' or the Universal Cause of destroying Tarakasura which could be accomplished only through the wedding with Parvati. For a number of years, Shiva and Parvati were in a joyful mood after their marriage and there was little news for Indras and Devas about the possible arrival of Kartikeya who alone could terminate Tatakasura. Agni Deva took the form of a parrot and entered the Palace of Shiva and Parvati who found that Parvati was enjoying a bath in a Sarovar playing with lotus flowers and Lord Shiva was resting in his bed. She found six Krittikas in the Sarovar and told them that she was desirous of seeing the water drops inside the lotus bulbs; the Kritthikas replied in fun that they would show the water drops provided they allow them also to share the joy of a child in her 'garbha'! The Krittikas further said that they should allow them too to own the child as their own as much as that of Devi Parvati and she agreed to the mutual deal; Krittikas showed the water drops inside the lotus bulb and drank them. As soon as she drank the water drops, there emerged a handsome and healthy boy from Devi Parvati's right abdomen with Sun-like luster and a powerful Physique wearing a 'Shula' and 'Ankush' in both of his hands. He was called 'Kumar' as many entities claimed parentage mainly of course by Lord Shiva and Devi Parvati but also the Krittikas and even Agni. The boy had six brilliant faces and was popularly called by several names viz. Vishakha, Shanmukha, Skanda, Shadaanana and Kartikeya. Brahma, Vishnu, Indra and various Devas gifted the Child several valuable souvenirs like Chandan, Malas, Dhup, Toys, Umbrellas, and Bhushans and instantly appointed him as the Senapati or the Commander-in-Chief of Devas. Lord Vishnu presented several 'Ayudhas' or Arms; Kubera provided ten lakh of Yaksha Sena; Agni gave his Tej (Radiance) and Vayu provided speed as his 'Vahan' (Chariot). Kumar desired to ascertain as to what he could do for them and in one voice they wanted the demon Tarakasura to be killed and Kumar assured saying: So be it! Inspired by what Skanda Deva guaranteed, Indra sent an emissary to Tarakasura saying that soon Indra and Devas would arrive to destroy the demon and his followers. Danavas wondered that an additional Shakti must have joined the Deva Sena as otherwise they would not dare send a messenger alerting them to come prepared for a battle! Tarakasura remembered Brahma's boon to him with the qualification of the risk of his death in the hands of a boy! Even Kalanemi and other Daityas had creepy feelings about the might of the stranger who joined the Deva Sena. As Tarakasura saw finally saw the so-called additional Shakti, he laughed away and made fun of the baby boy; he said that Devas did great injustice in projecting him ahead of them so that they could conveniently run away if need be! Kumar replied that there was no need to make fun of us since in a battle of 'Shastras', there was the brain power that was important but not the brute force; moreover, one did not require a huge serpent to kill an opponent but even a tiny snake could finish off the enemy by a small bite of poison! Bala Surya was always difficult to look at and never under-estimate a boy! Even as Kumar's reply was over, the Asura threw a musala but the reply by way of a mighty Chakra from Kumar was instantaneous. The Daitya threw a metallic Bhindipal which Kumar stopped merely by one of his hands. Kartikeya targetted a ferocious mace which made ear-blowing sound and the demon was hardly able to escape its impact. The demon then realised that this boy was not an ordinary kid and one had to be tough with him; he used a very powerful Shastra which was undone by Kartikeya instantly. Then Kartikeya came into his form and massacred thousands of demons and the so-called mighty demons like Kalanemi could hardly defend themselves and ran away to save their skins. As a last resort, Tarakasura hit Kumar's vahana of Peacock and going wild with this act, Kumara finally used the 'Nirmal Shakti' in his hands and threw it with force and speed and the Shakti dazzled the demon's vision; he tried his best but could not evade it since it flew behind wherever he went and ultimately pierced into his heart as the mountain-like Tarakasura fell making a thud, like a cloud-burst and the handful soldiers of the huge army of Davanas left behind alive ran for their lives. Devas went into a state of ecstasy with loud shouts and battle-cries of relief showering fragrant flowers all around, Gandharvas sang earsplitting songs of victory, Apsaras danced with gay abandon and the whole Universe wore a memorable look of unprecedented carnival. Vishnu and Brahma were highly satisfied that finally Dharma and Nyaya were vindicated by Kumara. Maha Deva and Devi Parvati seated on Nandi with Ganesha and Kartikeya flew across to Kailasa Mountain witnessing festivities all along the route!

Skanda Purana: Indeed the unprecedented and the Most Glorious Wedding of Siva-Parvati was the unique talk of the entire Universe. At the Wedding 'Muhurat', Himavan declared: 'I, Himavan of the Gotra and clan of Mountains have the greatest privilege of offering the hand of my daughter Devi Parvati to Parama Siva in the august presence of Brahma and Vishnu. In turn, I wish to know the Gotra and Vamsa of Bhagavan'. As Sage Narada lifted his Veena instrument, Himavan stopped Narada not to play on it as a reply about the Gotra and Vamsa of Bhagavan; Narada told Himavan that the Gotra and Vamsa of Maha Siva was 'Naad' or Sound and that was why Narada lifted the Veena as a reply! Bhagavan is 'Naadamaya' or the Embodiment of Naada and one could realise Siva only through Naada, as He has no Gotra and no Vamsa since He is above these nomenclatures and yet belongs to all Gotras and all Vamsas. He has neither beginning nor end; He is the Most Supreme Energy beyond comprehension! Then Himavan gave the 'Kanyadaan' or the offering of his daughter saying: 'Imam Kanyaam thubhyamaham dadami Parameswara! Bharyartham prathi gruhneeshva' (Parameswara! I am offering my daughter as your 'Dharma Patni'; kindly accept). After wedding, Maha Deva and Devi Parvathi moved on to Mountain Gandhamadan to a luxurious and lonely place for their honeymoon. As Bhagavan's virility was so potent that parts of humanity were getting destroyed and Vishnu asked Agni Deva to take the form of a Hermit and asked Parvati to donate it and extended his hand which was immediately consumed by Agni even before Her eyes. Parvati got angry and cursed Agni to become 'Sarva Bhakshak' or he who consumes everything. Agni could not bear the brunt of the virility of Maha Siva and begged Him to show a way to pass it on to someone; Siva advised that the same be planted into virtuous women and Sage Narada annotated that such women of high merit taking bath on an early morning in the instant month of Magha would be attracted to Agni and his hot flames and they would be the best choice for the transfer of the virility in particles. As advised by Narada, Kritthikas approached Agni seeking warmth from the cold morning and Agni transferred some drops of virility to the ladies through their skin pores. Kritthikas got pregnant and their angry husbands gave a curse to them to roam on the Sky. They became Stars in a constellation and aborted their pregnancies. The major portion of the virility got left however on top of the Himalayas which was lifted by a crane and pushed into Ganges and the drops which were radiant like fire sparks got meshed up in the river bed plants (Sarkhand) of Ganges, who carried the foetus to a secluded place in the bushes thus emerging a Six Headed Child Kartikeya! As soon as the boy of highly chiselled face and limbs was born with extraordinary splendour, there was such illumination that travelled all over the Three Worlds instantly. Siva Deva and Devi Parvati appeared at once on their Vrishaba carrier and were overwhelmed with parental love and affection. Soon Brahma, Vishnu, Indra and the entire Devaloka assembled and so did Rishis, Yakshas, Gandharvas and all Celestial Beings. Veerabhadra and Pramathaganas as also the whole entourage of Maha Deva were ecstatic with boundless rapture. Devas put their chins up with indescribable relief that it would not be far for the greatest menace of Takakasura to be devastated by the new arrival on the scene! The whole atmosphere was of liberation, festivity and celebration. The Deities commenced preparations of war to kill Tarakasura but a Celestial Voice was heard that victory would be assured only under the Leadership of Kartikeya and hence all the Devas requested Skanda to become the Chief of the Army of Devas. Meanwhile, Devasena, the daughter of Mrityu Devata, became his wife and hence Skanda was known as Deva Senapati. Kartikeya led the army of Devas of the rank of Indra, Agni, Vayu, Kubera and Yama Dharma Raja and was seated on an elephant. Tarakasura arrived with a huge army of mighty warriors who dominated and controlled the opponents initially. Indra's 'Vajra' was overpowered by Tarakasura's weapon called Shakti and wounded Indra. King Muchukunda who fought for Devas and sought to stop the domination of Daityas but Tarakasura felled him on the ground; Muchukunda wanted to use the 'Brahmastra' but was restrained by Sage Narada as that weapon would no doubt create havoc but would be ineffective to destroy Tarakasura and hence Kartikeya would have to be warmed up gradually. Veerabhadra swung into action and slaughtered thousands of Demons; Tarakasura realised that Veerabhadra was not easy to control and thus used his 'Maya' and assumed a thousand arms. Lord Vishnu suggested that the time was ripe to kill the Big Demon before he became more powerful and asked Skanda to charge him. With his mighty weapon Shakti on hand, Kartikeya chased Tarakasura but the latter retaliated with his own 'Shakti' and even got Skanda unconscious for a while. After quickly recovering his poise, Kartikeya prayed to his parents and released the Maha Shakti which was fortified with the blessings of Bhagavan and Bhagavati and finally annihilated Tarakasura who incidentally was a Great Siva Bhakta! But Siva Himself was so pleased at the valour of the lad who was more than a match to the Greatest Demon of the times who sent shock waves across the Three Worlds! While Devas and Gandharvas were engaged in unending praises and noise of resounding musical notes, Rishis were engaged in Vedic Hymns to please Kartikeya and there was ecstasy across the Globe.

Matsya Purana: The whole Universe was charged with myriad emotions as Shiva as the groom and the party arrived at the bride's palace. At the 'Kalyana Mandapa', the Parvata Raja Himavan was in a state of dazed ecstasy since Parama Shiva himself was his son-in-law. Pranateynaachalendrena Pujittha Chaturmukhah, Chakaara vidhinaa Sarvam Vidhimantra purah saram/ (Parvata Raja performed puja with respects to Brahma and with the full course of formal Mantras, the wedding was celebrated in tradition and dignity); Sharveya Paanigrahana maagneena saakshikamakshatam, Daataa Mahibhrutaam Natho hota Devaschaturmukhah/ Varah Pashupati Saakshaat Kanyaa Vishaaranistathaa (Then Parama Shiva wedded Parvati with Agni Saakshi or in the presence of Agni, when Daata / donor was Himavaan, Brahma as Hota (the Head Priest), Shiva as the bride groom and bride as Aranibhuta Devi Parvati.). Devas were extremely happy that the best was yet to happen; Indra gifted a golden umbrella, Gandharvas sang tuneful songs, Apsaras danced to their best, Kinnaras organised instrumental extravaganza and the whole world celebrated, but of course Daityas and Danavas who had ruled for thousand years were highly dejected quite understandably. After a few days the new couple of Shiva and Devi Parvati took permission of Parvata Raja Himavaan and moved back to Mandarachala. Years passed by and Shiva and Parvati continued to enjoy their marital bliss. Out of fun, Bhagavan Shiva teased Parvati once as follows: Shareerey mama tatwaangi sitey bhaasya sitadyutih, Bhujangee vaasita shuddhaa samslishtaa chandaney tarow/ Chandraatapena sampruktaa ruchirambaraa tathaa, Rajaneevaasitey pakshey drushti dosham dadaasimey/ (Devi Parvati! As your physical colour is rather dark and mine is fair, it looks that a dark serpent is circling a chandana tree! Also, there is a similie -comparison- of a shining Moon against the background of dark cloud on the sky!). Understandably, Parvati was not amused, and in fact, badly hurt, when Shankara made these remarks even as a joke. Instantly, she left out home and proceeded to perform 'Tapasya' to Brahma for a number of years to change her body colour. Any amount of pleading and supplication by Shiva did not change her mind. Meanwhile, the son of Andhakasura and the brother of Bakasura called 'Aadi' performed strict 'Tapas' to Brahma Deva and asked for the boon of 'Amaratwa' or immunity from death. As Brahma could not grant this advantage, Aadi amended the request that he should be able to convert his Body Form as per his wish; Brahma agreed provided that the Daitya could do so only twice. As Veerak was guarding the Entry Point of Shankara and as it was not possible to enter 'Shiva dwar', Aadi converted his Form as a snake and entered Shankara's abode through an under ground hole and slithered in; thereafter Aadi assumed the Form of Devi Parvati, approached Maha Deva and pretended that she had given up Tapasya as the severity of meditation just to change of body colour from 'Krishna Varna' to 'Gaura Varna' was not worth the strict regimen. Parama Shiva was happy initially that she changed her mind and returned back to him. But on second thoughts and knowing that Parvati would not take a flippant decision to return without achieving her objective, he suspected the fake Parvati and killed the 'Mayavi' Daitya. The original Parvati Devi's Tapasya pleased Brahma Deva and blessed her to change her body colour as she pleased either as of Gaura (white)Varna or of Shyama Varna; Parvati returned home to Maha Deva but the unwitting Veeraka, the 'Dwarapalaka' refused her entry to her own house! As any amount of convincing did not help Veeraka, Devi Gauri was tired out to reason him and finally gave a 'Shaap' that he would be born as a human and after the duration of the curse would return to her again. Parama Shiva was so excited as Gauri entered his interior bed room that a delegation of Devas headed by Indra was turned out saying that he was busy. Indra detailed Agni Deva to take the form of a parrot and peep in through a window as to what was happening inside their bed-chamber. Exactly at that time, the parrot peeped in when Shiva-Parvati were actually seen in action on their bed; Shiva noticed the parrot and recognised Agni. He scolded Agni and said now that he created 'Vighna' (obstacle) between him and Parvati and hence he might as well rectify the situation by drinking up his virility. The highly explosive drops shining like molten gold punctured Agni's belly and got spread over the Maha Sarovar nearby. Several lotus flowers which got sprouted all over in the deep waters emitted strong and fragrant scents and the intoxication affected 'Krittikas' who happened to bathe in the Sarovar; the Krittikas desired to take the lotus leaves home but Devi Parvati jocularly remarked to the Krittikas that she could take the drops of water on the lotus leaves as well. In turn Krittikas joked that they would take the water home, provided the child born of the water consumed by them should have equal right to the motherhood of the boy so born! As the deal was struck between Krittikas and Parvati, the Krittika damsels gave the lotus leaves as also the water drops to Parvati. Subsequently, Devi Parvati drank up the water around the lotuses and from her right and left 'kukshis' gave birth to two male children later united into one and the child who had the extraordinary radiance of Surya Deva; each of the Six Krittikas shaped up one head each of the child; thus the boy was named 'Kumara' by Parvati; 'Kartikeya', 'Shanmukha', 'Shadvaktra' by the Krittikas and as 'Vishakha' or the different 'Shakhas'/ branches of the lotus leaves that carried the golden drops. On Chaitra Shukla Shashthi, the child was declared as the 'Deva Senapati'/ the Commander-in- Chief of Devas. Vishnu gifted varieties of 'Ayudhas'/ Arms and 'Astras' or Mantrik Arrows. Kubera presented him a lakh-strong of yaksha army. Vayu Deva gave him a 'Mayura Vahana'/ Peacock Carrier, while Twashta Prajapati gifted a toy in the form of a Cock which could change its form as the boy wished. All the Devas presented souvenirs, prostrated before Skanda and extolled him." Our Greetings to You, Kamarupa Shanmukha! You are Kumara, the radiant son of Maha Shiva and the destroyer of Danavas; your physical form is the glow of rising sun and of the heat of Agni; you are appropriately adorned, the Army Chief of Devas; the dreadful on the battle front; Guhya Rupa, the abolisher of fear in Trilokas in the Form of a Child; gifted with broad and clear eyes; Vishaakhaa! Our reverences to you as the practitioner of Maha Vratas; you are a terror in battle fields although of pleasant visage otherwise; you have a peacock as your carrier and wear a Keyura / wrist bangles; the high flier of flags; the bestower of boons to devotees; the high profile symbol of courage and strength; you possess a Magnificent Form. This was how Indra and Devas extolled Skanda.) Even as Kumara was replying to assure Devas that very soon the desire of retrieving their lost glories would be fulfilled, an emissary of Tarakasura arrived and conveyed their Chief's message to Indra with a warning not to repeat his past mistakes of challenging a giant Daitya of the stature of that great Tarakaura who shook up the Universe and converted Devas as his servants; he also remarked that instead of playing balls and toys, the baby boy Skanda should gradually get acclimatised to battle fields and face mighty Asuras much later in life! As Tarakasura was in a jocular mood, Skanda Deva said: 'Taraka! Never under-estimate the 'Shakti' of a kid; can you not realise that a baby serpent could perform permanent damage to you and that a boy who has 'Alpaakshara Gyan' in releasing 'Astras' could reach you directly to Naraka! Even while Skanda was conversing like this, Taraka threw a 'Mudgara' (hammer) and an agile Kumara destroyed it with his 'Vajraayudha'; Taraka threw a 'Bhindapaal' which was destroyed by Kumara's own hands. Skanda materialised a Gada / Mace and despatched it against Kalanemi Daitya who became furious and rained a stream of Arrows. These arrows had little impact on Skanda. Instead, Kalanemi and his associates were thrashed by Kumara and they had to sprint from the battle lines. Takakasura then appeared center-stage and was furious in releasing a powerful arrow which hurt Kumara Swami's 'MayuraVahana'; The infuriated Skanda and threw the most potent 'Shakti Baana' which was indeed the decisive point that sealed Tarakasura's fate and the greatest menace in the Trilokas who dominated the scene for thousands of years was finally destroyed, even as Devas sounded 'dundhubhis' (large drums) and showered rose petals which filled up the Earth, Sky and the Nether lokas with the fragrance of Parijata flowers from Swarga. Gandharvas and Kinnaras sang mellifluous praises of Kumara and his proud parents, Apsaras were ecstatic and Sapta Rishis recited Mangala Mantras. Those who read or hear about the glories of Skanda would neither have sins nor diseases but lead a contented life ahead!]

As Maha Deva was in the course of deep tapasya, Devatas headed by Indra, besides Agni Deva approached Brahma Deva and requested that Kumara be declared as Senapati. They stated that both Maha Deva and Devi Parvati had in principle consented the proposal. Brahma Deva recalled that Devi Uma Parvati cursed Devas already that they would be childless and that curse would be irrevocable. Moreover, Uma's elder sister Devi Ganga blessed Devi Parvati to beget a son in close association with Agni Deva and that son would destroy Tarakasura and many other Rakshasaas and that son would become the Deva Senapati. Thus Brahma Deva corroborated both the incidents and declared Kumara Swami should to the Deva Senapati. Thus Maharshi Vishvamitra informed Rama Lakshmanas as how Kumara became Deva Senapati. Then Rama analysed to Vishvamitra that Devi Ganga blessed Parvati Devi that Agni would be closely associated with the birth of Kumara. Maharshi then analysed further to Rama that Agni himself carried Rudra's semen but wanted Devi Ganga's association; Ganga asked Agni to deposit the virility at her flows westward of Himalayas near by Meru mountain; thus from her womb came out the golden coloured boy as Meru mountain too was of golden hue. As Prithvi was of copper colour, the surroundings where the birth occurred assumed copper colour. Raghunandana! That was how, Kumara having been born with golden hue came to be named 'Suvarna' and the surroundings such as the grass, trees, creepers and even the bark of the trees too were golden. Then Lord Indra commissioned six Kritikaas alongside Marud ganas to feed milk to the new born. The Kritikas put a condition and asked for equal rights of feeding breast milk to the child named as Kartikeya. Teṣāṁ tad vacanaṁ śrutvā skannaṁ garbha - parisrave, snāpayan parayā lakṣmī dīpyamānam ivānalam/ skanda ity abruvan devāḥ skannaṁ garbhaparīsravāt, kṛtikeyaṁ mahābhāgaṁ kākutsthajvalanopamam/ As Devas had thus reportedly learnt to have declared, Parama Shiva and Devi Parvati both learnt that 'Skanda' as emerged from the skandita of Maha Deva basically provoked from Devi Parvati, garbha sraava from Ganga, carried by Agni, and born to Kritikas from their wombs and fed milk from their breasts. Rama! that was how, Skanda was acclaimed as Kartikeya. Then the child had assumed six heads and mouths to simultaneously and thus called as Shanmukha. Thus being ably absorbed the breast milk of six mothers simultaneously, Deva Senapati Kumara exhibited unparalleled prowess in uprooting Takakasura and his followers. Such was the episode of Kumara and that of the glorious Devi Ganga who dominated his life of incredibility! Whoever on earth as dedicated to Kartikeya seeks to learn of his illustrious birth would be blessed with longevity, excellent progeny and salvation in Skanda Loka eventually.

Brahmarshi Vishvamitra then addressed Rama Lakshmanas and related to the episode of Dharmatma Sagara Chakravarti of Ayodhya in the remote past whose Dharmapatni Keshini of Vidarbha Desha who too was a Satyavaadini. His second wife was named Sumati, the daughter of Arishtanemi Kashyapa and the sister of Garuda Deva. Sagara Chakravarti performed tapasya in the Himalaya Range along with his wives atop on the Bhṛiguprastavana Shikhara. After a century long tapsya, Maharshi Bhṛigu blessed the Chakravati that he would be famed in the entire universe till eternity and blessed him with several sons; he affirmed that one of the queens would beget a single son and another with sixty thousand sons. The King was overwhelmed with the boon of the Maharshi and politely enquired as to which of the Queens would beget only a single but famed 'vamshodhaarakā' son; in turn the Maharshi asked the spouses about their individual preferences..Then the highly enthusiastic younger wife Sumati the brother of Garuda replied that she would prefer strong sons of collective might and fame like Garuda himself, but Devi Keshini opted for a son like her Emperor husband, an outstanding example of virtue and justice with grit to sustain the Vamsha. Sagara and wives then prostrated and returned to the capital of the Empire. After a lapse of months, Devi Keshini gave birth to 'Asamanjasa' and Devi Sumati gave birth to a huge pot from which emerged sixty thousand sons of strength and brightness. As years rolled on, the Charavarty became a renowned father of an army- like sons of supremacy and command. Asamanajasa used to collect youngsters of the empire to compete in swimming and enjoy himself vicariously and the parents kept on complaining to Sagara who got worried initially and finally banished him out. The forlorn chakravarti finally decided to a Maha Yajna.

Then as Shri Rama was greatly amused and laughed out loudly at the proceedings of the episode of Sagara Chakravarti and Brahmarshi Vishvamitra too was encouraged and continued. The Maha Yagjna was planned by Sagara in the Aryavarta Desha which was in between the Himavan mountain and Vindhya parvata . The Sacrifice Horse was launched and released under the supervision of Maharathi Amshuman the renowned 'dhanurdhara'. But the Sacrifice Horse disappeared suddenly as was robbed away by Mahendra Himself. Since the launched Horse was missing, the Ritviks felt that it was not a good omen and that somebody appeared to have stolen and the robber be chased fast to recover it. Then presiding over the Yagjna, the Chakravarti commanded the sixty thousand mighty Sagara Putras to chase the thief atonce. He further ordered that even if they would have to go round the earth, they ought not return empty handed without the Sacrificial Horse. The Chakravarti declared that he would stay put firmly along with the Ritviks and Amshuman. The mighty sixty thousand strong Sagara Putras divided the territories of earth and left in grand groups and pierced earth with their swords and trishulas so fiercely that bhudevi looked to have wept with excruciating pain. In the process, the entire earth all over 'jambu dwipa' was dug up deep upside down as there were alarms of humans, animals and birds attracting the attention of celestials too as though there were repetitive and alarming earthquakes. The rattled celestials like Gandharvaas, as also Asuras, and Maha Sarpas from the earth down under being alarmed approached Brahma Deva and complained: Bhagavan pṛthivī sarvā khanyate sagarātmajaiḥ, bahavaś ca mahātmāno vadhyante jalacāriṇaḥ/ ayaṃ yajñahano 'smākaṃ anenāśvo 'panīyate, iti te sarvabhūtāni nighnanti sagarātmajaḥ/ Brahma Deva! Sagara Chakravarti's sixty thousand strong sons of extraordinary physical prowess have broken down hells on earth and are digging earth deep under on the plea of searching for 'Yagnaashva' of Sagara's 'maha yagjnya' and as a result earth had been dug up deep and entered the 'paatala lokas' too in a manner that the natives of earth and the nether lokas too are being decimated mercilessly and hence we are frightened being on the fringes of death!

Hence you need not terribly get agitated!’ On hearing the assuring statement of Brahma Deva the delegation of Devas and others were contented and that the menace of Sagara Putras would soon be terminated. As Sagara putras were still at the task of digging deep and distressfully, there was a thunderous roaring from the high skies and seemed to have shouted addressing Sagara Chakravarti that they have had dug of too deep down the earth but there was no trace of the missing Yajñaashva and they would like to receive a message from him for his command. On hearing the message, the single minded and decidedly angry Sagara Chakravarti shouted back: Bhūyaḥ khanata bhadraṁ vo nirbhidyā vasudhātalam, aśvahartāram āsādyā kṛtārthāś ca nivartatha/ pitur vacanam āsthāya sagarasya mahātmanah, śaṣṭiḥ putrasahasrāṇi rasātalam abhidraṇ/ khanyamāne tatas tasmin dadṛśuḥ parvatopamam, diśāgajam virūpākṣam dhārayantam mahītaḥ/ Sons! Proceed further digging deeper and you should return only after recovering the Sacrifice Horse only ! As per the clear and anguished reply from their revered father, Sagara Kumaras entered ‘Rasaatala’.

Vishleshana on Adho Lokas [The lokas underneath the Seas occupy as much an area as Prithvi; the span of Earth is seventy thousand yojanas, height too is as much. The expanse of Patalas too is as much; these lokas are Atala, Vitala, Nitala, Sutala, Talatala, Rasatala and Patalas and each of these lokas has an expanse of ten thousand yojanas. The colour of these lokas is black, white, yellow, red, grey and golden respectively. The inhabitants of these lokas are Daityas, Danvaas and Nagas.. These lokas enjoy extreme illumination from the ‘Manis’(diamonds) on the hoods of the Nagas. The inhabitant serpents and Daityas revel in themselves with festivities and luxurious delicacies of food, wine and intoxication for long hours of time without concerns and worries. They enjoy good time by way of swims in Sarovaras, rivers and lotus-ponds and deal with all kinds of valuable possessions. Underneath these Lokas shines Bhagavan Vishnu’s ‘Tamoguna Rupas’ as Sesha Naga named as Anantha, worshipped by Siddhas, Devatas, Devarshis and Daityas alike. Lying under the entire Universe, the mighty Sesha Deva bears the brunt of the Prithvi and the ‘Charaachara Jagat. Source Brahma Purana’].

As Sagara Kumaras entered ‘Rasatala’, a mountain like Diggaja was as Virupaksha which supports earth was visioned on the sky. When ever this ‘diggaja’ seeks to rest then there are earthquakes. [Earth is stated as being protected from eight directions be celestial elephants protecting the Eight Directions viz. North, South, East and West and their spouses North East, South East, North West and South West] Sagara putras made a parikrama or circumambulation of the Diggaja while seeking entry into Rasatala. As the commenced digging up Rasatala from the western side they found the diggaja and then visioned another Diggaja named Shvetabhadrā supporting Earth again. As the Sagara Kumaras continued the digging of Rasatala for the missing Sacrificial Horse, Bhagavan Vishnu in the form of Kapila Maharshi reddened his eyes while the mighty Sagara Putras were engrossed in the unilateral task of digging again and again. They finally found the Sagara Chakravartis Yagnyaashva just near around the Maharshi. asmākaṃ tvaṃ hi turagaṃ yajñīyaṃ hr̥tavān asi, durmedhas tvaṃ hi samprāptān viddhi naḥ sagarātmajān/ śrutvā tad vacanaṃ teṣāṃ kapilo raghunandana, roṣeṇa mahatāviṣṭo humkāraṃ akarot tadā/ tatas tenāprameyena kapilena mahātmanā, bhasmarāśīkṛtāḥ sarve kākutstha sagarātmajāḥ/ As soon as hardworking Sagara Putras cited the ‘Yagnaashva’ grazing in the vicinity of a Maharshi, they started shouting with anger with pent up emotions of frustrations for several days and nights stating ‘ you the wicked Maharshi! how dare you had hidden the Sacrificial Horse here as it had been grazing grass coolly here; now we the mighty have arrived; be it well realised that we are the mighty sons of the almighty Chakravarti Sagara himself! The Maharshi on hearing the braggings of Sagara Kumaras made a ‘humkaara’ in raging fury and the totality of the sixty thousand valiant force were burnt to ashes.

Vishleshana on Kapila Maharshi: Kapila Maharshi is named for Saankhya Yoga viz. Samanvaya: Understanding by Interpretation. Upanishads and Vedas too comprehend the basis of Awareness about the original cause of Existence and of the Universe. It is only by that Supreme Consciousness that the Ancient Scriptures seek to comprehend but not by a secondary Source of what is loosely designated as the Self Consciousness as Sankhya Yogas interpret; indeed, the Self as an individual is Brahman and is not a separate entity either. Brahma Purana explains how King Vena abandoned Vedas and all precepts of Dharma but the huge gathering of Sages over powered and killed the King, while Kapila advised the Sages to churn the King’s thighs and recoverd Nishads or hunters even as from Vena’s right hand Prithu Chakravarti was manifested! The latter saved Earth again from ‘akaala’ due to lack of very long rainlessness for severral yoears drought and BhuDevi came happy and green all over with crops! Brahma Purana also mentions Sage Kapila in the context of Sagara Chakravarti’s thousand strong sons seeking to Pandava’s Ashvamedha Yagjna’s sacrificial and disturbed Kapila Maharshi -Vishnu Hmself?-in his deep sleep and when got awoken, the brilliance in his eyes burnt all the thousand strong progeny but four of Sagara's fore fathers to ashes, leaving few survivors of the family lineage.

Maharshi Vishvamitra continued the episode of how the Sagara Putras were burnt off as ashes, he asked his grandson Amshumaan as to what might have happened to the Sagara Putras despatched to locate the Sacrificial Horse as it was a long time that they departed. Then Amshuman volunteered to depart and find out about the position of his uncles. Chakavarti alerted the grandson to be very vigilant as he might encounter potent and enemy elements all the way and hence should be well armed with swords and archery. He further alerted that some persons of cunningness and misleadings might also be faced and such persons would need to be killed mercilessly. Thus having accorded an auspicious farewell. As Amshuman on entering Rasatala came across the diggaja Virupaksha as the former prostrated and the diggaja blessingly indicated that he would return soon with the Yagjnaashva. Amshuman no doubt secured the Yanaasva but was horrified to see the huge heaps of human ashes laid on the long stretches on land. Amshuman realised that the entire Sagara sena was no more and started crying away for long. Then he found the 'Yagnyashva' moving nearby. Amshuman then desired to greet the ashes and looked for any water reserves nearby and searched a lot. Looking up at the high skies, he being equipped with the ability to vision far and high spotted the Pakshi Raja Garuda who was the uncle of Sagara Putras as Devi Vinata the wife of Kashyapa begot Garuda the Vishnu vahana and Aruna the charioteer of the eka chakra of Surya Deva. Garuda Deva flew down and consoled Amshuman not to cry much as what all had happened was all for Loka Kalyana in the times ahead.. Garuda Deva further stated that Maharshi Kapila being Vishnu himself had turned Sagara Putras for a purpose and hence it was not proper to perform 'jalaanjalī' for the departed ones. He further stated that 'tarpanas' to the departed ones might as well be performed with the sacred waters of Ganga; Garuda asserted to Amshuman: Gaṅgā himavato jyeṣṭhā duhitā puruṣarṣabha, bhasmarāśīkṛtān etān pāvayel lokapāvanī/ tayā klinnam idaṃ bhasma gaṅgayā lokakāntayā, ṣaṣṭiṃ putrasahasrāṇi svargalokaṃ nayiṣyati/ Narashreshtha! Himavan's elder daughter Devi Ganga be brought down to bhuloka from her celestial abode. Garuda further advised to return back to the Kingdom along with the Sacrificial Horse for the time being. On return King Sagara heard as to what all happened from Amshuman especially about the imperative of inviting the celestial lokas down to earth and relieve the Souls of the Sagara Kumaras. King Sagara then dutifully performed the Maha Ashva medha yagjna and after ruling the kingdom for thirty thousand years passed away peacefully.

Shri Rama! Consequent upon the death of Sagara Chakravarti, the entire public of the Kingdom unanimously chose Amshumaan as the King. Thereafter the illustrious Amshuman having ruled over the kingdom for ever thirty thousand years, departed for tapasya on the heights of Himalayas and thereafter reached swarja loka. Meanwhile King Amshuman's son Dilip who subsequently became the King recalled that that Chakravarti Sagara's famed sons who were his ancestors could not attain salvation yet due to the reason of Maha Garuda's directive that only the flows of Sacred Ganga could redeem. King Dilip kept on wondering through out his life as to how to bring down from the skies; meanwhile he was blessed with a son as named Bhagiratha who even from childhood outstanding traits of Dharma and what was more interesting was of grit and determination. The King Dilip who too proved himself as a King of virtuosity lived for thirty thousand years having well sustained the traditional values of Kingship established by the immemorial Sagara Chakravarti himself, even as planning ambitiously as to how best to bring Devi Ganga down to earth and at the end was welcomed into Imndra Loka. As Bhagiratha assumed Kingship, it looked that all the celestials came down and witnessed the royal ceremonies. He ruled the Kingdom strictly on the basis of the well established precepts of Dharma and Nyaya for good number of years but as there was no further progeny forthcoming for long, the divine duty of bringing Ganga down to earth became intense day after day and having determined so entrusted the responsibility of Kingship to his Ministers and retired to severe tapasya at the Punya kshetra Gokarna.

Among all these species who observe fasting for three nights at a stretch are stated to secure the performance of ten Ashwamedha Yajna phala and a senior member of Shiva ganas and in the case of fasting twelve nights accomplish Shiva Sayuja itself! At Gokarna , the Place of Devi Gayatri who is the most revered and the most popular Deity among the three lokas and here if one performs fasting for three nights continuously is stated to be eligible for achieving thousand Go-danaas!) The Gokarna Kshetra-one of the Mukti Kshetras acclaimed by Parashurama- which is situated in North Karnataka near Mangalore in Western India along with Karwar coast of Arabian Sea and Western Ghats, literally meaning the Cow's ear, is the abode of Mahabaleshwar the Maha Deva of Physical strength. Lord Shiva emerged from the cow likened to Mother Earth and the shape of the Kshetra is of a ear too at the confluence of two rivers viz. Gangavali Aghanashani. Varaha Purana describes that Bhagavan Shankara assumed the form of a deer and moved around freely once; Brahma Deva, Indra and other Devas searched for Maha Deva but could not till they realised finally that Shiva assumed the swarupa of a deer. They tried to seize the horns but Shiva as the deer disappeared though the horns were caught. One horn was established at Gokarna, another at Bhagalpur, Bihar as Shringeshwara and the third at Indra Loka . Maha Bhagavata describes that Ravana, the Epic Villain of Ramayana, pleased Maha Deva and secured the boon of Shiva's Atma Linga and desired to carry the Linga to his Kingdom in Lanka; Sage Narada scented about the boon given by Shiva to Ravana and got worried that the Asura would become immortal by worshipping the Atma Linga daily; he alerted Lord Vishnu who spread the net of Vishnu Maya and Ravana felt that evening was nearing for his Snaana-Sandhya Puja Vidhi; he beckoned a passer by cow herd boy to hold the Atma Linga just for a while but the boy- who actually was Lord Ganesha who was prewarned by Narada-replied that he was in a great hurry and could not wait but would call Ravana by his name thrice; even while Ganesha in disguise shouted Ravana's name thrice, the latter just returned but the Atma Linga was kept on ground and the boy disappeared. He made all his efforts to lift up the Linga but to no avail. In the process of the struggle, only the top portion of the Linga fell at Gokarna and the rest of the pieces of the Linga were thrown away at Suratkal where Sadashiva Temple was built and other pieces fell on Sajjeshwara, Guneshwara and Dhareshwara some kms. of distances away, while the cloth covering the Atma Linga fell off at Mrideshwara now called Marudeshwara at Kanduka Hill surrounded by three sides by Arabian Sea. Mahabaleshwar at Gokarna Kshetra has established great significance-even as other places like Sajjeshwara.].

Bhagiratha having renounced Kingdom performed deep tapasya at the Maha Tirtha of Gokarna:

Bhagīrathas tu rājarṣir dhārmiko raghunandana, anapatyo mahātejāḥ prajākāmāḥ sa cāprajāḥ/ sa tapo dīrgham ātiṣṭhad gokarṇe raghunandana, ūrdhva bāhuḥ pañcatapā māsāhāro jitendriyah/ tasya varṣasahasrāṇi ghore tapasi tiṣṭhataḥ, supṛīto bhagavān brahmā prajānām patir īśvaraḥ/ Having entrusted the duties of Kingship to his Ministers, Mahrma Bhagiratha retired to deep tapasya at the popular Gokarna Tirtha with the singular determination of bringing Devi Ganga to bhuloka from the high skies. The tapasya was stated to have exceeded for thousand years as he kept his shoulders erect and atop with unbent knees while worshipping the Five Fires with unflinching limb control, while eating morsels of food on monthly basis. Brahma Deva was pleased with the rigorous tapasya and asked him for a boon. Bhagiratha replied: yadi me bhagavān prīto yady asti tapasaḥ phalam, sagarasyātmajāḥ sarve mattaḥ salilam āpnuyuh/ gaṅgāyāḥ salilaklinne bhasmany eṣām mahātmanām, svargaṁ gaccheyur atyantam sarve me prapitāmāḥ/ deya ca saṁtator deva nāvasīdet kulaṁ ca naḥ, ikṣvākūṇām kule deva eṣa me 'stu varaḥ paraḥ/ Brahma Deva!! As you are pleased, do bless me to enable me to bring Devi Ganga from the high skies to earth so that my ancestors get purified with her flows so that the latter could be purified and attain salvation. He further requested that his posterity of Ikshvaku Vamsha be glorious for ever. Brahma Deva replied : Bhagiratha! As you have the virtuous ambition to bless the past and future generations, I am happy to approve both of your justifiable proposals. Devi Ganga being the elder sister of Devi Parvati the splendor of Parama Shiva, my advice to you should be to pray and please Him. Moreover , Bhudevi would not be able to withstand the force and fury of Devi Ganga from the high skies, the solution should be to meditate to Trishuladhaari Maha Deva foremost.

Visleshana on Bhagiratha:

Brahma Vaivarta Purana is quoted briefly about ‘Ganga’: Bhagirath’s efforts, Puja to her and final restoration as Vishnu’s wife: Of the two wives of King Sagara viz. Vaidarbhi and Shaibya, Asamanjasa was born to Shaibya while Vaidarbhi delivered a ‘Maamsa pinda’ (piece of meat); Vaidarbhi meditated to Bhagavan Shankara sincerely and the latter arrived in the form of a Brahmana and cut the piece of meat into thousand pieces and turned out as so many sons. As they grew of age, the thousand sons accompanied a Rajasuya Yagna’s horse of King Sagara and behaved flippantly with Kapila Muni while in Tapasya and the furious Muni burnt off the thousand sons into ash. As the King approached the Muni for clemency, the latter assured that if Sacred Ganga were brought from heavens to the ashes of the sons cursed by him, their souls would attain salvation. Asamanjasa and his son Amshuman resorted to Tapasya to Devi Ganga for long time and died but the son of Amshuman named the legendary Bhagirath was fortunate to vision Shri Krishna who in turn instructed Devi Ganga who in any case was to descend to Bhuloka owing to Sarasvati’s curse and the pursuant dispensation of Bhagavan Vishnu. Shri Krishna blessed Ganga not only to provide Mukti to Sagara’s sons but purify the sins of the troubled human beings through out Kali Yuga who would bathe in Ganga and worship her; even by saying ‘Gangey Gangey’ from a distance the devotees would be relieved of their sins and if per chance any Prani died while touching Ganga, that Prani would surely attain Vaikuntha! Narada Muni enquired of Narayana Maharshi about the formal procedure of worship to Ganga desirous of reaping maximum advantages. In fact, King Bhagirath was stated to have followed the following procedure as described by the Maharshi. He performed worship to six Deities before qualifying the puja to Ganga Devi, viz. Shri Ganesha, Bhagavan Surya, Agni Deva, Vishnu, Shiva and Bhagavati Parvati. Subsequently, Bhagiratha prayed to Devi Ganga as follows: ‘You are pure like the white champaka flower ready to demolish the sins of those worshipping you as you have been materialised by the Vighraha of Paramatma Shri Krishna who had given you the status of thousands of ‘Sharatkaala Chandras’ as you are the most propitious Narayana Priya, always peaceful and smiling with adornments of Malati Pushpa garlands, ‘chandana bindus’ on your broad forehead shining prominently with ‘Sinduri bindu’; with pearl like teeth and profusely kind eyes; with such soft feet that put the most delicate white lotus petals to shame; surrounded by Devatas, Siddhas, Muni Ganas and Tapasvis. I greet that Maha Ganga who only knows to bestow boons, purify sinners and enhance the levels of devotees to finally reach peaks of Self-Realisation on par to Mukti. After performing Dhyana on the above lines, the devotee would carry out ‘Shodshopa -chaaraas’ of Asana, Paadya, Arghya, Snaana, Anulepana, Dhupa, Deepa, Naivedya, Tambula, Sheetala Jala, Vastras, Aabhushana, Maalaa, Chandana, Aachamana and Shayya. Thus dedicating his total self Bhagirath requested Ganga to follow that route which passed through where the ashes of Sagara Putras were rested as a result of Muni Kapila’s curse, thus receiving the epithet of ‘Bhagirathi’.

Maharshi Narayana conveyed an interesting episode to Narada about a Radha Mahotsava which was being celebrated on a Kartika Purnima at a Rasamanadali. Devi Saraswati took up her Veena and created mellifluous tunes in perfect Tala Swaras and Brahma was delighted to gift a rare ‘Ratna’ as a gift. Shiva gifted an invaluable ‘Mani’, Krishna gifted Koustubha, Devi Radha presented a wonderful Navaratna Maala and various Devatas gifted their own gifts too. Meanwhile Bhagavan Shankara rendered a fantastic

Poem which was scripted with highly energizing usage of select words that shook up the moods of the Raasleela congregation. On hearing the extraordinary piece of rendition, the entire audience was spell bound in unbelievable rapture and ecstasy and took time to gain normalcy. But the Rasamandala was in deep distress as Radha and Krishna were not traceable. There was an ‘Akaasha Vani’ or a Celestial Voice which directed Bhagavan Maha Deva to materialise Tantra Shastra and create Mantras and Kavachas that would be appropriate to the Tantras to be thus created. In reply, Shankara made a vow by swearing over ‘Gangaajal’ which was present in Shiva’s ‘kamandalu’(vessel) which indeed was the Sangam of Radha and Krishna who were untraceable so far in the Raasa Sabha that was spell bound hitherto pursuant to Shiva’s rendition! After the effect of curses by Sarasvati to Ganga and Lakshmi to assume their own Rupas on Martya Loka, lasting for Kali Yuga’s five thousand years, the respective Devis reached back to Vaikuntha and including the Rupa of Devi Tulasi got materialised as Four Wives of Shri Hari; these four wives reached their positions, representing also like Four Vedas. Indeed these formations of Sarasvati, Ganga, Tulasi and Lakshmi were of Bhagavan Shri Hari’s ramifications

Maha Bhagavatha Purana quoted.: If Harishandra gave an eternal memory in truthfulness and integrity, a person of the same dynasty proved as a role model in tenacity. His life’s mission was to bring Ganges down to Earth from Heavens. Bhagiradha’s prayers were indeed granted by Mother Ganges to the devotee but warned him that the force of the flow from the Heavens to Earth could be withstood by no less than Lord Siva Himself! Bhagiradha never stopped his grand endeavour and worshipped Lord Siva with austerity and purity who agreed, not only because of the sincerity with which the devotee desired to fulfill the long-standing family wish but also owing to the reason of Universal advantage. The Lord assumed a massive body and controlled the force of the River flowing from Lord Vishnu’s feet and bore the brunt of the impact on His head in His ‘Jatajut’ or twisted hairs and released but a portion of the Holy River. Bhagiradha directed the fiery flow by riding a fast Chariot and brought it to the place where the ashes of his forefathers were purified and their souls liberated to Heavens. Till date, humanity continues to be grateful to him for the ever lasting memory of his gigantic efforts in our reaping the fruits of his labour in the huge land-mass covering entire ‘Aryavarta’ (Northern India)!

Narashreshtha! I am pleased with your inhuman determination and selfless dedication to some how usher Devi Ganga down to earth and provide salvation to your ancestors; indeed I shall be delighted to fulfil your ambition and help to hold the mighty flows of Ganga into my 'jataajuta' the twisted and coarse head hairs from 'akaasha'. Then Shri Rama! As Paramashiva sanctioned Bhagirath's life time ambition, Himalaya Deva's elder daughter and Devi Parvati's elder sister Devi Ganga readily consented but had only one reservation that as she jumps down to Shiva's jataajuta the flows might further flow down to Patala instead of being held on earth itself! Shiva realised Devi Gangas impertinent remark and decided that he would hide her flows right into his jataajutas. Then Devi Ganga jumped down on Shiva mastaka and he held the flows which got instantly absorbed in the jataajutas. The flows of Ganga lost their way in the labyrinths of Shiva's jataajuta and the forceful flows could not even reach earth, let alone down to Patala as Ganga wondered. Bhagiratha who had wondered as to where the flows disappeared and once again resorted to deep meditation to Maha Shiva. The latter released one of the forceful flows of Ganga to fall down to Bindu Sarovara as they assumed seven flows of which Hladini-Paavani and Nalini turned east; while Suchakshu-Seeta-and Mahanadi Sindhu flowed westward. Saptamichanvgaat taasaam Bhageeradham tadaa, Bageerayopi Raaajarshi divyam syandanamaasthitaḥ/ Praayadagne mahatejaa gangaatam chaapyanuvrajat, gaganaacchhankara shirastato dharanimaagataa/ The seventh flow of Ganga followed the chariot of Bhagiratha, he had thus accomplished the unique task of bringing Ganga from Shiva's head down to the his following! As the flows of Ganga followed thus, the speed and ferocity of the waves attracted fishes, tortoises and various water borne species joined as earth appeared to have become far richer thereafter. This superb attraction happening on earth instantly raised the curiosity of the celestial beings as though thousand more Suryas got presented by themselves. As the flows of Ganga got stabilised with speed and thrust gradually near normalcy reached and got widened from bank to bank pushing houses and crop fields too. Gandharvas and several Devas gradually gathered themselves as the flows of Ganga rolled down from Shiva's head and his unimaginable hairs themselves and eventually crowds of angels took to heartily taking in the pure sweetness of the waters, bathing in them and swimming too thoroughly revelling in the irresistible flows. And so do humans and innumerable other species especially due to their firm and proven belief of the sacred flows and even drops of 'Ganjajala'. In this context, Brahmarshi Vishvamitra addressing Shri Rama affirmed that Deva-Rishi-Daitya-Danava, Rakshasa, Gandharva, Yaksha, Kinnara, Naaga, Sarpa, Apsaras, all the entirety of water species, besides men, women, and animals made fast inroads into the ever purifying flows of Sacred Ganga.

Ta to hi yajamaanasya Jahnordbhutakarmanah, gangaa saplaavayaamaasa yagjnavaatam mahatmanah/ Tasyaavalepanam jnaatvaa kruddhho Jahnuscha Ragahva, apibat tu jalam sarvam Gangaayaah paramadbhutam/ As the flows of Ganga are fierce and roaring with nasty sounds, Rajarshi Jahnus was performing a maha yajna, and the furious flows of Ganga entered right into the yajna vedika; the Rajarshi got terribly furious at the alleged arrogance of Ganga and thus drank up the River waters totally in a manner that not even a drop of the River remained on earth. Deva Gandharva Rishis were shocked and stunned at the crisis and prayed collectively to very kindly revive Ganga once again stating that he was a father figure and Devi Ganga his daughter. The Rajarshi was pleased with the prayers and finally released Ganga through his ears and the father daughter relationship got universal recognition ever since.

Vishleshana on Gangotri and Haridwaara

Gangotri: Several and detailed references have been made in Brihaddhama Purana, Maha Bharata Vana Parva, Padma Purana, Skanda Purana, Brahma Purana, Vishnu Purana, Devi Bhagavata, BrahmaVaivarta Purana, Agni Purana, Matsya Purana, Brahmanda Purana, Vayu Purana, Skanda Purana and so on. In fact, Skanda Purana has also provided Ganga Sahasra Naama highlighting Devi Ganga Mahatmya. Na Ganga sadrusham tirtham na Devah Keshavaatparah/ says Padma Purana. Maha Bhagavata describes as follows: Dhatuh kamandalujalam tadurukamasya paadaavanejana pavitrayaa Narendra, Swadhurnyana –bhasi saa patati nimaarshi Lokatrayam Bhagavatovishdeva keertih/(Bhagavati Ganga which originated from the left thumb of the Holy feet of Vishnu's three legs spread over the total universe occupying Earth-Higher and Lower Lokas got materialised to wash off the sins of all beings). From Brahama Loka to Himalayas it appeared in streams called Sita, Alaknanda, Chakshu and Bhadra flowing in four directions; the grand and gigantic flow of Alaknanda jumped down the heights of Hemakuta and other mountains towards the southern direction and finally merges into the Great Oceans. The specific Place where Ganga is originated that is Gangotri, is the ideal Place where tarpanas and upavasas are performed and by observing these duties human beings there stated to have accrued the Vajapeya Yagna phala and acquire Brahma: Gangodbhedam samaasadya triraatroposhito Narah, Vajapeyamaapnoti Brahma bhuto bhavet sadaa/ While Ganga is stated to be pure and hallowed, the three Maha Tirthas are stated to be Gangotri, Prayaga and Ganga Sagara or the exit point of merger with the Seas: Trishu snaaeshu durlabha, Gangodbabhe de Prayage Ganga Saagra sangame/ Talking about the dos and don'ts of Ganga Snana, Brahmada Purana emphasises as follows: Achamana, Shoucha, nirmalya-mala visarjana, gatra samvahana, kreedha, pratigraha, rati, anya tirtha bhaava, anya tirtha prashamsha, samtaara or swimming, malotsarga are the twelve tasks to be avoided in Ganga. But most desirable tasks in Ganga are Pitru tarpana with tila mixed water, dahana samskara, tata nivasa or residing at the banks of Ganga Pravaha, Ganga keertana, darshana-sparsha-jala paana, mantra yukta snaana, upavaasa, Veda pathana, Purana shravana, nitya Ganga Smarana, Ganga Sahasra naama stotra, Ganga Vrataacharana, Indira nigrha, Dana prakriya, homaacharana, Sandhya Vandana, Dharmaacharana, and Bhakti bhava in general. Snaana-Tarpana-Pitru Karyaacharana on Solar and Lunar eclipse timings, janma dina worships, parva dina snaana-daana-homa kriyas are all stated to have far reaching phalas. Conducting Yajnas would fetch outstanding results.

Haridwar:Swarga dwarena tattulyam Gangadwaram na samshayah, Tartaabhishekam kurvita kotitirthe samahitah/ Labhate Pundarikamcha kulam chaiva samudbhavet, Tatraika ratri vasena gosahasraphalam labhet/ Saptagange trigange cha shakraavate cha tarpayan,Devaan pitruscha vidhivat punye lokey maheeyate/ Tatah kankhale snatwaa triratroposhito narah, Ashwamedhaapnoti Swarga lokam cha gacchati/ -Padma Purana, Adikhanda, Tirtha Yatra Parva (Haridwara is undoubtedly akin to Swarga Dwara. Those who bathe at the Ganga there are as good as taking bath at Crores of Tirthas, reaping the fruits of performing Pundarika Yajna and bringing to repute one's own Vamsha. Stayintg at Haridwar over night bestows the return of charities of Sahsra Godaana. Performing Sacred Snanas at the banks of Sapta Ganga, Tri Ganga and Shakravarta and offering Deva Pitru Tarpanas would establish themselves with name and fame in these Lokas; thereafter performing sacred baths at Kankhala and observe fasting for three successive nights shall indeed reap the benefit of Ashwamedha Yagna and after the termination of life shall take to the path of Swarga)Haridwar is also called Haradwar, Ganga Dwaar and Mayapuri. It is stated to be a combine of Five 'Puris' viz.Mayapuri, Haridwar, Kankhal, Jwalapur and Bhimgoda. It was at this Place that Brahmarshi Narada was enlightened by Sapta Rishis by way of a Maha Bhagavata Saptaah in a large gathering of Munis and Vishnu Bhaktas. The most significant spot in Haridwar is Brahma Kunda or what is popularly known as 'Hari ki Pairi'. Besides Ganga Dwar or Brahma kund or Hari ki paidi are situated in Haridwar another four Tirthas viz. Kushavarta, Bilwakesara, Nila Parvata and Kankhal- Gangadware Kushavarte Bilwake Nilaparvate, Snaatwa Kankhale Tirthe punarjanma na vidyate/ (Vidhi poorvaka Snaana and Darshana of Bhagawan Vishnu would certainly qualify for no rebirth and Vaikuntha Prapti at each of these.) These Five Sacred Places represent Pouranic Significance as follows:Brahma Kunda or Hari ki Pairi or Vishnu's foot steps: Chakravarti Bhagirath had the outstanding reputation of bringing down Ganga from Vishnu's feet in Vaikuntha down to Kailasha as absorbed in the 'Jata jootas' or Maha Deva's course head-hair pleats. As Bhagirath further did Tapsya to Maha Deva, the Holy Ganga flowed down to Earth and another King Sweta prayed to Brahma Deva to let parts of the River to flow to his Kingdom and the flows came upto Brahma Kunda. Since Bhartruhari the brother of King Vikramaditya performed penances to Maha Deva on the banks of Brahma Kund and achieved Salvation, Vikramaditya constructed steps of the Kunda famed subsequently as Hari ki Paidi. This has come down as the legend of the yore. Gavu ghat: The southern side of Brahma Kund has come to acquire the popularity of redeeming Go hatyhadhi patakas by the Sacred Bathings at the Gavu ghat. Kushavarta ghat: Once Dattatreya performed severe 'Tapas' on the banks of Ganga not far from Gavu ghat as he kept his belongings viz. Kusha or the mat of Kusha grass, clothing and kamandalu or the water vessel on the banks of Ganga; one fierce wind blew away these items on the banks in circular fashions and since then the Ghat was then christened as Kushavarta. 'Pitru Karyas' and 'Pinda Danas' especially on Mesha Samkranti days are stated to go a long way resulting in 'Punar janma naasti' or no rebirth again. It is at this Ghat there is the Mandir of Shravana nath. Vishnu Ghat, Maya Devi Mandir, Ganesh ghat, Narayani Shila, Niladhara and Nileshtar, Kalimandir, Chandi Mandir, Anjani Mandir being that of Hanuman's mother, and Gouri shankar Mandir are all lined up there. Bilwakeshwar: Not far from 'Hari ki Paidi' the Bilwakeshwara Mandir is stated to the erstwhile abode of Maha Ashwatara Naga of Patala who frequented it for Maha Deva darshan and 'snaanas' at this Tirtha is stated to bestow the Shiva Tulya status. Kankhal: This is the Sacred Tirtha which is the joint flow of Niladhara and Kankhal where nomad Munis used to necessarily halt and wash off all traces of 'Khal' or wickedness. Daksheshwar Maha Deva Mandir assumes outstanding significance in view of its Pouranic background of Daksha Prajapatis's Brihaspati Yagna to which his daughter Sati Devi's non invitation due to his hatred to his son-in-law Parama Shiva but still she attended the Yagna and was extremely offended by her father and as such resorted to the extreme step of self immolation in 'Yogaagni' when Maha Deva went berserk with fury, totally destroyed the yagna and beheaded Daksha Prajapati. With a view to mitigate the unusual fury of Maha Deva, Vishnu had to use his Chakra and quietly sliced off Sati Devi's mortal remains and threw away into fifty one pieces which eventually came to be famed as so many Shakti Peethas signifying Devi Sati's body parts as are venerated till date with awe and wonder. As Devas prayed to Maha Deva in torrential 'Stutis', He gradually cooled down and being a known embodiment of mercy and forgiveness, relented to the Prayers of Devas and allowed to the beheaded Daksha to replace the latter's head with that of the goat meant for sacrifice at the ruined yagna and revived the Prajapati back to life! That is why this Holy Place is of unsual Mahatmya and yatris to Haridwara and is stated that their yatra would be futile without worship at Daksheshwara Maha Deva! This Holy Tirtha attracts unprecedented yatris on Shiva Ratri for its legendary background! Besides the above Tirthas, Haridwar has other Tirthas too like Sati Kund, Kapila Sthaana, Bhima Gouda, Sapta Dhara, Satya Narayana Mandir and Veerabhadreshwar each of which has their own background! From Haridwar to approx. forty miles is situated Shuka taal where Vyasa Maharshi's son Shuka Deva taught Maha Bhagavata Purana within a week's time to Panadava's descendant King Parikshit on the banks of Ganga. Devaband or Devivan some 8 km near Mujaffarnagar off Shaharanpur is known for Durga Mandir where Durga Saptashati was recited first as believed by 'Vidwamsas' of erudition.]

Vishleshana on Devi Ganga -Post Bhagiratha: a) Devi Bhagavata Purana details as follows: Chain reaction of Ganga -King Mahabhissha-Ashta Vasus- King Shantanu- Gangeya Bhishma: There was a virtuous King Mahabhissha of Ikshvaku Dynasty who pleased Indra with a series of 'Asvametha' and 'Vajapeya' Sacrifices and attained Indra Loka after his death. Once he had attended the Court of Lord Brahma and along with him was seated Devi Ganga. He was immensely attracted to her and she too reciprocated with her amorous glances. Brahma got disturbed and cursed both of them to take to human lives as husband and wife. Mahabhissha opted to be the son of King Pratipa of Puru Dynasty. At the same time Ashta-Vasus (Eight Vasus) of the Celestial Region headed by Vasu Prithi and their families visited Sage Vasishtha's 'Ashram' and admired 'Kama Dhenu' the Sacred Cow whose milk bestowed disease-

less longevity and sublime happiness. The wife of one of the Vasus, Dyau was impressed with the Cow and quietly stole it and its calf. Sage Vasishtha found in his 'Diya Drishti' (Celestial Vision) that Nandini the Sacred Cow was in the custody of Vasu Dyau and cursed all the Vasus to be turned as human beings. Being highly repentant, the Vasus beseeched Vasishtha to dilute the effect of the curse and out of compassion the Sage agreed to one year's human life to seven Vasus as their involvement was indirect but Vasu Dyau should have a full life time. The Vasus, who knew about Brahma's curse to Ganga Devi, approached her to give birth to Seven Vasus of one year's human life each and one life time's existence to the last born Vasu. But this was agreed to subject to the condition that her prospective husband should agree to freedom of her action without any reservation and if he did not, she would quit as the husband. Eventually, Ganga waited on the banks of River Ganges and awaited the arrival of King Pradipa of Kuru Dynasty for meditation. The King arrived to perform 'Surya Namaskaras' on the river bed and Ganga appeared as a charming woman and sat straightaway on his right lap, indicating thereby that the place was to seat a son / daughter. The damsel identified herself as Ganga Devi and replied that she would await his son's arrival who was yet to be born. In course of time, King Pradipa got his son, Shantanu, and as he grew as a handsome youth advised him to meet Ganga Devi who would propose but cautioned that he should not ask her questions and agree to whatever she asked. Accordingly, Ganga Devi, the eternal beauty, agreed to wed Shantanu and agreed to her conditions unilaterally. She gave immense happiness to Shantanu, who became the King after his father's abdication of the throne. After a year, they were blessed with a boy, but she took the baby and submerged him in the flow of Ganga! To his great surprise, Shantanu witnessed the horror of the child's cruel drowning in the flow but dared not say one word to his wife. This happening was repeated again and again for seven times and as the eighth child was born, Shantanu protested and Ganga as per their contract left, but requested that the boy be named as Gangeya.

ii) Brahma Vaivarta Purana explains about 'Mutual curses of Lakshmi, Saraswati and Ganga ':

Originally Lakshmi, Saraswati and Ganga were the wives of Shri Hari in Vaikuntha. Saraswati felt that Shri Hari was getting fonder of Ganga and complained to Lakshmi but Lakshmi was neutral. Saraswati was irritated and cursed Lakshmi to become a tree as she was insensitive. Ganga felt bad that Saraswati was unnecessarily interfering and cursed Saraswati; this led Saraswati to curse Ganga. Reacting to these curses, Shri Hari gave dispensations as follows: Lakshmi would be born as a tree in the house of King Dharmadhwaaja and become the wife of Asura Shankhachuda, a Vishnu devotee and later on turn out to be Shri Hari's dear wife and live for ever as Tulasi and also as a River named Padmavati in Bharata Varsha; Devi Ganga due to Saraswati's curse would become a Holy River to demolish the sins of those who take baths on her waters and eventually flow down in Bharata Varsha due to the persistent efforts of Bhagirathi and be called as Bhagirathi and be the wife of Samudra who was also of Shri Hari's 'Amsha' and at the same time be at the 'Shiva Sthaan'; and Saraswati as a result of Ganga's curse would become the wife of Brahma; and finally Lakshmi who was of Satwa Tatwa without any anger or jealousy and would be Shri Hari's own wife eventually. As Shri Hari gave the dispensations as follows, all the three Devis viz. Lakshmi, Saraswati and Ganga embraced each other and felt ashamed of their indiscretions which resulted in the repercussions and prayed to Bhagavan Shrihari as to when the arrangements would terminate and the latter pacified the Devis that he would not only ratify the curses that they made to each other but also retain their positions in Vaikuntha with equal attentions and affections to all the three Devis. Saraswati would keep half 'Amsha' in Bharata Varsha and half with Brahma and the total Amsha with himself (Shri Hari); similarly in respect of Ganga, half of Vishnu's Amsha would be Bhagirathi in Bharata Varsha sanctifying the Beings and by slashing their sins there and the rest of Amsha remaining intact with himself as also have the unique privilege of remaining on Shankara's holy head; as regards Lakshmi, one Amsha would be Tulasi as also as River Padmavati for Kali Yuga's five thousand years and all the Devis would return to Vaikuntha thereafter. The occurrence of the curses among the Devis and the arrangements that were made about them by Shri Hari had some hidden meaning: even while there were several Tirthas in Bharata Varsha, there was a great need for some outstanding Rivers and Punya Kshetras where not only devotees of Shri Hari, but even hopeless sinners and 'Nastiks'(atheists) should have possibilities for self-improvement. That was the reason for the emergence of these Sacred and sin-washing Rivers for quick-if not instant- relief to them. Bhagavan Vishnu indicated that there were several persons, who thrived on cheating, making false promises, social parasites, promise breakers, ‘Vishwaas ghaatis’, givers of wrong and misleading evidences, occupiers of others’ properties and belongings; those who discard parents and blood-relatives; swindle or forcibly bamboozle others etc. The purpose of the Sacred Tirthas like Ganga, Padma and Saraswati was thus to exonerate and correct such misled persons to reform them.

Marshi Vishvamitra thus informed about Bhagiratha's exemplary grit and devotion in the context of 'Gangaavatarana' on Earth, till the Ocean and down to Rasatala and washed off the ashes of Sagara Putras. Then Brahma Deva appeared and confirmed to Bhagiratha that the Souls of the Sagara Putras got sanctified and reached Swarga Loka and said sāgarasya jalam loke yāvat sthāsyati pāṛthiva, sagarasyātmajās tāvat svarge sthāsyanti devavat/ iyaṁ ca duhitā jyeṣṭhā tava gaṅgā bhaviṣyati, tvatkṛtena ca nāmnā vai loke sthāsyati viśrutā/ gaṅgā tripathagā nāma divyā bhāgīrathīti ca, tripatho bhāvayanīti tatas tripathagā smṛtā/ Bhupaala! As long as the sacred waters of 'Saagara' provide solace to the Beings in Srishtih, the Sagara Kumaras would find Swarga as their abode. Devi Ganga would eventually be named as your elder daughter and hereonward would be popular in lokas as Bhaagirathi. She would also be known in the Universe as Tripathaga as being the flows of Aakasha- Bhumi- Patalaas. Now you may formally perform 'tarpanas' to the forefathers. Shri Rama having heard the total episode of Sagara- Bhagiratha-Ganga stated that as the nightful sleep was over and the morning duties were concluded too requested Maharshi Vishvamitra to cross the Tripatha gamini Ganga. As the boat was arranged and the sacred river was crossed, Rama Lakshmanas witnessed a picturesque citi and the Maharshi conveyed its name as Vishali. and described its background. In the preceeding Satya Yuga, Devi Diti's progeny were the mighty Daityas who were ruthless resorting to viciousness while Devi Aditi's progeny were Devatas of virtue.

Vishleshana on Kashyapa Maharshi and Diti and Aditi: Brahmanda Purana describes: The progeny of Kashyapa Maharshi thus represented the high-points of Virtue and Evil as though the Worlds were on balance. Kashyapa's wives truly characterised the facets of the Positive and Negative Forces as reflected in their offspring and their descendants: Aditirdharmashila tu Balasheelaa Ditistathaa, Tapahsheelaa tu Surabhirmaayaasheelaa Danustathaa/ Gandha –sheelaa Munischaiva Krodhaadhyayana shaalini/ Geetasheelahyarishṭaa tu Krura sheelaa Khashaa smrutaa, Krodhasheelaa tathaa Kadruha Krodhaacha Shuchi shaalini/ Vaahasheelaa tu Vinataa Taamraa vai ghatashalini, Iraanagraha sheela tu hyanaayur – bhakshaney rataa/ Matrastulyaabhijaatascha Kashyapaatmajaa Prabho! (Devi Aditi is a natural epitome of Virtue; Diti is a sign of Might and Valour; Surabhi is a Tapaswini and the mother of cows and buffalos; Danu is a Mayavati and the mother of Daanavas; Muni is a Gandha Shila; Krodha is Adhyana Sheela; Arishta is a Geeta sheela or has an aptitude for music; Khasha is a symbol of cruelty and wickedness; Kadru is the representation of anger and revenge; Krodha is a natural icon of Purity; Vinata is prone to Vahanas and thus the mother of the illustrious Garuda Deva the Vehicle of Vishnu Bhagavan and Aruna Deva the Charioteer of Surya Deva; Tamra Devi is a byword of Evil and immorality and the mother of Raakshasas; Ira is the emblem of kindness and morality; and Anayu stands for pleasure and enjoyment. These are the natural characteristics of the wives of Kashyapa Muni as truly reflected in their offspring too. Indeed, Kashyapa Vamsha stood for Dharma, Kshama, Buddhi, Satpravartana and Competence on one side and Adharma, Jealousy, Ignorance, Misbehavior, Viciousness, Cruelty, and utter depravity on the other! It produced Devas, Danavas, Rakshasaas, Yakshas, Piscachaas, Gandharvas, Apsaras, Sarpas, Pashu-Mriga-Pakshi-Vriksha-Lataas. All these features are amply manifested among Manavas and are deeply immersed in the whirlpool of Samsara- at times displaying virtue and at other times demonstrating viciousness as they are always targetted with the grand mix of the Satvika-Raajasica and Tamasika Gunas; they are ostensibly motivated by the Chaturvidha Purusharthaas of Dharma-Artha-Kaama-Moksha!

Maharshi Vishvamitra then explained to Shri Rama that both Daityas and Devatas had both sought 'Amaratva' of Longevity for ever. But the question got raised as to who should become eligible for the 'amaratva'. Then both Daityas and Devatas decided to execute 'Ksheera Sagara Mathana' or the churning of the Ocean of Milk. (Of the Sapta Samudras Lavana or Salt, Ikshurasa or Sugarcane juice, Sura or Wine, Ghrita or Classified Butter, Dahi or Curd, Ksheera or Milk and Suswada or Sweet Water , Ksheera Sagara on which Maha Vishnu himself is stated to flout as resting on Adi Shesha was decidedly the best). Thus having resolved both Devas and Daityas along with their respective characteristics of Dharma and Adharma. (Aditi, Diti, Danu, Arishta, Surasa, Khasa, Surabhi, Vinata. Tamra, Krodhavasha, Ila, Kadru and Muni.; Diti's sons were the daityas, danavas and Rakshasaas). Having decided thus they mutually approached Vaasuki Sarpa to be the massive belt of Mandharaachala for the gigantic task. [Vasuki: Underneath Bhumi are the Nether Worlds viz. Atala, Vitala, Sutala, Talaatala, Rasatala, Mahatala and Patala. The soil in Atala is stated to be of black soil, of Vitala the ground was of palewhite, Sutala of blue, Talatala of yellow colour, Rasatala of gravel covered ground, Mahatala of Rocky Ground and of Patala of Gold. The Palaces of Asuras of Namuchi the enemy of Mahendra, besides of other demons like Mahananda, Kabandha, Bhima, Suladanta, Dhanjaya, Nagendra were all glittering examples of opulence and material happiness in Atala and other Lokas. In Sutala were the noted Daitya-Rakshasa-Serpent Kings like Mahajambha, Karbandha, Hayagriva, Nikumbha, Bhima, Suladanta, Dhananjaya, Nagendra, Kalia and so on. Shankha, Gomukha, Kakutpada, Asvatara, Kambala, Takshaka stayed at Vitala; Prahlada, Taraka, Puranjana etc were in Rasatala; Kalanemi, Gajakarna were in Mahatala; and among other illustrious serpents Maha Sesha and Vaasuki were stated to be in Patala. It was Vaasuki who was tied all around the Mandhara mountain as the churning and Kurma Vishnu as the balancer at the time of Amrita Mathana!] As both the parties of Devas on one side of Vasuki holding the serpent's tail with dharmic awareness and Daityas with 'ahamkara' or self ego holding the head of Vasuki got positioned for the churning. In the process, multitudes of Daityas perished as being burnt off by the poisonous flames emitted from the mouth of the Vasuki Snake. As the churning of the Ocean thus having progressed, there appeared on the high skies a massive poisonous fire ball called 'halaahala' and threatened to have brought earth into ash. Atha Devaa Mahadevam Shankaram sharanaarthiah, jagmuh Pashupati Rudram traahi traaheti tushtuvuh/ As all the Devas collected at the tail side of Vaasuki made a desperate appeal to Pashupati Rudra, the latter responded to the prayers even as Maha Vishnu too appeared but appealed to Maha Shiva stating that as the ultimate of the universe the latter should kindly gulp up the 'halaahalaagni' in upright standing posture. Then Halaahalam visham ghoram sanjagnaahaamritopamam/ Maha Deva being Mrityunjaya retained the most poisonous 'halaahalaagni' in his throat- lest the lokas in his stomach be not get dislocated with the poisonous flames. Maharshi Vishvamitra then addressed Raghunandana and further explained that the mammoth task of Ksheera Sagara Mathana continued. But then followed another havoc as Mandhara Mountain slipped down into Patala under the Ocean of Milk. Devatas and Gandharvas as were participating in the task of churning made a frantic appeal to Maha Vishnu to save and pull the mountain falling down so that they might not all be crushed under the weight of the mountain. Iti shrutvaa Hrisheekeshah kaamatham rupamaasthitah, parvatam prushthatah kritvaa shishaye trayodadhou Harih/ In response to the frantic appeals my Devas placed at the side of the tilt of the gigantic mountain, Maha Vishnu had spontaneously assumed the incarnation of Kurma the massive tortoise so that the mountain could be balanced thereon of its topped up hardness. Some thousand years of churning thereafter, then appeared Dhanvantari the personification of Ayurveda with a 'danda' or handstick on one hand and a Kamandalu or vessel of pure water (stated to be of Vishnu himself depicted with four hands, with one of them carrying Amrita, and the other holding shanka- chakra-and a leech!) as well as a group of Apsaras of outstanding physical beauty and charm. [Apsaras: The celestial dancers of feminine beauty and grace ‘par excellence’, skilled in dance and music, such as the ageless Rambha, Menaka, Menaka, Urvashi, Tilottama, Ghritaachi, Mishkarekshi, Vapu, Viprachitti, Purvachitti, Sahajanya, Karnika, Punjikasthala, Vishvachi and so on. Tilottama and Urvashi are believed among those Apsaras to have generated from the ‘amrita mathana’. Apsaras are stated to be closely associated with celestial singers and musicians. At the time of Amrita Mathana, Indra Deva was believed to have opted to enhance the elegance of his court. Apsaras enjoy the reputation or otherwise to have dislocated the tapsya of renowned Maharshis as Brahmarshi Vishvmitra him self was a case in point!] These Apsaras are stated to be of sixty crore strong, nay countless! But none of the Apsaras could ever be the formal wives of maharshis, deva daanavas or of terrestrial or celestial beings, except for casual sex. Then further ‘samudra mathana’ resulted in the creation of Vaarunis who were ever intoxicated by wines and hard liquor always in search of husbands but only the celestials but not of vicious daityas. In fact the term of ‘Sura’ was always used in the context of Devas and the rest of Celestials, and ‘Asuras’ were those denied of drinking wine and other intoxicants! That was the reason of Vaaruni Devataas getting readily attracted to Devas! As the churning progressed, Ucchaishrava the best of horses, and Koustubha the best of priceless diamonds emerged. As the ever full pot of Amrita became visible in the hands of Dhanvantari, there was a stampede and fierce battle opened as that indeed was the ultimate and ambitious target of Samudra Mathana! Innumerable Deva Danavas perished in the open and all out war, Lord Vishnu took to the mesmerising form of Mohini Devi and the huge battle of Deve-Asuras ceased suddenly. She then brought in a truce and made them seated in groups on either side - ostensibly, with a view to orderly distributing the ‘ambrosia’ for which the all out endeavour for thousands of years got climaxed to a reality! While distributing amrita, Vishnu in the form of Mohini Devi distributed amrit to Devas totally, and from the side of Danava Daityas as the distribution was about to be ended by Devi Mohini, two of the daityas viz. Rahu and Ketu stealthily shifted over the group of Devas. The omniscient Vishnu as Mohini patronized Rahu and Ketu did receive drops of the elixir and joined the group of Nava grahas, for subtle reasons. Then after Indra retained the seat of kingship of Svarga as Rishis and other Devatas were pleased too.

Matsya Purana: on Kurmaavatara, ‘Amrita Mathana’, Kaalakuta and Devi Mohini:

As Danava Guru Shukracharya secured Sanjeevani Vidya from Maha Deva after thousands of penance and meditation to enable Danavas and Daityas to restore their lives, especially after their killings in battles with Devas, there were series of victories of Danavas and all the like minded evil forces, while Injustice and Vice prevailed in suppression of Virtue, Justice and Peace. In response to a delegation of Devas led by Indra and Deva Guru, Brahma appealed against passion for battles and enmities. He also called King Bali the Head of Daityas and Danavas and to refrain from frequent quarrels with Devas and suggested a Master Plan for the mutual benefit of Devas, Gandharvas and like minded allies on the one hand and Daityas, Danavas, Rakshaas, Nagas and Yakshas on the other. The Plan proposed by Brahma was follows: Both Daityas and Devas should jointly organise the Project of ‘Kshira Sagara Mathana’; approach Vishnu under the leadership of King Bali to revive the Form of ‘Kurma’ (Tortoise) present in Palala loka; request Mandarachala or the Mountain of Mandara to be the churning rod; pray to ‘Sehsa Nag’ or the Giant Serpent who bears the weight of the entire Universe to be the long and strong rope to be used for the churning. As planned the joint delegation prayed to Bhagavan Kurma lying in Patala loka first and the latter agreed readily saying: Thrailokya dhaarineynaapi na glanir-mama jaayatay, Kimu Mandarakaat Kshudraat gutikaa samnibhaadiha/ (I have no problem in holding the Mandara Mountain for this noble cause as this is so like a pebble for me!) Later on when the delegation approached Sesha Nag, he replied: Brahmanda veshitinaanaapi Brhahmaanda mathanenaavaa, Na mey glanirbhaved dehey kimu Mandara vartaney! (If I could bear the brunt of the Universe what is the problem in holding it while churning and rotating it!). At that time, Kurma Deva was right underneath the Mountain, but neither Daityas nor Devas could rotate the mountain much less churn it. The delegation reached Vaikuntha and prayed to Vishnu under the Leadership of Bali, when Vishnu was in Yoga Nidra lying on Sesha Nag on Ksheera Samudra, as follows: Namo loka trayadhaksha tejasaa jita bhaskara, Namō Vishno Namō Jishno Namastey Kaitabhardana/ Namah sargakriyaakartrey Jagatpaalayatey Namah, Rudrarupaaya Sharvaaya Namah Samharakaariney/ Namah Shulaayudhadhrushya Namō Daanava-ghaatiney, Namah Trayaakranta Trailokyaayaabhavaaya cha/ Namah Prachanda Daitreyndrakulakaala mahaanala, Namō naabhihrudodbhuta padmagarbha Mahabala/ Padmabhuta Mahabhuta karthrey hatrey Jagatpriya, Janitaa Sarvaloksha kriyaa kaarana kaariney/ Amaraari vinaashaaya Mahaasamara shaaliney, Lakshmi mukhaabja madhupa namah keerti nivaasiney/ Asmaakamamaratwaaya ghritayaam ghriyataa - mayam, Mandarah Sarvashailaanaamayutaatayaayuta vistrutah/ Anantabala baahu bhyamavasht abhaika paaninaa, Madhyataamamrtutam Deva Swadhaa Swaadhaartha kaaminam/ (Bhagavan Vishnu, Jishnu, Trilokaadhyaksha! our sincere greetings to you; You are the famed demolisher of Kaitabha; The Creator, the Presever and also the Destroyer of the whole world with Trishula in your hands; You expanded and occupied in merely three steps of yours all the Three Lokas; You are like the Agni who put the total 'Vamsha' or the race of the frightful of Daitya Clan into flames and ash; You materialised Brahma from the lotus of your navel; You are the Jagatkarta, Harta and Priya; the Karya, Karana and Karta or the Deed, the Doing and the Doer; Our endeavours are due to create 'Amrit' for 'Amaratwa' or everlasting life; kindly enable with your mighty arms the 'Manthana' or churning of the Madarachala in the Ksheera Sagara!) As Bhagavan agreed to do so and initiated the circling of Sesha Nag around the Mountain, the Daityas and Danavas out of bravado held the head of Sesha Nag's thousand mouths that emitted poisonous flames and many of them perished even before the process of churning; Devas on the other hand held the tail and manouvered it. As both the churning got momentum, both the Parties were extremely tried and Indra materialised cool showers to reduce the tiresomeness. Lord Brahma alerted and encouraged with cheerings and heartening remarks periodically to both the face-drawers and tail-enders of the Sesha Nag. As the churning of the ten thousand yojana wide Mountain continued, from its top fell down several groups of elephants, eight-footed Sharabha animals, wild lions, tigers, boars and bears, crores of fearful poisonous reptiles, besides heavy and tall trees, branches, fruits, leaves, medicinal herbs and plants into the Ocean. The resultant pulp of the 'Manthan' of the materials dropped from the Mountain produced 'Varuni' and its invigorating smell pleased Devas and Danavas and became refreshed and mightier; the speed of churning pepped up and Bhagavan Vishnu held the sides of the Mountain by his shoulders-grip and the radiance of the jewels on the thousand hoods was reflected on the blue dazzle of Vishnu's shoulders and hands looking like a 'Brahma danda' even as thousands of roars and lightnings emerged from the deafening sounds of clouds above and sky-rise sea tides below. From the tail side of the Sesha Nag, Indra, Aditya, Rudragana, Vasugana, and other Devas were getting more and more active while the Rakshasa ganas including the powerful Viprachit, Namuchi, Vritra, Shambar, Dwimurtha, Vajradamshtra and Rahu, all headed by King Bali were displaying their respective energies with arrogance and self-pride. In the process countless animals, fishes, reptiles and other varieties of Seas and the under-Sea Beings were destroyed in millions. Unfortunately however there was no indication of the much awaited 'Amrit' and all the Parties concerned were fully exhausted and disappointed. They all in one voice of unanimity prayed to Bhagavan Vishnu once again and the Lord assured them: Balam dadaami sarveshaam karmaitad ye samaasthitaah, Kshubhyataam kramashah Sarvair Mandarah parivartataam/ (To all the persons involved in this Manthana Venture, I am according 'Shakti' herewith and all concerned should perform their maximum from now on). As the action had improved manifold now, there was Purna Chandra, who emerged with the illumination of hundred Suryas yet with extraordinary coolness that would readily bring about breezy freshness to the whole world. Then Devi Lakshmi was materialised with considerable grace and gorgeousness who desired to opt for Bhagavan Vishnu; she was followed by Sura Devi and Ucchaishwa and these were granted by Asuras to Indra as they were rather keen only for Amrita. Then followed the emergence of Koustubh Mani and that was gifted away to Vishnu to adorn the ornament on his broad chest. Further on, there was a Parijata Vriksha, which had bunches of flowers whose intoxicating fragrance filled up all over the gardens of

Swarga. Eventually, there occurred dense and blue smoke which appeared all over the Ocean and reached the sky as well, when all the participants of the Churning were unable to increasingly bear it and had to temporarily call off the action as there were poisonous flames and fumes surrounding them, choking them all and killing several of them. Meanwhile, a highly frightful figure making terrible noises descended from the pitch dark clouds; as Daityas and Devas were frightened to the core and Bhagavan Vishnu interrogated that horrendous figure as to who that it was! The reply came to Vishnu that it was KAALAKUTA VISHA and that could devour the whole Universe instantly, that it emerged pursuant to the huge scale churning of Ksheera Samudra and that all the participants should at once take the refuge of Maha Deva. The panicky Deva-Danavas as well as Brahma and Vishnu made a bee-line to a Golden Cave on the top of Mandara Mountain which too was a Principal participant of the Manthana Drama. At the Entry Gate of ‘Shiva Nivasa’, Ganeswara took Maha Deva’s permission to let the agitated Devotees in as they all in a chorus commended Shiva (Shiva Stuti) as follows: *Namah Virupaksha Namastey Divyachakshusey/ Namah Pinaaka hastaaya Vajrahastaaya dhanviney/ Namah trishula hastaaya Dandahastaaya Dhurjatey, Namastrailokya naathaaya Bhutagraama shareeriney/ Namah Suraari hantrey cha Somaagnya kaaryagnya chakshushey, Brahmaney chaiva Rudraaya Namastey Vishnu – rupeney/ Brahmaney Vedarupaaya Namastey Deva rupiney, Saamkhya yogaaya Bhutaanaam Namastey Shaambhavaaya tey/ Manmathaayaanga vinaashaaya Namah Kaalakshayankara, Ramhasey Deva Devaaya Namastey Vasuretasey/ Eka Viryaya Sarvaaya Namah Pinga kapardiney, Uma bhartrey Namastubhyam Yagna Tripura ghaatiney/ Shuddha bodha prabuddhaaya Muktakaivalya rupiney, Lokatraya vidhhatrecha Varunendraagni rupiney/ Ruyasussama rupaaya Purushaayeswaraaya cha, Agraaya chaiva chograaya Vipraay Shurti chakshusey/ Rajasey chaiva Satvaaya Tamasey Timiraamaney, Anintya nityabhaavaaya namo nityacharaatmaney/ Vyaktaaya chai vyaktaaya Vyaktaavyaktaanaya vai namah, Bhaktaanaamaarti naashaaya Priyanaraayanaayacha/ Umaapriyaaya Sharvaaya Nandivaktraaschitaaya cha, Rutu manvata kalpaaya Paksha maasa dinaatmaney/ Nanaarupaaya Mundaaya Varuutha Pruthu dandiney, Namah Kapaalahastaaya Digvaasaaya Shikhandiney/ Dhaniney rathiney chaiva yatayey Brahmachaariney, Ityevamaadi charitaih stutantu tubhyam namo namah/ (Virupaaksha! Our prostrations to you; Maha Deva! You are the only Supreme Energy which could gulp the ‘Kalakuta Visha’; if uncontrolled; it could devour the Universe as a whole!). As the Deva-Daanava’s joint delegation prostrated before Bhagavan-which incidentally was a historical event of unique significance, Shankara agreed: Bhakshayishyaamyaham ghoram kalakutam Maha visham, Tathaanyadapi yatkruthyam kruchhasaadhyam Surasuraah, Tacchaapi saadhayishyaami tishthadhwam vigatajjwaraah/ (Deva Suraagana! I am no doubt consuming this terrible poison anyway; if you entrust me any other worse and more difficult deeds to be performed, they too would be executed; never worry!) By so saying, Bhagavan took the ‘Halaahala Visha’ into his left hand and consumed and retained it in his throat as Devas headed by Brahma as also Asuras led by King Bali hailed Parameshwara exclaimed: *Shobhatey Deva Kathastey gaatreya kundaniprabho, Bhrungaamaalaanibham Kanthehyathraivaastu visham tawa/ (Devadeva! As your Physique is white, slender and fragrant like a jasmine flower while the blue tinge of your throat has a remarkably distinct-look with the spot on your throat; please do retain it as it is!) All the concerned parties involved in the ‘Operation Amrit’ returned back to their respective positions once again anxiously awaiting the materialisation of Amrit. In the final exercise of Churning the ‘Ksheera Sagara’, Bhagavan Dhanvantari, the Deity of ‘Ayurveda’ surfaced along with the most awaited Pot of Amrit; then followed the Large and Attractive Eyed Devi Madira the symbol of Intoxication; Kamadhenu the celestial cow which fulfilled the desires of any Living Being got materialised later on; the Celestial Elephant Iravata which Indra Deva claimed; Surya Deva accepted Dhanvantari as also the Uccaishvraya horse that came up even earlier; Varuna Deva claimed the Celestial Chhatra (umbrella) and as Indra desired the Kundala Dwaya or the magnificent Ear-Rings. At this juncture, Dhanvantari declared AMRITA and then commenced an all-out scuffle between Devas and Daityas making claims and counter claims. The fight assumed larger proportions as Bhagavan Vishnu materialised Mohini Devi and the demons became victims of Maya -Illusion-as they were completely enchanted by her and allowed her to distribute the Elixir. In this confusion, Mohini let Devas seize the Eternal Pot and they drank it off one by one; one Asura viz. Rahu however managed to consume the drops of Amrit upto his throat and as Surya and Chandra shouted against Rahu, Vishnu in a swift action cut off the Demon’s throat by his Sudarshana Chakra, but the damage was already done and Rahu became immortal, all though all the rest of Asuras were denied of the Divine Drink. This followed fierce battles between Devas and Danavas and there was extensive massacre and blood-bath when innumerable Danavas and Daityas suffered losses and Devas became victorious under the stewardship of Bhagavan Vishnu. The left-over Danava-Daitya Stalwarts disappeared into the Oceans to retire into Patala Loka. There after, Mandarachala was restored to its original position; so did Sesha Nag and Sudarshana Chakra too. The havoc created in the Oceans too limped back to normalcy. The Dikpalakas, Devas, Gandharvas and all the Celestial Beings got reinstated and were extremely delighted and overjoyed. Tatomrutam sunihitameva chakrirey, Suraah Paraam tudamabhigamya pushklalaam/ Dadduscha tam nidhimamrutasya rakshitam, Kiritiney Balibhirathaamaraih saha/ (Thereafter, the Devaganas were gladdened to safeguard and hand over the ‘Amrita Nidhi’ /The Remaining Deposit of the Elixir to the custody of Bhagavan Vishnu himself.)]

Maha Bhagavatga Purana: Mammoth Churning of Ocean for ‘Amrith’ (Nectar)

Proceeding with the narration to King Parikshith, Suka Mahamuni highlighted that it was in the sixth millennium of Chakshusa Manu that Lord Vishnu had incarnated as Ajita who was begotten to Vairaja and Devasambhuti; Ajita in the form of a tortoise was wandering in the Ocean of Milk carrying the Mountain Mandhara on His back and produced ‘Amrit’ by churning the Ocean. Parikshith became highly inquisitive about the famous story and requested the Muni to give full details. As the enmity and intense hatred between the Demi- Gods and Demons took unprecedented proportions, the Demi-Gods assembled on the top of the Sumeru Mountain to seek a solution. Lord Brahma instructed the Devas and Demons to resort to a temporary truce, till arrangements could be made to churn the Ocean of Milk to obtain Amrit, the Divine Drink to provide everlasting life. Garuda, the Vehicle of Lord Vishnu lifted the Mandhara Mountain and placed it into the Ocean as the churning rod. Vasuki the Giant Serpent coiled around the Mountain tightly; the head of the serpent was opted for by the Demons out of pride and the tail was taken by the Demi-Gods as the rope. As the Mountain was not stable and shaky, Ajita in the form of tortoise slid under the Mountain and provided the needed balance. Thus commenced the mammoth churning of the Ocean for ‘Amrit’. Many Demons perished from the poisonous flames from the mouth of Vasuki. As the churning progressed, the Ocean was shaken up bringing out innumerable species underneath, black clouds emerged fast across the Sky and there was terrible turmoil around. Suddenly, the Sky looked like breaking way, emitting unprecedented poisonous flames, ‘Halahal’, swiftly engulfing the entire Universe. The initial churning was terminated and Demi-Gods headed by Lord Brahma as well as the Demons screamed for help to Lord Siva to save the situation. They all prayed to Him that He was the original life force, the Maha Tatva, the Eternal Truth and the Omni Potent and He only could stop the annihilation of the Universe. In response to the desperate prayers by one and all, Lord Siva swallowed the ‘Halahal’ and retained it in His Throat to safeguard the Worlds within His other body parts. Thus known in the Scriptures; as ‘Neela Greeva’ -the Blue Throated, He protected the entire Universe and saved the act of Creation itself. As the process of churning resumed further, a number of Divine Figures commenced emerging: ‘Surabhi’ the Cow required for unending milk and products required for Sacred Rituals as oblations to Fire God by Sages; a Divine Horse, Utthaisvarya, as desired by King Bali of the Under World; the Divine Elephant ‘Airavata’ and eight She Elephants, which were desired by Indra to possess; Koustubha Mani and Padmaraga Mani-the jewels decorating Lord Vishnu’s chest; ‘Parijata Tree’ to decorate the Celestial Gardens; then emerged Apsaras, the Divine dances to entertain Demi-Gods and Indra; the Goddess of Fortune, Lakshmi whom the Demi- Gods and Demons craved alike to possess but She Herself opted for Lord Vishnu Who is the ultimate Preserver of the Universe; then appeared the dame, Varuni, with voluptuous eyes who could control drunkards, whom King Bali opted for on behalf of the Demon World. Finally, a strong, stout, blackish and young person, known as Dhanvantari, the Physician of the Universe, whom both Demons and Demi- Gods agreed to share. But, the most awaited jar of Nectar noticed by the Demons was forcibly snatched away, to the disappointment of Demi-Gods. But, Lord Vishnu created a cover of ‘Maya’ (Illusion) and let the Demons fight among themselves for the sips of the Nectar. In the confusion, there appeared an outstanding beauty with most sonorous voice and dazzling figure, who was Lord Himself in the form of Mohini Murthi. She had mesmerised the Demons who fell in a spell and made them request her to do justice in equitably distributing the Nectar to all by turns. She made formations as per seniority and made them wait for turns. She started with the formations of the Demons, but by means of illusion had actually commenced the distribution among the Demi-Gods. Rahu a Demon somehow got into the camp of Demi- Gods and this was noticed by Sun and Moon, who complained the fact to Mohini Murthi and immediately the Sudarsana Chakra severed Rahu’s head, but since he drank the drops of Nectar already, Lord Brahma gave him the status of a Planet; but since then, Rahu became the enemy of Sun and Moon and torment them periodically by way of eclipsing them till date. At this juncture, Lord Vishnu revealed his identity and exhorted the Demons to mend their diabolic actions and take refuge in the Superior Energy instead of becoming slaves of the Eight Materialistic Vices, Viz. Kama (Desire), Krodha (Anger), Moha (Infatuation), Mada (Arrogance), Lobha (Avarice) and Matsara (Jealousy). He advised that in the ultimate analysis, only He would provide salvation which tantamounts to Eternity, which indeed the Nectar that they craved for.]

Devi Diti was remorseful at the non receipt of the share of amrita to Daitya- Danava- Rakshasaas and the eternity of Devatas under the Kingship of Indra, she approached Kashyapa Maharshi and sought for his advice and a boon to destroy Indra who had since become invincible and with long life. She declared: sāhaṁ tapaś carīṣyāmi garbhaṁ me dātum arhasi, īdṛśaṁ śakrahantāraṁ tvam anujñātum arhasi/ ‘ I am prepared to perform tapasya for long time, but may I be blessed to beget a son of invincibility and destroy the upstart Indra. Kashyapa having appreciated the agony and exasperation of Diti Devi, Kashyapa blessed Diti and said: pūrṇe varṣasahasre tu śucir yadi bhaviṣyasi, putraṁ trailokyā hantāraṁ mattas tvam janayiṣyasi/ evam uktvā mahātejāḥ pāṇinī sa māmṛja tām, samālabhya tataḥ svastīty uktvā sa tapase yayau/ In case Devi Diti could endure thousand year longed hard ‘tapasya, then the trailoka natha Indra could be possibly defeated. Diti then entered Kushapluva forest and initiated severe tapasya. Indra aided by Devas had sincerely enabled fetching all types of puja dravyas ranging from wood, fire, fruits, floweres, water vessels and so on and firmly established ‘rapport’ mutually. He used to press Diti’s feet and fingers with the typical affection to due to his own mother’s elder sister. As her tapasya thus continued for nearly thousand years, on one day of the remainder ten years felt so happy with Indra’s consistent service to her and addressed him and stated that she had been extremely delighted for enjoying Indra’s personalised and sincere service to her and very soon within the next few years of ten or so, his younger brother would be born to her. She confessed in semi consciousness: tam ahaṁ tvatkrte putra samādhāsye jayotsukam, trailokyavijayaṁ putra saha bhokṣyasi vijvaraḥ/ My son Indra! May I now confess that I had been performing this severe tapasya so far only to secure a son of fame who could defeat you for ever; but be assured that your consistent service to me all these years impressed me so much that I would change the newly arriving son’s psyche totally and ask him to be your follower instead! Indra then prostrated to Diti in a manner that his long head hairs fell and touched his long hairs at her feet and thus her body turned impure even after her long near thousand years of purified tapasya got contaminated with impurities. tasyāḥ śarīravivaraṁ viveśa ca purāṇdarāḥ, garbhaṁ ca saptadhā rāma bibheda paramātmavān/ bidhyamānas tato garbho vajreṇa śataparvaṇā, ruroda susvaraṁ rāma tato ditir abudhyata/ mā rudo mā rudaś ceti garbhaṁ śakro ’bhyabhāṣata, bibheda ca mahātejā rudantaṁ api vāsavaḥ/ Then even as she was in a state of semi-consciousness, Indra miniaturised his body with his ‘Anima’ Shakti of the Ashta Siddhis, entered her garbha and pierced with his vajrayudha as the child started crying as Indra cajoled the child not to cry [Supernatural Powers are Anima or the ability of miniaturising oneself; Mahima is turning one self giant like; Laghima is the capacity to get oneself unusually light; Garima is to make the Self too gross and heavy; Prapti is to achieve any kind of mental desire; Prakamya or providing fulfillment of other’s wishes; Vashitwa or capacity to control any other Party; Ishitwa or fully dominating over others as wished. Among many other Siddhis include Para Kaaya Pravesha or totally entering other’s body and even Soul; Doora Shravana or distant hearing, Doora Darshana or Distant Vision or ability to see things or actions any where from other places; Manojavam or reaching a place as fast as a thought as also thought reading; Kamarupa or assuming the physical form of another Being-be it a moving species or an immobile like a mountain]. As the child came out crying out from Devi Diti’s garbha requesting Indra not to hurt him, he confessed that his intentional dropping his long head hairs touched her feet and thus she got imputified and thus he was enabled to enter her garbha and therefore cut the child into seven pieces!.

Vishleshana on Devi Diti and Indra from Brahmanda Purana and Maha Bhagavata Purana

Brahmanda Purana: Diti revengeful of Indra and ‘Pumsavana’ Sacrifice : Diti felt that Indra was responsible for several killings of her progeny including Hiranyaksha and Hiranuyakasipu and thus her anger for Indra became intense. She thus requested her husband Kasyapa to bless her with a son who could kill Indra. Sage Kasyapa felt extremely sad that his wife was following a wicked route to bear her a son to kill Indra. He somehow desired that such an eventuality should never arise and planned to atleast prolong time for a year and asked Diti to follow very strict regime of personal sacrifice named ‘

Pumsavana’. During the year, Diti should not think ill of others, nor speak lies, nor hurt any body, nor eat flesh or fish, nor wear robes unwashed by herself, but worship Brahmanas, cows, and women with husbands and sons alive, in short follow a life of a hermit. Any discrepancy or deviation from the prescribed do’s and don’ts would not only kill Indra but would become a friend and associate. The nephew Indra knew the intention of Diti, but pretended to help her in the Daily Worships by fetching flowers and fruits to Diti and such other services. At the time of Diti’s delivery after a year, Indra who had yoga sidhis, like ‘anima’ and ‘laghima’ entered Diti’s womb and with the help of his ‘Vjara’ (the Thunderbolt) cut the embryo into seven pieces and cut each piece to another seven pieces. Each of the forty-nine pieces thus born became as many ‘Maruts’ who became demigods and thus Diti was purified of her envy and animosity of Lord Indra. Punsavana had thus become an important ‘Vrata’ (a sacred ritualistic practice of worship) by chaste women for one year with the help and active association of their husbands. During the bright half of month of ‘Kartika’ (falling during November-December), there should be an intense worship by both the husband and wife. On the last day of Moon-rise (Purnamasi or Pournami), the climactic worship (pujas) should take place with friends and relatives participating in the event, under the guidance of Brahmanas, performing twelve oblations to Fire God with ‘Ghee’ in a ritualistic manner by chanting the Mantra: ‘Om Bhagavatey Mahapurushaya Maha Vibhutaya Swaha’. During the entire preceding year too, the couple could -or atleast either of them- observe the prescribed daily worships to Goddess Lakshmi and God Narayana., by chanting the Mantra. Sincere worship on these lines ought to bless the couple and their family good health, prosperity, name alround and happiness. The Vrat can be done by unmarried women to secure good husbands; those who have no husbands/ sons could perform for spiritual solace.

Maha Bhagavata about Marud Ganas:

Since there were such continuous deaths of her family lineage, Diti was terribly upset as all the gallant heroes of Daityas were destroyed successively despite the valiant acts of their intrepidity and resoluteness; she entreated Kashyapa Muni to bestow a boon to her that she must give birth to a son who could kill Indra. Kashyapa Muni too felt that the progeny of Aditi were getting too powerful enjoying Swarga while the progeny of Diti were continuously rotting in the Sub-terrain Lokas despite the fact that they were courageous and highly enterprising. Thus the Muni directed Diti to follow celibacy and fasting with concentrated Tapasya for thousand years and and worship the Supreme whereafter she should observe a ‘Vrata’. Diti sought Shukraacharya’s direction to observe the Vrata. As Diti conceived eventually, Indra somehow got the awareness of what was happening and approached Diti with feigned feelings of affection to his mother’s own sister and made her agree to supply flowers and other materials for the Vrata and stayed with her day and night to protect her from Evil Spirits. As Diti fell asleep almost unconsciously when Sun was at peak on the Sky, Indra then entered her Garbha with his ‘Vajraayudha’, saw the fully grown up boy inside and even as the child cried, Indra cajoled him saying Maaroda maaroda (don’t cry, don’t cry) and sliced the child into seven parts [Aavaha-Pravah-Samvaha-Udvaha-Vivaha-Parivaha-Paraavaha] and further cut the seven parts to total up to forty nine sub-parts; the fully awoken Diti Devi pleaded mercy and cried loudly saying: na hantavyah, na hantavyah! (not to be killed, not to be killed!). Meanwhile Indra jumped out and sought her pardon for the imprudence that he committed! The terribly distressed Diti was taken aback and got bewildered for a while and having recovered her senses said that Indra need not be afraid of her anger as she would reconcile to what had happened since after all his action was not unjustified as his position would have been at stake of the child was really born. Having said that most magnanimously she blessed each part of the killed boy as follows: Bhavantu mama Putraanaam Sapta Sthaanaani vai Divi, Vaataskandhaanimaansapta charantu mama Putrakaah/ (May my sons be borne by Vayu into seven eternal places of glory and be blessed as Marut Devas with unprecedented splendour and reputation at seven parts of the Universe!) Diti declared further: Let the first sphere be on Earth, the second in Surya Mandala, the third in Chandra Mandala, the fourth on the Sky at the Jyotisha Mandala, the fifth among the Graha Mandala or the Planetary System, the sixth in the Saptarishi Mandala and the seventh in Dhruva Loka. May my sons move about freely in all the Seven Places with magnificence and pride. Diti further blessed and ordained that the first batch of Marud Ganaas or the first 'Vaata Skantha' or Air Pocket be called 'Avaha' in the vicinity of Bhumi; the second batch of the Vayu Skandha would be reputed as 'Prahava' beyond the clouds upto the Solar Region; the third and fourth batch of Marud Ganaas moving in the Lunar Mandala and underneath the Star Constellations, the Vayu Skandha would be fabled as 'Samvaha'; the fifth bunch of Marud ganaas reaching upto Planets would be distinguished as 'Vivaha'; let the sixth in the series climbing upto Saptarshi Mandala be popularised as 'Anuvaha' and the final hike nearby Dhruva Mandala be glorified as 'Parivaha'. Oh Shakra! Let it be known all over the Universe that the names of my children on the basis of the deeds entrusted to each of the Ganas are: Shukra jyoti, Satya, Satya Jyoti, Chitra Jyoti, Jyotishmaan, Sutava, Chaitya; the second Gana would comprise Rutajit, Satyajit, Sushena, Sevajit, Sutamitra, Amitra, and Suramitra; the names of the third Ganaas would be Dhatu, Dhanada, Ugra, Bhima, Varuna, Abhiyuktaaksha, and Saahvya. The fifth Gana would have the names of Druk, Anadruk, Sirat, Druma, Vrikshaka, Mita, and Samita. The Shasthagana would have the names of Iruk, Purusha, Naanaadruk, Samachetana, Sammita, Samavrit and Prati harta. (Incidentally, Brahmanda Purana did not mention the other names). Indra assured that whatever Diti had stated would indeed be firmed up and that all the Forty Marud Ganaas would be share holders of Yagna bhaagas or the Authorised Consumers of the Sacrificial Offerings. They would also be his own brothers and the Co-Devataas!

As Diti Devi had thus severed her womb into seven parts, she kept on crying at the tragedy, she appeared to have reconciled and addressed Indra that it was most unfortunate at the sequence of the events and even so do me the favour of allowing them to freely move about in all directions. Let the first child be popular as Marudas and be popular as 'Vaataskandhas'. Viz. Aavaha-Pravaha-Samvaha-Udvaha-Vivaha-Parivaha-and Paraavaha. May each of thus named Maruds be sub divided to seven each thus making the total of forty nine Marudas; the first lot of the Marud Ganas would move about in Brahma Loka, the second in the Indra Loka, the third in the Vayu loka. The rest of the Marud ganas might be as per the instructions of Indra and they be identified by their slogans of 'Maa Rudah'. Indra heard and noted the words of Devi Diti with veneration and close attention and responded with folded hands and declared that her sons would all of celestial forms and powers of the other Devas as well and would have total freedom to move about all over with no restrictions at all. There after they proceeded to their respective destinations. Thus Sage Vishvamisra addressed Shri Rama stating that they were at that very place where the above instances had occurred in the remote past when in the days of yore, there was an Ikshvaku King of great virtue and fame Hemachandra and in that family series were Suchandra- Dhumraaksha- - Srumbhaya-Saha Deva- Kushashva-Somadatta- Kakutstha- Sumati. Vishvamisra then declared that the trio would spend the night in the kingdom of Sumati and proceed to Mithila the kingdom of Janaka Raja. King Sumati having heard in advance of the arrival of the Maharshi and the well famed Raja Kumaras reached the precincts of the Kingdom and formally welcomed them in person and followers.

After exchanging niceties of mutual welfare, King Sumati profusely thanked the guests, especially Rama Lakshmanas whose style of walking and behaviour were reminders of an graceful Elephant King or of a profound King of Lions; their eyes are readily arresting as of freshly well opened up lotus flowers; their mighty shoulders carry ‘khadga- tuna dhanush’ as though putting the ever youthful Ashvini Kumars to shame while seeking to hide their valour with a thick layer of modesty! One should wonder that two Deva Kumaras had mistakenly descended and put their feet from Indra Loka to Bhuloka. Just as Surya and Chandra provide radiance and cool brightness respectively, this Kingdom had now come to attain glory with their arrival with high and mighty physiques and equanimous conduct and manners. Then as the King was lost in the presence of Rama Lakshmanas likewise, Maharshi Vishvamitra intervened and explained of the series brave acts that they had been exhibiting like the total annihilations of Daitya Rakshasa Danava Elements ever since their departure from Ayodhya. The awe inspiring incidents as described by the Maharshi gave thrills to the King and on partial recovery of his senses realised his duty to make their stay overnight to be comfortable at his maximum command. Next morning they had after their morning duties proceeded to Mithila of Vaishali desha and admired the set up, the orderliness, and ready attractions of the city. Mithila is bounded by the rivers of Mahanadi in the East, Ganga in the South, Gandaki in the west as sprawling foothills of Himalayas in the north extending into the eastern terrain (of the present Nepal) and the capital city of Videha Kings called Janakas. In the city of Mithila, there was an ‘ashram’ about which Maharshi Vishvamitra explained to Rama Lakshmanas; the ashram was of Maharshi Gautama and his wife Devi Ahalya a famed Parivrata in the days of yore. It was at this Ashram that Gautama cursed Indra as the latter masqueraded as Gautama; the Maya Gautama in the absence of real Gautama stated to Ahalya Devi: Ritukālam pratīkṣante nārthinaḥ susamāhite, saṅgamaṁ tv aham icchāmi tvayā saha sumadhyame/ ‘Normally, males approach their wives to bed till their menses period is over, but today, I would like you to lie with me’. But Ahalya sensed the presence of Indra in the form of Gautama but still yielded and asked Indra to disappear at once. Maharshi Vishvamitra continued to Rama Lakshmanas: Having sensed what had just happened between Maya Gautama and Ahalya, Gautama appeared at the ashram by his mystic powers and intercepted Indra at once at the ashram with ‘samidhaas and tirtha’ viz. wooden chips and water for igniting fire and sprinkling water readied for announcing a ‘shaapa’. Deva Raja Indra got shaken up with fright at the anger of the Maharshi as the latter announced: Mama rūpaṁ samāsthāya kṛtavān asi durmate, akartavyam idaṁ yasmād viphalas tvam bhaviṣyati/ gautamenaivam uktasya saroṣeṇa mahātmanā, petatur vṛṣaṇau bhūmau sahasrākṣasya tatkṣaṇāt/ Durmati! You have had the audacity of assuming my form and lured my wife to bed; therefore you would be as being ‘sahasraaksa’ with thousand eyes and as many of frightful forms as also being devoid of ‘anda kosha’ or the sheath of fertility; instantly that body part fell on earth and he appeared frightful with thousand wavering forms. Then Gautama cursed Arundhati: Iha varṣasahasrāṇi bahūni tvam nivatsyasi/ vāyubhakṣā nirāhārā tapyantī bhasmaśāyinī, adṛśyā sarvabhūtānām āśrame ’smin nivatsyasi/ yadā caitad vanaṁ ghoram rāmo daśarathātmajaḥ, āgamiṣyati durdharaṣas tadā pūtā bhaviṣyati/ tasyātiithyena durvyṛte lobhamohavivarjitā, matsakāṣe mudā yuktā svaṁ vapur dhārayiṣyasi/ ‘Duraacharini! May you become in this very ashram as a boulder / heavy stone with neither senses nor life with air as food and rain as drink, till such time after centuries, that Shri Rama would arrive at this ashram and with his sacerd ‘paada sparshana’ or the touch of His feet that you would be liberated to normalcy!’ Having cursed both Indra and Devi Ahalya thus, Maharshi Gautama retired to mountain tops for tapasya again.

Vishleshana on Indra assuming Maharshi Gautama’s form takes to bed Devi Ahalya, the latter’s wife - a supreme Pativrata Ganesha Purana, Chapters 30-34: Brahmarshi Narada states: He visited Lord Indra at Amaravati as the former complimented Narada as a Triloka Sanchari; Narada replied that his latest was ‘mrityuloka’ and chanced to meet Rishi Gautama in his ashram along with his wife Devi Ahalya; he also said that Ahalya was supremely pretty and her exquisiteness and grace was ‘par excellence’ in the Three Lokas that he ever visited as the Apsaras and all the Swarga based feminine beauty and charm was truly negligible. After Narada’s social call was over, Indra visited Gautama’s ashram; the Maharshi was busy with his morning duties and left the ashram. Meanwhile Indra assumed the Rishi’s form and entered their bedroom. Devi Ahalya was stunned to see Maya Gautama in her bed room and exclaimed whether the Muni had not left for the duties but lying in the bed. Indra in the maya rupa said that he short circuited the puja and desired to go into bed with her as he was attacked by 'kaama baana', fondled her red and luscious and body parts and slept with her as she replied that there would be no other stree dharma as she ought to be a Pativrata and chirruped :Karyeshu Dasi, Karaneshu Manthri; Bhojeshu Mata, Shayaneshu Rambha, Roopeshu lakshmi, Kshamayeshu Dharitri, Shat dharmayukta, Kuladharm Patni/ and fell into the bed of Maayavi Gautama! Then Indra showed his own form and Arundhati was astonished and shocked as a stone. Even in the bed she felt a doubt that the body which she fondled was of different odour. As Indra disappeared, she was lost in thoughts. As the husband returned, she fell straight at his feet as the Maharshi out of his 'divya drishti'/ celestial vision as what all had happened. He stated that : In respect of mantra-ayush-grihacchidra especially related to griha parivaara, rati karma-aoushadhi seva-maana sammaan as also avamaan and daama, a wise person should be discreet in advertising in public. Thus the Maharshi gave a 'shaap' to Devi Ahalya to turn into a stone since Ahalya was unable to distinguish the form- nature-and actions in comparison to a Para purusha and got mixed up with the his body parts and semen- albeit Indra was the Lord of Swarga. Then he gave a shaap to his dharma patni to instantly become a stone till such time Lord Shri Rama, in the course of vana vaasa would receive his 'paada sparsha'. On learning about the Maharshi's shaap, Indra got shivers like a sand storm got shattered by a mountain and instantly assumed the form of a cat and ran away from the scene. Realising that Indra fled away, the Maharshi cursed Indra to assume a swarupa as broken into thousand parts. As Indra who killed Vritraasura a Brahmana was carrying the ill- reputation of brahmana hatya, one of the Pancha Maha Paatakas of Stree hatya, Bhruna / Shishu hathya, Brahmana hatya, Go hatya and Guru hatya / Guru Bharya Gamana, realised that the shaap of Maharshi Gautama and rued deeply as to how could show up his face in Deva Sabha as he was expected to preach the principles of dharma while unable to observe and follow himaself, let alone enforce it! Indra decided : *Praanibhir bhujyate karma shubham vaashubham, tiryag yonim samaadaadya khapishyeghamaatmanah, nalinee kundmale tishthehen idragopagaruupadhruk/*All the 'jeeva rasis' in srishti- from Indra to an insect-ought to reap the fruits of their past acts and as such I ought to assume tiryak yoni or the form of a 'pashu pakshi keetaka' and thus decide to become a worm as an Indragopa keetaka.' [Reference on Pativratas: Sapta Pativratas: Ahalya, Draupadi, Sita, Tara, Mandodari, Anasuya and Sumati: An explanation of a Parivrata refers to Ahalya though she slept with Indra but she had her husband Muni Gautama was genuinely on her mind and when turned into a stone due to Gautama's Shaap Rama purified her too for her dereliction due to her ignorance; Draupadi though she married Pancha Pandavas since all the Pandavas were of the Amsha of Indra whose virility was distributed to Devi Kunti through Yama Dharmaraja to beget Yudhishtara, Vayu Deva to beget Bhima, Arjuna from his (Indra's) own and Ashwini Kumars from Devi Maadri as Nakula and Sahadeva apart from the fact that Draupadi was Indra's better half viz Sachi Devi who was originally Yagneshani the daughter of Agni as clarified in Markandeya Purana ; Devi Sita despite Ravana's pressure tactics had only Rama always; Devi Tara the wife of Vaali but the Tradition of Kishkindha allowed Sugriva to marry after Vaali's death as approved by Rama himself and Mandodari of course was a fixation on Ravana asura despite his infatuation with Sita; Anasuya the wife of Atri and the the illustrious Kardama Prajapati ; Sumati who was an outstanding Pativrata who adored her husband a Leper and even prostrated before a woman whom her husband desired to sleep with.]As Indra hid himself as a Indragopa Keetaka, Deva Guru Brihaspati and Devas approached Maharshi Gautama with the sincere prostrations and requested him to withdraw the shaap or atleast mitigate it. The Maharshi initially reacted stating that a person of Indra's stature as he was a kapati-shatha-dushta-aviveki-and pashchaattaapa rahita paapi and his paschaattapa would be futile. Yet, as you are all urging sincerely then Indra even in the keetaka form be taught with the Shadakshara Ganesha Mantra as Ganesha was always a 'sarva karta-sarva harta-sarvapaata-kripaanidhi-Brahmavishnu Shivaatmika and Mahasiddhi pradaayaka'. The vidhivatra Shadakshara Ganesha Mantra pleased Indra and the Gautama shaapa to Indra got diluted and hence forward Indra would hence forward would assume a divya deha become a sahasra netra instead of 'shasra shareera chheda'. Indra while assuming his normal swarupa- albeit with mitigated curse by Gautama, had foremost reached the Maharshi's feet and thanked him profusely. There after, Indra seated under a kadamba tree, practised Ganesh's shadakshara mantra for thousand years and Ganesha gave his benign darshan and blessed him as that the place, came to be famed as Kadambara Chintaa Mani pura and eversince that the Chintamani Sarovara had become reputed as a place as the abode of Abheeshta Siddhi Chintamani Vinayaka where Indra Himself constructed a huge temple with a sphatika murti with golden frame.

Indra got terrified at the curse of Maharshi Gautama and his wife Shachi Devi too left him away in anger and anguish. Indra's erstwhile tapasya too might be affected and he was thus worried as to how to surmount this predicament. Marudganas and Agni Deva then approached the Kavya vaahanaadi Pitru Devas and prostratingly requested them to accept the sacrifice of a goat and replace the animal's 'andakosha' to be transplanted and revive Indra's fallen 'andakoshaadis' again. As Agni's request was accepted the andakosha of Indra was revived with that of the sacrificed goat's andakosha. As this narration of Indra- Ahalya-and Gautama concluded, Maharshi Vishvamitra directed to enter the 'Goutamaashrama'. Dadarśa ca mahābhāgām tapasā dyotitaprabhām, lokair api samāgamya durnirīkṣyām surāsuraiḥ/ They then witnessed Maha Soubhagyashalini Devi Ahalya was lying there as a symbol of radiance with very long tapasya being invisible by Devaasuraas alike in that form of a stone. Sa hi gautamavākyena durnirīkṣyā babhūva ha, trayāṇām api lokānām yāvad rāmasya darśanam/ rāghavau tu tatas tasyāḥ pādau jagrhatus tadā, smarantī gautamavacaḥ pratijagrāha sā ca tau/ None indeed could ever see Devi Ahalya in Three Lokas for countless ages so far, but now Her appearance emerged visibly with the mere touch of Shri Rama's both the foot prints! On being visible, Devi Ahalya commenced her welcome to the Ashram with her washing Rama Lakshmanas feet and sincerely receiving them with the enquiries of their welfare politely! As this epic like occurrence was happening, Devaadi celestials showered sweet scented flowers from the high skies and resorted to reverberating sounds of drums in all the directions. As both Gautami Maharshi and Devi Ahalya were re-united, the citizens of trilokas rejoiced, even as Shri Rama Lakshmanas followed Maharshi Vishvamitra towards Mithilapuri.

 On hearing even a quick one stanza summing up of Rama Lakshmana's unbelievable conquests of Rakshasaas and other miracle acts especially 'Devi Ahalya shaapa vimochana and saakshaatkara', King Janaka's purohita Rishi Shatananda felt over awed. The latter was the elder son of Maharshi Goutama and he thanked Brahmarshi Vishvamitra who himself was of unparalleled glory of a Khastriya origin to the elevated status of a Brahmarshi! Shatananda continued his recall with nostalgic tears rolling down his cheeks as to how famed his mother was a Maha Sadhvi and desired to know the details from Vishvamitra as to how she on recovery of the 'shaaapa' that she would have been thrilled to vision Shri Rama in person and should have worshipped Him with flowers and ecstatic prayers! Shatananda's inquisitiveness had thus no barriers: did Vishvamitra give details to Shri Rama about the past glories about his mother as a pativrata of great renown, how Indra was fascinated with her, the circumstances as to how she had to yield to Indra, and the curses to Indra and herself, whether Shri Rama personally met his venerable father Gautama, and such torrential interregotations! Brahmarshi Vishvamitra replied to Maharshi Shatananda nātīkrāntam muniśreṣṭha yat kartavyam kṛtam mayā/ I have not done any thing unnatural bur had performed my duties merely! Then Maharshi Shatananda turned to Rama Lakshmanas and warmly welcomed them that their visit was the climax of their fulfillment of heart's outstanding desires and this was all due to the grace of Brahmarshi Vishvamitra. The Maharshi then broke into eulogies of Vishvamitra while addressing Rama Lakshmanas about the Brahmarshi Vishvamitra's glories loudly announcing nāsti dhanyataro rāma tvatto 'nyo bhuvi kaś cana, goptā kuśikaputras te yena taptam mahat tapah/ ‘Shri Rama! On this entire earth there could be no other ‘Dhanyaadhi dhanya Purusha’ like Vishvamitra who was presently the safeguarder to Rama Lakshmana at this moment!

Having thus declared to the universe, Shatananda Maharshi made a detailed diversion about Brahmarshi Vishvamitra as follows: ‘ Vishvamitra was originally a dharmatma king yet the suppressor of all evil energies on earth and a merciful king with ‘prajaakshema’ as the principal responsibility. He was the famed son of Gaadhi who was the son of Kushnaabha. The maha tejasvi King Vishvamitra reigned for over thousand years. One historic day he proceed on a hunting extravaganza along with an akshouhini of his sena crossing cities, kingdoms, rivers, huge mountains, forests for hunting animals and birds for fun; he also visited several ashrams of rishis deeply engaged in agni karyaas, vaalakhilyas of short stature hanging down huge tree branches engrossed in deep meditations and finally landed on the famed ‘ashram’ of the renowned Vashishtha Maharshi.

As per Maharshi Vasishtha's request, Kamadhenu Shabala arranged the pancha bhakshyas aplenty and afresh. Shataananda Maharshi addressing Rama Lakshmanas thus narrating the background of Brahmarshi Vishvamitra continued: Shri Rama! As Maharshi Vasishtha thus served excellent food to the King along with his entire army and retinue of queens and others too to their complete contentment, King Vishvamitra addressed Maharshi Vasishtha! gavāṁ śatasahasreṇa dīyatām śabalā mama, ratnaṁ hi bhagavān etad ratnahārī ca pāṛthivaḥ, tasmān me śabalā dehi mama iṣā dharmato dvija/ Maharshi! Do accept the charity from my kingdom about a lakh of prize cows yielding barrels of fresh and sweet milk due to my being the overall king of my subjects. It is out of the same authority of my being the King of this kingdom again, let me exchange Shabala as per the established principle of kingship.

[Aachaara kanda of Manu Smriti is quoted in this context: tam raajaa pranayansamyak trivargena abhivardhate or He is the ideal King who is truthfully wedded to the principles of virtue and nyaaya, modest and ideal earnings for the Self and dependents besides spare for charity, and controlled and regulated by moderate and just desires]

Vasishtha replied : Just as a dharmika parayana could never be severed from his inner consciousness, I too could never be aloof from me since my ‘havya-kavya kaaryas’ in my daily routine would certainly get affected severely. My routine of agnihotra-bali-homa- swaaha- vashatkaara and all the practice of related vidyas should get adversely disturbed too in her absence. In short, my very existence is my possession of Shabala. King Vishvamitra then offered fourteen thousand elephants, eight hundred golden chariots each of which adorned with four each of mighty horses of excellent nativity, in addition to which eleven thousand horses of the best possible parts of the contemporary kingdoms too, apart from one crore cows of sweet milk bearing breed. Maharshi Vasishta declared: King Vishamitra! I will not part with Shabala as this is my jewel, my prosperity, my life and my totality! .

Muni Shatananda addressing Shri Rama Lakshmanas thus explained Vasishtha's firm resolution never to part with Shabala Kama Dhenu, but the King and his mighty men sought to forcibly hurl it away, even as the Sacred Cow felt that as to which big mistake had been done by her that the Maharshi Vasishtha let his devout follower had let her be taken away forcefully! Having deeply felt agitated thus, Shabala with all her strength suddenly kicked off the grip of the strong soldiers and ran back with airborne speed and cryingly stated: Maharshi! why had you allowed those monstrous soldiers to let me be tied and forcibly taken away! Vasishtha replied: 'how indeed could you ever imagine that I had allowed you to be discarded! Vishvamitra is not only a mighty kshatriya king with vast army, chariots, elephants, horses, and of fame, where as I am a brahmana practising agni karyas and swadhyaayaas'. Shabala replied: na balaṁ kṣatriyasāhur brāhmaṇo balavattaraḥ, brahman brahmabalaṁ divyaṁ kṣatrāt tu balavattaram/ aprameyabalaṁ tubhyaṁ na tvayā balavattaraḥ, viśvāmitro mahāvīryas tejas tava durāsadam/ niyuṅkṣva mām mahātejas tvadbrahmabalasambhṛtām, tasya darpaṁ balaṁ yat tan nāśayāmi durātmanaḥ/ Maharshi! The might of Kshatriyas from their physical strength is nothing before from the spiritual prowess of Brahmanas and likewise the material energy of Kshatriyas pales into insignificance vis-à-vis the excellence of Maharshis. Maha Tejasvi Maharshi! do bestow a modicum of your spiritual vigor to me so that I could generate the force that would despoil and teach a lesson to the so caaked mighty King Vishvamitra! Then Vasishtha Maharshi asked Shabala to manifest the prowess of such 'sena' to turn to the opponents to pulp. King Vishvamitra was agitated and angered like fire and utilised several 'astras' but the kamadhenu retaliated by creating 'humkaara shabda' even as several more thousands of defenders were generated. Even as his sena was thus fast getting scarcer by the minutes, the King utilised rather light and low voltage 'mantrik astras' which generated thousands of yavana-shaka warriors with golden hued bodies with swords and 'tri shulas'. As the yavana shaka army was thus generated, Maharshi Vasishtha asked the Kama Dhenu to implement its 'Yoga bala' and create yet another band of warriors. Kamadhenu made another 'humkaara' which resulted in the generation of 'kambojas' of Surya Deva's radiance, from the 'stanaas' came out 'barbaraas', from the 'yoni' pradesha Yavanas, from the 'gobara sthaana' the 'shakas', and from the kamadhenu's body hairs the 'mlecchas' and 'kiraataas'. Maharshi Shatananda continued to Shri Rama that countless pores of the body of Kama Dhenu were sprouted veera-dheera-sena of elephants, horses, and chatiots. The youthful sons of King Vishvamitra then arrived but they had to soon retreat and died too. dṛṣṭvā vināśitān putrān balaṁ ca sumahāyaśaḥ, savrīḍaś cintayāviṣṭo viśvāmitro 'bhavat tadā/ saṁdura iva nirvego bhagnadamṣṭra ivoragaḥ, uparakta ivādityaḥ sadyo niṣprabhatām gataḥ/ hataputrabalo dīno lūnapakṣa iva dvijaḥ, hatadarpo hatotsāho nirvedaṁ samapadyata/ sa putram ekaṁ rājyāya pālayeti niyujya cha, pṛthivīm kṣatradharmaṇa vanam evānvapadyata/ sa gatvā himavatpārśvaṁ kinṇaroraga -sevitam, mahādevaprasādārtham tapas tepe mahātapāḥ/ King Vishvamitra saw for himself the devastation and total defeat of the remnant army and the tragic death of two of his three sons and was put to great shame. His haughty temper like the roarings of oceans had dropped to lowest ebbs. It looked that his strong and speedy wings on high skies were cut as of a powerful Kite which dropped to earth as of death itself! His army got decimated and two of his powerful sons died too. Only one son remained and having declared him as the next king to sustain the 'kshatriyatva' proceeded to the sideways of Himalayas, which were dominated by naagaas and kinnaraas for Tapasya to Maha Deva. Pursuant to persistent and severe tapasya, Maha Deva appeared and asked for the essence of 'dhanur vidya' since apparently he carried revengeful thoughts against Vasishtha! yadi tuṣṭo mahādeva dhanurvedo mamānagha, sāṅgopāṅgopaniṣadaḥ sarahasyaḥ pradīyatām/ yāni deveṣu cāstrāṇi dānaveṣu maharṣiṣu, gandharvayakṣarakṣaḥsu pratibhāntu mamānagha/ tava prasādād bhavatu devadeva mamepsitam, evam astv iti deveśo vākyam uktvā divaṁ gataḥ/ Maha Deva! as you have appeared in person being satisfied by my tapasya and asked me for a boon, may I seek to learn the secrets of Dhanur Vidya in totality, which Deva-Danava-Maharshi- Gandharva, Yaksha, Raakshasaas too be aware of; Maha Deva granted the boon and disappeared. Having been blessed by Maha Deva, King Vishvamitra moved forward to Maharshi Vasishtha's ashram, and having experimented various astras, burnt off the entire forest in which Vasishthaashram too existed. The latter alerted the ashrama vaashis of his own and others too not to get concerned at the challenging escapades of King Vishvamitra. Maharshi Vasishtha shouted at King Vishvamitra: āśramam ciraśamvṛddham yad vināśitavān asi, durācāro 'si yan mūḍha tasmāt tvaṁ na bhaviṣyasi/ ity uktvā paramakruddho daṇḍam udyamya satvarah, vidhūma iva kālāgnir yamadaṇḍam ivāparam/ Vishvamitra! *brahmabalaṁ divyaṁ mama kṣatriyapāṁsana/ Kshatriyakula kalangka Vishvamitra! Where is your kshaatra bala or the might of Kshatriyas and what is Brahma bala or the superiority of braahmana shakti! As Vishvamitra despatched Agneyastra, Vasishtha faced it with Brahmastra which instantly got dismissed with heavy water falls. Then in retaliation, the King rained a series of astras viz. Maanava-Mohana-Gandharva-Svaapana-Jrumbhana-Maadana- Santaapana-Vilaapana- Shoshana-Vidaarana- Vajraastra-Brahma paasha- Kaala paasha-Vaaruna paasha- Pinaakaastra-ashani- Dandaastra-Paishaachaastra-Krounchaastra-Dharma chakra-Vishnu chakra-Vaayavyaastra- Manthanaastra- Hayashira- Dvi Shakti-Kankaala- Bhayankara Trishulaastra-Kaapaalaastra- and Kankanaashtra. As all these astras failed to stoop Vasishtha, Vishvamitra finally resorted to Brahmastra. On visioning the Brahmastra, Deva-Devarshi-Gandharva- Maha Naagas were stunned and trilokas got rattled. Tad apy astram mahāghoraṁ brāhmaṁ brāhmaṇa tejasā, vasiṣṭho grasate sarvaṁ brahmadaṇḍena rāghava/ Maharshi Shataananad at this juncture addressed Shri Rama: as Brahmastra was released by King Vishvamitra thus, by the virtue of Maharshi's own excellence of Brahma Teja, his hand stick terminated and cooled down the Brahmastra released by King Vishvamitra! brahmāstram grasamānasya vasiṣṭhasya mahātmanah, trailokyamohanam raudram rūpam āsīt sudāruṇam/ romakūpeṣu sarveṣu vasiṣṭhasya mahātmanah, marīcya iva niṣpetur agner dhūmakulārciṣaḥ/ prājvalad brahmadaṇḍas ca vasiṣṭhasya karodyataḥ, vidhūma iva kālāgnir yamadaṇḍa ivāparaḥ/ As the Brahmastra got cooled down, the face and profile assumed such roudra swarupa that trilokas were flustered and shocked with fear as though three were fiery blasts emerged from the skin pores of his body. As he raised his handstick he looked that he was carrying 'yama danda' or 'brahma danda' with the fierce 'Kaalaagni'. All the groups of Maharshis raised their arms with raised heads in admiration shouting slogans that brahmatva be vindicated vis a vis kshatratva! Then King Vishvamitra finally decided to attain 'braahmanatva' by self control and 'tapasya' and became a Maharshi.*

He had made soul searching for long, left the kingdom for good, moved forward with his wife moved south of

Bharata, controlled the shad vargas of desire, anger, narrow mindedness, arrogance, infatuation and selfishness and adopted a truthful family life and was blessed with four sons of ‘dharmaiva’. His modest life, regular agni karmas, restrained food intake, down to earth living manner and spotless peaceful tapsya regularly attracted Brahma especially the sea change in his attitude and appeared in his vision to state: ‘Kushakanandana! Your transformation as of now secures the status of a ‘Rajarshi’ already lest the universe might not feel that your transformation had not been well recognised despite consistent tapsya! ‘ Thus having been blessed by Brahma earnestly, Vishvamitra has implicitly attained the universal acclamation of Brahmarshi! This being so, Maharshi Shatananda addressed Rama as follows: ‘It was at that time, there was an Ikshvaku Vamsheeya King of a truthful practitioner of Kshatra Dharma of ‘Shishtha Rakshana and Dushta shikshana’ named Trishanku. The King once enquired of Maharshi Vasishtha the traditional ‘asthana purohita’ of Ikshvaku Royalties: tasya buddhiḥ samutpannā yajeyam iti rāghava, gaccheyam svaśarīreṇa devānāṃ paramāṃ gatim/ sa vasiṣṭhaṃ samāhūya kathayām āsa cintitam, aśakyam iti cāpy ukto vasiṣṭhena mahātmanā/ Raghava! Raja Trishanku asked Vasishtha whether he could possibly perform such yajna that could facilitate him to secure swarga by his own mortal body! Vasishtha gave a curt reply that it was impossible to do so and walked off southward of Bharata in disgust as the King could have such absurd and fanciful ideas of ambition. The King got humiliated with the anger of Vasishtha at his seemingly fanciful but genuine desire. Then it occurred to the King that perhaps Vasishtha Kumaras who were engrossed in long tapsya not far off might help fulfill his wish. The King then prostrated before the Kumaras: śaraṇaṃ vaḥ prapadye 'haṃ śaraṇyāñ śaraṇāgataḥ, pratyākhyāto 'smi bhadraṃ vo vasiṣṭhena mahātmanā/ yaṣṭukāmo mahāyajñaṃ tad anujñātum arthatha, Guru Putras! May I seek your help as your father Maharshi Vasishtha has not agreed to the performance of one yajna kaarya; may I request you to take up the same as it is my duty now to approach the Guru Putras indeed!

Maharshi Shataanaanda continued the narration to Rama Lakshmanas about Vasishtha’s refusal to perform such yagna to enable King Trishanku to reach swarga in mortal form and the King’s approach to

Vasishtha kumaras to take up the yagna. Vasishtha Kumaras politely declined stating that once Vasishtha Maharshi refuses then his capability should not be discounted and they too could not take up the yajna. Then the King became insistent and rather arrogantly replied: Anyaaṃ gatim gamishyaami swastivestu tapodhanaah/ Vasishtha Maharshi had not agreed and you as his worthy sons too are nor obliging; ‘then I have no other recourse but to look for another purohita then!’ ṛṣiputrās tu tac chrutvā vākyam ghorābhisamhitam, śepuḥ paramasaṃkrudhās caṇḍālatvaṃ gamiṣyasi, evaṃ uktvā mahātmāno viviśus te svam āśramam/ atha rātryāṃ vyatītāyāṃ rājā caṇḍālatāṃ gataḥ, nīlavastradharo nīlaḥ paruṣo dhvastamūrdhajaḥ, cityamālyānulepaś ca āyasābharaṇo ’bhavat/ As King Trishanku had thus replied to Vashishtha Kumaras, the latter could not control their anger and cursed the King to turn into a ‘chandala’ the worst of species far be below the human level and left away. Then as a chandala, his skin turned blue, his body and body parts turned blue, and even his clothes turned iron blue too. As the King thus got affected by his arrogance, his ministers, courtiers, and the public were frightened and none dared to go near him. In that miserable state of chandalatva, the King was kept aloof by the society for days and nights in disgusting solitude and finally decided to offer himself to flames and as an ultimate resort approached Maharshi Vishvamitra. The Maharshi saw the King Trishanku on the miserable form of chandala and felt melted in his heart; the King narrated the happenings of Visishtha and his sons were responsible for that state of his; Trishanku further repentently said albeit assertingly: saśarīro divaṃ yāyāṃ iti me saumyadarśanam, mayā ceṣṭam kratuśataṃ tac ca nāvāpyate phalam/ Muneeshvara! But now I realise that Daivatva is omnipotent and my fate is inevitable; you are now my singular hope in my life as you could only be the instrument for reviving my life ambition. Tasya me paramārtasya prasādam abhikāṅkṣataḥ, kartum arhasi bhadraṃ te daivopahata -karmaṇaḥ/ nānyāṃ gatim gamiṣyāmi nānyaḥ śaraṇam asti me, daivam puruṣakāreṇa nivartayitum arhasi/ Maha Muni! Shatananda Maharshi addressing Rama Lakshmanas continued that Vishvamitra took pity on the King Trishanku in the form of chandala and gave an assurance that he should most certainly reach swarga with his mortal body. Then he instructed his disciples to collect and arrange for the required material for yajna kaarya. He further asked them to invite co-brahmanas to join the yajna including Vasishtha kumaras who heckled Trishanku and cursed him to become a chandala. Vishvamitra shishyaas likewise invited all, but Vasishtha Sishyaas were reported to have stated angrily as follows: kṣatriyo yājako yasya caṇḍālasya viśeṣataḥ, katham sadasi bhoktāro havis tasya surarṣayaḥ/ brāhmaṇā vā mahātmāno bhuktvā caṇḍālabhojanam, katham svargaṁ gamiṣyanti viśvāmitreṇa pālitaḥ/ ‘A Chandala desires to perform the yajna and a Kshatriya would be the Aacharya. Be that as it may, how indeed a kshatriya turned chandala be despatched to swarga by another kshatriya turned brahmana, that too with the chandaala’s mortal body!’ Having heard this insinuating remarks of Vasishtha Kumaras, Vishvamitra fumed like fire and declared: yad dūṣayanty aduṣṭaṁ mām tapa ugraṁ samāsthitam, bhasmībhūtā durātmāno bhaviṣyanti na saṁśayaḥ/ I am right now in severe tapasya and am expected to be peaceful without anger and such mental aberrations; yet I am constrained to say that whosoever evil minded invitees to my yajna talked disparagingly about me and the yajna being proposed be surely be converted as heaps of human ash sooner or later; further in their following births, they should be born as chandalas and roam around begging with frightening forms. Having stated thus Vishvamitra could state nothing more and kept quiet!

Shatananda Muni continued his narration to Rama Lakshmanas about the subdued anger against Vasishtha Kumaras and addressed on his introductory speech to the Sages who arrived in response to his yagjnya karya with the express objective of despatching Ikshvaku Raja Trishanku to swarga with the latter's mortal body. Then the Munis at the conference grouped together that Maharshi Vishvamitra was a known and learned Sage but a highly volatile and angry person and hence what ever he directed by dutifully executed without doubts and hesitations. Thereafter the yagna commenced and Vishvamitra was the 'Atharvyu' the principal initiator-conductor of the yagina. As the 'havishaanna' was offered to respective Devatas, none of the Devas turned up to accept. Then the fuming Vishvamitra yelled in great anger: paśya me tapaso vīryaṁ svārjitasya nareśvara, eṣa tvāṁ svaśarīreṇa nayāmi svargam ojasā/ duṣprāpaṁ svaśarīreṇa divaṁ gaccha narādhipa, svārjitaṁ kiṁ cid apy asti mayā hi tapasaḥ phalam, rājāṁs tvāṁ tejasā tasya saśarīro divaṁ vraja/ Nareshvara Trishanku! Indra got shocked and furious shouting that there would never ever be a place in swarga and kicked him down. Trishanku yelled 'traahi traahi' in utter desperation while rapidly slipping down the thick clouds. Vishvamitra shouted at Trishanku with hysterics and commanded him to stay pur right there. The Vishvamitra looked up at the Rishimandala on the high skies and materialised Sapta Rishis and brand new nakshatras and declared angrily: Anyamindram karishyaami loka vaayasyaadanindrakah, daivataanyami sa krodhaat srashtam samupachakrame/ I will rather create another Indra or a new swarga loka without Indra! So saying with assertion Vishmamitra manifested fresh devataas! As the Maha Muni so decided: down on earth, samasta deva-asura-rishi groups made an appeal politely: ayaṁ rājā mahābhāga guruśāpapakṣataḥ, saśarīro divaṁ yātuṁ nārhaty eva tapodhana/ Maharshi Vishvamitra! King Trishanku was cursed by Guru Putras to assume 'chandalatva' and as such not qualified to attain swarga as a mortal. Vishvamitra retalliated to say that his statements and decisions should not be falsified ever! Therefore: Maha Raja Trishanku should hereafter enjoy the pleasures of swarga loka for ever; I have already manifested fresh nakshatra mandali for ever till pralaya; like wise the totality of divine material elsewhere too would exist in tact. May this parallel arrangement be in position without disturbance.!' The Munis collected at the Vishvamitra Yagina was greatly surprised at the unforgettable happenings and truly admired the outstanding ability in creating a new swarga itself on the mid skies!

Vishleshana on Vishvamitra- Trishankhu swarga: Skanda Purana's Nagara Khanda describes a modified version:

King Trishanku of Surya Vamsa made an odd request to the his Guru Sage Vasishtha that he would like to go to Swarga with his mortal body and that such a Yagna be performed enabling him to do so. Vasishtha ridiculed the idea and the King asked the Sage's sons to find a way out, lest he might abandon Vasishtha as his Guru; the infuriated sons cursed the King to turn out to be a 'chandala' of low caste. The frustrated Trishanku in the form of a chandala left the Kingdom making way for his son Harischandra as the King and wandered in forests where he met Sage Viswamitra who took up the issue as a challenge, especially because he was a traditional competitor and enemy of Vasishtha. The Sage asked that Trishanku should first get rid of the form of a chandal and desired him to perform a Holy Pilgrimage. As both of them were set on visiting Tirthas, they reached Arbudachal (Abu) to visit 'Achalaswar' and met Markandeya who advised them to take a trip to Haatakeswar and take bath in the Patala Ganga there. To their great surprise, the Snaan and worship at that place did the miracle and Trishanku got rid of the curse of his becoming a chandala. Even as Trishanku was preparing to perform a Grand Yagna, the Sage approached Lord Brahma to be the Chief Guest who refused saying that it was against the realm of possibility that a human in his form could reach Swarga. This nodoubt frustrated Trishanku as also Viswamitra but the latter never gave up the effort and did harsh Tapasya to Bhagavan Siva who out of generosity granted the boon of ability to duplicate the task of Brahma's Creation; the Sage succeeded in creating another Sun, Moon, Sky, Air, Water etc. Indeed the parallel Srishti panicked Brahma and the compromise reached was that if Brahma took Trishanku to Swarga in the latter's mortal body; Viswamitra would refrain from making a parallel creation.

Maharshi Shataanada continued addressing Shri Rama that as Vishvamitra created a new swarga, the sages attending the Yagna were alerted by Vishvamitra not to disperse in the southern direction as that might not be auspicious but any other direction might be preferable. In fact, the western direction should be good as there were three Pushkaras of Brahma Deva and those would be truly fruitful and well suited for tapsya. As the sages as per Vishvamitra's advice proceeded westward and found that King Ambarisha of Ikshvaaku Vamsha was organising a maha yaginya at Pushkara. At this Yagjna, Indra stole away the 'Yagjna Pashu'. The Purohita raised an alarm to the King that the fact of the Yagjna Pashu was certainly not a good augury for the Yagjna and hence there could be only two alternatives, either to somehow recover and restore the yagjna pashu within a reasonable week's time or else to secure a 'Nara Pashu' or a Sacrificial Human Being, for the sin of which there could be a 'praayaschitta' or atonement! Then King Ambarisha declared an offer of thousand cows to secure a 'nara pashu'. By advertising this offer, both the King accompanied by his queen visited in several town ships and villages of his and neighbouring kingdoms too. In the process, they reached the 'ashram' of Muni Rucheeka. The latter having heard the predicament of the Rajarshi King Ambarisha suggested that a nara pashu might be possible to be secured if the offer could be for a lakh of cows in which case the Maharshi could perhaps spare one his three sons; the King and the Queen jumped with joy and readily agreed. Then Muni Rucheeka declared: nāham jyeṣṭham naraśreṣṭham vikrīṇyām katham cana/ Raja! We have three sons, but since the eldest being the 'vamshoddhaarakā' I am certainly not agreeable to be spared. Then the wife of the Muni asserted: prāyeṇa hi naraśreṣṭha jyeṣṭhāḥ pitṛṣu vallabhāḥ, mātṛṇām ca kanīyāṃsas tasmād rakṣe kanīyasam/ Oh King! Just as the father refuses to spare the eldest, I am of the firm resolve never to spare my youngest son in any case! Then the middle son stated: pitā jyeṣṭham avikreyaṃ mātā cāha kanīyasam, vikṛitaṃ madhyamaṃ manye rājan putraṃ nayaṣva mām/ My father could not spare the eldest son and my mother refuses to sell off the youngest; hence you may take me named the unfortunate Shunashepa away as the 'Nara Pashu'! Ambarisha readily enhanced the emolument several fold and took away greatly relieved!

Vishleshana on Pushkara Tirtha(Rajasthan): Kurma Maha Purana in its 24th chapter on Tirtha Mahatmya narrates: Tirtham Tri- Loka vikhyatam Brahmaanah Parameshthinah, Pushkaram Sarva paapagham mritaanaam Brahma lokadam/ Manasaa sasmared yastu Pushkaram vai dwijottamah, Puyare paatakaaih sarvaih Shakrena saha modate/ Tatra Devaah sugandharvaah sayakshoragaa rakshasaah, Upaasate siddha sankhaa Brahmaanam Padma sambhavam/ Tatra snaatvaa bhavedchudro brahmaanam parameshthinam, Pujayitvaa dwijavaraan Brahmaanam samprapashyati/ Tatraabhigamya Devesham Puruhutam -anininditam, Sarupo jaayate martyah sarvaan kaamaanavaapnuyaat/ (Parameshthi Brahma's Pushkara named Tirtha is popular all over the Tri-Lokas, as that outstanding Tirtha is at once sin destroying and to those who die there bestows Brahma Loka. Those Dwijottamas sincerely memorise the name of Pushkar are blessed with instant relief of blemishes and enjoy celestial happiness along with Indra the King of Devas. This Pushkar Tirtha is such as worshipped by Gandharva-Yaksha- Naaga-Rakshasa-Siddha companies worship the Lotus seated Brahma directly and to the distinguished Brahmanas who sincerely venerate him so in his presence with Bahyaantara Shuchi or Internal and External cleanliness, 'Brahma Saakshatkaara' does happen in reality. Having undertaken a sincere and faithful Yatra to this Pushkara and secure the celestial vision of blemishless Indra too, then fulfillment of one's desires and aspirations is very easy to obtain indeed.)

Both Padma Maha Purana and Maha Bharata asserted: Dushkaram Pushkaram gantum Pushkare tapah, Dushkaram Pushkare daanam vastum chaiva sudushkaram/ Treeni shringaani shubhraani treeniprasavanaani cha, Pushkaraanyaadi siddhaani na vidyastatra kaaranam/ (Pushkar Yatra is indeed troublesome and is available by one's own good luck; Residing-giving away daana-performing meditation etc. at Pushkar too are rather difficult to accomplish. Yet visit to Pushkar the enlightening 'Tirtha Traya' where Sarasvati River too flows is indeed a Siddha Maha Tirtha for reasons yet unknown) Yathaa Suraanaam sarveshaamaadistu Purushottamah, Tathaiva Pushkaram Raajastirthaanaamaadir - upyate/ Yastu Varsha shatam Purnamaadagnihotramupaacharet, Kartikaam vaa vasedekaam Pushkare samameva tat/ (Just as among Devas Purushottama Vasudeva is the most superior, Pushkara is the unique among all the Tirthas. [Pushkar, Kurukshetra, Gaya, Ganga, Prabhasa are the Pancha Tirthas and Manasarovara in Tibet, Pushkar, Bindu Sarovara in Siddhapur, Narayana Sarovar in Kutch Region and Pampa sarovara near Hospet are the Pancha Sarovaras]. The outcome of hundred years of Agnihotra Upasna on the one hand and residing and worshipping at Pushkara Tirtha on a Kartika Purnima night are near equivalent.) Padma Purana explains the legendary background of the Pushkara Tirtha: At very beginning of 'Vishwa Srishti' of Universal Creation, there was a Rakshasa named Vajra naabha who was engaged in the most cruel and wreckless activities; Brahma meanwhile emerged from the Naabhi (Navel) of Vishnu and the latter's first wish was to perform Yagna and landed at Pushkar even with a part of the stem of the Padma / Lotus with which he killed Vajra naabha. As the lotus was discarded by him, there got a Lake manifested on the banks of which Brahma performed the first ever Yagnya. He carved out a Yagna Vedit in the vacant plot between three Holy Areas viz. Sarasvati in the west, Chandra nadi in the North and Nandana sthaan in the East and the region in between as the Yagna Vedit; he created three Pushkar Tirthas viz. Jyeshtha-Madhyama-Kanishtha. All the Maharshis who made their Ashrams and Devas arrived and Bhagavan Shankar as Kapaladhari too arrived. But Devi Savitri delayed and since the Muhurta to commence the Yagna was round the corner, Brahma created Devi Gayatri and married her as meanwhile on noticing Gayatri left in an angry huff to a nearby mountain and performed another Yagna on the mountain top. It was stated that Lord Varaha got manifested from Brahma's nostril top. Thus, at the present Pushkar Tirtha, besides Brahma, Gayatri, Varaha Bhagavan, Kapaleshwara Shiva, Savitri on the Mountain top, and Agastya Maharshi continue to stay at Pushkar Tirtha till date.

Pushkar's cynosure is the Brahma Temple, not far from Pushkar Tirtha, and Brahma's right side is Savitri Mandir and to the left is the Gayatri Mandir; besides the Chaturmukha Brahma are the Idols of Sanakaadi Munis; in a small Mandir is Narada and in another small Mandir are the idols of Kubera seated on elephant. Another Mandir of Pushkar is dedicated to Badari Narayana, but an ancient Varaha Mandir was destroyed and since got re-built. Yet another Mandir of the Tirtha is that of Atmeshwar Maha deva, also called Kapaleshwar or Atapateshwara Maha deva. Near by Pushkar there is a Shuddha vaapi named Gaya Kund where Pitru shraddas are performed. There is a Savitri Devi Mandir on a nearby mountain top. Yet on another hill top is the famed Gayatri Mandir reckoned as one of the Shakti Peethas where Devi Sati's Manibandha or wrist ornament fell. In Pushkar Tirtha, there is also 'Yagna Parvata' where Brahma performed his illustrious Yagna; there is also the Agastya Ashram and Agastya Tirtha; it is stated that besides Pushkara Snaan, the snaana of Agastya Kunda would only complete Pushkar Yatra, since the Kunda snaana is a total wash off of one's sins. The most essential snaana of Pushkar is in any case is that of Sarasvati River which is called 'Praachi Saraswati' also addressed by five names viz. Suprabha, Kanchana, Praachi, Nanda and Vaishalika. Pushkara's bathing on Kartika Pournami is stated to be of paramount significance. Some 8 km. away from Pushkar Tirtha is the Sangama of Praachi Sarasvati and Nandaa River. Near by the Sangama, the Naga Parvat has several caves including Bhartruhari Cave and Shila named after him.]

Maharshi Shatananda continued to Rama Lakshmanas that King Ambarisha arrived at noon time at the Pushkara Tirtha along with the boy Shunahshepa and rested for a while. While the King was resting, Shunahshepa loitered on the banks of Pushkara and while witnessing several Munis engrossed in tapasya, happened to accidentally met his uncle Maharshi Vishvamitra. As the boy was looking extremely worried and lonely, Vishvamitra cajoled the boy who looked unfed, depressed, and lost, Vishvamitra took him on his lap as the boy said: na me 'sti mātā na pitā jñātayo bāndhavāḥ kutaḥ, trātum arhasi mām saumya dharmeṇa munipuṅgava/ trātā tvam hi muniśreṣṭha sarveṣāṁ tvam hi bhāvanaḥ, rājā ca kṛtakāryaḥ syād ahaṁ dīrghāyur avyaya/ svargalokam upāśnīyām tapas taptvā hy anuttamam, sa me nātho hy anāthasya bhava bhavyena cetasā, piteva putraṁ dharmātmam trātum arhasi kilbiṣāt/ Maharshi! I now have a mother, or father or a relative. You only could save me as King Ambarisha be fulfilled of his desire and I could be too sent to heaven and be blessed with everlong life. As the boy was crying away out of helplessness, Vishvamitra then addressed the Munis around and said : ‘ it is most unfortunate that the era ended now as fathers longing for such sons who could save them after their own deaths! This helpless boy seeks protection from me!’ Then Vishvamitra addressed the young brahmachari boys busy with their duties and said that this boy would seek my protection and therefore come forward to save him by becoming martyrs in becoming Yajna pashus and offer yourself to flames of fires and make the Yajna of the King a grand success as several Devas would be satiated with the Sacrifice! As Vishvamitra was addressing the Maharshis , one of them viz. Madhucchanda Maharshi the famed composer of Rigveda hymns and a few other supporters of Nara Pashu Yajna tauntingly and sarcastically retorted to Vishvamitra stating katham ātmasutān hitvā trāyase 'nyasutam vibho, akāryam iva paśyāmaḥ śvamāṁsam iva bhojane/ teṣāṁ/ ‘Sir! How come that you could have allowed to be killed your own sons in Shabala Kamadhenu battle with you, but now you wish to save this Shunahshepa now! Just as one might get incensed while dog’s meat is served , the same way one ought to have reacted as your own sons were killed; but then why somebody else’s son was being sacrificed, you are getting worked up!’ Then Vishvamitra got terribly worked up with red eyes and replied: niḥsādhvasam idaṁ proktaṁ dharmād api vigarhitam, atikramya tu madvākyaṁ dāruṇaṁ romaharṣaṇam/ śvamāṁsabhojinaḥ sarve vāsiṣṭhā iva jātiṣu, pūrṇaṁ varṣasahasraṁ tu prthivyāṁ anuvatsyatha/ ‘You the Maharshis supporting Vasishtha Putras to have had the audacity to blame me not to have been able to save my sons from being killed; now my sheep to you all of you the supporters of Vishvamitra’s sons as well as to Vasishtha’s sons too to become instantly as dog meat eating ‘mushtikas’ or beggars for thousand years on earth!’ Subsequently, Munikumara Shunahshepa was tied to the pole as the ‘yajna pashu’ with red flowered garlands, as the mantras relevant to Indra and Vishnu; the Munikumara requested the King Ambarisha not to delay further even as the co-ritvijas too sought to proceed faster, and having taken the approval of the audience completed the sacrifice. Lord Indra seemed to have blessed the ‘yajna pashu’ with thousand long subsequent life! Maharshi Vishvamitra continued his severe tapasya at the pushkara tirtha itself.

Muni Shatananda continued stating to Rama Lakshmanas that as Vishvamitra's thousand years of tapasya concluded, groups of Devas arrived to bless him and stated that from kshatriyatva, Vishvamitra had now been upgrated as Maharshi . Having heard that encouraging outcome, Maharshi Vishvamitra continued for the next status and resolved to yet another thousand years of tapasya. As he had thus initiated the next phase of tapasya, Apsara Menaka arrived at the pushkara tirtha redeadying herself to take her sacred bath. Vishvamitra was mentally imbalanced at her alluring body figure and flashy appearance, and invited her to stay in his ashram. As he was unable to lose his self control, both lived together for some months together. But having realised subsequently, he felt anguished that Devas were still unkind to him and they were still testing his self control; he chided Menaka too and having sent her off shifted to the northern heights of Himalayas and took to the severemost tapasya , even as Devas were flustered and approached Brahma. In turn, Brahma Deva was pleased to bless him and stated: Maharṣe svāgataṁ vatsa tapasogreṇa toṣitaḥ, mahattvam ṛṣimukhyatvam dadāmi tava kauśika/ Welcome Vishvamitra! I am very pleased to grant you the status of the foremost of Maharshis. Brahmaṇaḥ sa vacaḥ śrutvā viśvāmitras tapodhanaḥ, prāñjaliḥ praṇato bhūtvā pratyuvāca pitāmaham/ brahmarṣi śabdāṁ atulaṁ svārjitaiḥ karmabhiḥ śubhaiḥ, yadi me bhagavān āha tato 'haṁ vijitendriyaḥ/ Vishvamitra then greeting Brahma with prostrations made an appeal that in case the latter was truly happy with my tapasya then he might bless Vishvamitra with the Title of Brahmarshi. Then Brahma replied: 'Muni shreshtha! You have still not yet ripe as a 'Jitendriya' and should have to resort to further tapasya. As per Brahma Deva's instructions, Maharshi Vishvamitra further continued ruthless and far more rigorous tapasya, and Indra accompanied by Marudganas convened a conference with apsaraas.

Indra at his conference with apsaras addressed pointedly to Rambha who blushed and replied with folded hands that Maharshi Vishvamitra had proved himself as a frightful personality and as such be kindly excused for the onerous task. Indra accorded encouragement and said that she could kindly be requested than being instructed and with all her abilities of physical and psychological nature, Vishvamitra be veered around and subdued. As Rambha then approached him, Vishvamitra recognised Rambha's voice which was sonorous like of a cuckoo bird and instantly realised the vicious planning of Indra in despatching Rambha. He addressed her: yan mām lobhayase rambhe kāmakrodhajayaiṣiṇam, daśavarṣasahasrāṇi śailī sthāsyasi durbhage/ brāhmaṇaḥ sumahātejās tapobalasamanvitaḥ, uddhāriṣyati rambhe tvāṁ matkrodhakaluṣīkṛtām/ Hey Rambhe the most unfortunate! Vishvamitra further said: evam uktvā mahātejā viśvāmitro mahāmuniḥ, aśaknuvan dhārayituṁ kopaṁ saṁtāpam āgataḥ/ Rambhe! Once you might be relieved of my curse, a mahe brahmana of unparalleled tapomahima - Vasishtha would be pleased to relieve and recover my curse. Meanwhile, Indra and followers slipped away along with Manmadha desirous of encouraging and assisting the accursed Rambha. Visishtha then continued his tapasya for thousand years as already resolved by him.

Even as Vishvamitra resorted to the severest possible tapasya he no doubt got awefully thinned down in body and energy while countless hurdles were faced but his short temper still persisted. As thus the tapasya reached the thousand year mark, Indra approached him as a brahmana medicant soliciting for readily cooked food meant for Vishvamitra himself. Despite his 'mouna vrata' of keeping silence for years, Vishvamitra gave away the entire food to the brahmana. He continued to even stopping his normal breathing and resultantly from his head emerged smokes of fume. tato devāḥ sagandharvāḥ pannagāsurasarāṅgāḥ, mohitās tejasā tasya tapasā mandaraśmayāḥ, kaśmalopahatāḥ sarve pitāmahaṁ athābruvan/ bahubhiḥ kāraṇair deva viśvāmitro mahāmuniḥ, lobhitaḥ krodhitaś caiva tapasā cābhivardhate/ na hy asya vṛjinaṁ kiṁ cid dṛśyate sūkṣmam apy atha, na dīyate yadi tv asya manasā yad abhīpsitam, vināśayati trilokyam tapasā sacarācaram, vyākulās ca dīśaḥ sarvā na ca kiṁ cit prakāśate/ sāgarāḥ kṣubhitāḥ sarve viśīryante ca parvatāḥ, prakampate ca pṛthivī vāyur vāti bhṛṣākulaḥ/ This had created havoc in trilokas and Devata-Rishi-Gandharva-Naaga-Rakshasas got shaken with fright. They made a frantic appeal to Brahma Deva and described that the severity was getting further and further momentum. Ocean waters were raised higher and higher, mountains were getting broken down and earthquakes were hastened repeatedly. Then Maharshi Vishvamitra was of the form of sky high flames and one might imagine that 'pralaya' time had almost arrived nearby. It was at that critical juncture, Brahma Deva arrived before Vishvamitra and said sweetly: dīrgham āyus ca te brahman dadāmi samarudgaṇaḥ, svasti prāpnuhi bhadraṁ te gaccha saumya yathāsukham/ Brahman! I have arrived now with Maruganas and am totally contented with your tapasya and bless you to accomplish the glory and name of being a Brahmarshi henceforth. Addressing the Deva ganas headed by Indra, Vishvamitra stated: yadi me prāptaṁ dīrgham āyus tathaiva ca, omkāro 'tha vaṣaṭkāro vedās ca varayantu mām/ kṣatravedavidāṁ śreṣṭho brahmavedavidāṁ api, brahmaputro vasiṣṭho mām evaṁ vadatu devatāḥ, yady ayaṁ paramaḥ kāmāḥ kṛto yāntu surarṣabhāḥ/ 'As Brahma Himself blessed me with the unique title and status of Brahmarshi, may Omkara-Vashatkaara (or Seers with intuition- independent judgment-charm-vision-enlightenment-conviction- and equanimity) and Chatur Veda jnaana; besides, dhanur veda-brahma veda- to be within my reach. Most essentially, Vasishtha Maharshi himself should on his own appear and concede my superiority! Then Indraadi Deva blessed the Brahmarshi acknowledged with 'tathaastu' and disappeared. Maharshi Vasishtha then appeared on his own and congratulated the Brahmarshi. This was how Maharshi Shatananda requested the omnipresent Brahmarshi Vishvamitra described in detail of the glory of the Brahmarshi to Rama Lakshmanas, even as the smiling Brahmarshi instantly stood before Shatanada- Rama-Lakshmanas. That was the time when King Janaka prostrated before the Brahmarshi and complemented Maharshi Shatananda for his vivid picturisation of Vishvamitra and the vicissitudes of his life climaxing as the 'Isihatic Brahmarshi'. King Janaka then warmly welcomed Shri Rama

Lakshmanas to kingly accompany the Brahmarshi as the rest of the audience at the King's intimate court members who welcomed the trio of Brahmarshi-Rama-Lakshmanas with admiration and approbations. Then the royal guests of honour were respectfully invited into their respective places of overnight rest.

Next morning King Janaka called on Brahmarshi and Rama Lakshmanas and after due respects asked them as to the purpose of their visit. Vishvamitra conveyed that Rama and Lakshmanas being outstanding heroes desired to know about and glance at the famed Shiva Dhanush. King Janaka then gave the background of the widely reputed dhanush. In the days of yore, King Nimi was gifted a 'Shiva Dhanush' at the time of the wedding of his son Devaraata, and they could lift up this famed dhanush comfortably. King Janaka continued that this 'dhanush' was believed to have been that of Parama Shiva Himself. At the time of Daksha Yagjna Vidhvamsa, Bhagavan Shankara playfully materialised this Dhanush and angrily addressed various Devas who attended Daksha Yagjna that they had the audacity of participating the proceedings although they were well aware that Parama Shiva himself was not invited to the Yagjna and therefore he would like to break their heads. Devas who were present got frightened and tried to mitigate the anger of Shiva with prayers and as a sign of excusing them gave away this dhanush to them all. Devas in turn gifted this invaluable gift at the wedding of King Nimi's son Devarata and that indeed was the background of this Shiva Dhanush.

Vishleshanas on 1) King Nimi and 2) Daksha yagjna

King Nimi of Ikshwaku dynasty was extremely righteous and desired once to perform a Maha Yagjna in the name of Bhagavati. The Raja Guru Vasishtha Muni agreed to be the Head Priest and conduct the Yaga. As all the preparations were ready just on the appointed time, Vasishtha Muni sent word that Indra Deva wished to perform a Yagna and thus the homa by the King be deferred to another date. King Nimi was furious and went ahead with his Yagna as scheduled in the absence of Vasishtha Muni. On return Vasishtha saw that the Homa was in the process and cursed the King to drop dead and since the Sacrifice was not yet concluded, Nimi became a 'Videha' or bodyless to enable the King to complete the 'Purnaahuti' or the Grand Finale of the Yagna. Lord Yama Dharmaraja was pleased with the Yagna and gave him the option of entering the first Jeeva Body of Brihaspati or continuing the Videha Body and the King preferred to be 'Videha' or body-less. The King on his part gave a return curse to Vasishtha to die too and the latter prayed to Brahma Deva who was Vasishtha's Manasa Putra. Brahma blessed Vasishtha to enter Mitravaruna's Jeeva or corporal body which was kept in tact; the earlier Mitravaruna was infatuated with Aprara Urvashi and two issues were born of whom one was Agasti who became an ascetic and the other was King Ikshwaku. Mitravaruna's corporal body was still in tact even Brahma created Vasishtha; now the jeeva body of Vasishtha since dropped dead as a result of Nimi's curse had entered the duplicate of Mitravaruna without any loss of original Vasishtha's wisdom and radiance! Such was the glory of King Nimi, who ruled Mithila for 84000 years righteously. (Source: Devi Bhagavata Purana)

Daksha Yagna:

Brahma blessed Daksha Prajapati to beget a daughter with the 'Amsa' or part-manifestation of Devi Bhagavati as Devi Sati. Already Daksha got sixty daughters, ten married to Dharma, thirteen to Kashyapa Muni, twenty seven to Chandra, two to Bhuta Ganas, two to Kushashwa, six to Garuda and so on. As Sati Devi came of age, she fixed her mind on Rudra Deva and resorted to severe Tapasya. Rudra agreed to marry her, Brahma proposed formally and the marriage took place with pomp and show. Sati and Rudra shifted from Kailasa to Himalayas where Bhagavan enlightened Sati Devi on many matters of Spiritual Significance including the nuances of Mantra-Tantra-Yantra and Yoga. But meanwhile, Daksha Prajapati got increasingly jealous of Rudra Deva. At the ill-famed Daksha Yagna, Daksha denied 'Pradhana Havis' or the prime part of the Yagna to Rudra as per the usual practice and even as Sage Dadhichi pointed out the lacuna, the caution was ignored. Sati Devi felt that there was a mistake made by her father and insisted on attending the yagna despite Shiva's warning and his subsequent approval with great reluctance as Nandi and Rudra Ganas accompanied her. Daksha ignored her entry at the Yagna and in fact talked disparagingly against Rudra Deva. She could not contain Daksha's criticism of Maha Deva and having produced Yogic Fire ended herself to unite with Bhagavan. As Nandi informed Shiva of the tragedy, the latter pulled out a few hairs from his Jatajuta or the coarse knotted head-hair against a mountain and the energy so created broke the mountain into two parts, one of which having materialised Veerabhadra and another Devi Bhadra Kaali. The enraged Rudra asked them to destroy Daksha Yagna. Veerabhadra beheaded Daksha and together with Bhadra Kaali turned the Yagna into smithereens. Devi Bhagavata Purana stated that Shiva picked up the body remains of Sati Devi and performed furious Shiva Tandava to release his pent up emotions of intense love of Sati and heightened anger for Daksha; Vishnu apprehended Pralaya and used his Sudarshana Chakra to spread out the body remains of Sati and hundred and eight Shakti Peethas came into being. Veda Vyasa affirmed that worship at these Siddha Peethas or even hearing about these would destroy sins and bestow powers to the devotees concerned. Eventually, the instant fury of Shiva was cooled down by the prayers of Brahma and Devas and the ever merciful Shiva agreed to the resuscitation of Daksha by fixing the Goat-head of the Sacrificial animal. The ever grateful Daksha begged of Shiva's clemency and re-organised Daksha Yagna once again with Maha Deva occupying the High-Seat at any Yagna ever since.

Sarga Sixty Six continued: Atha me kṣṣataḥ kṣetram lāṅgalād utthitā mama, kṣetram śodhayatā labdhvā nāmnā sīteti viśrutā, bhūtalād utthitā sā tu vyavardhata mamātmajā/ vīryaśulketi me kanyā sthāpīteyam ayonijā, bhūtalād utthitām tām tu vardhamānām mamātmajāṁ, varayām āsur āgamya rājāno munipuṅgava/ As King Janaka was performing 'Bhumi Yajña' by tilling the land with formal mantras in praise and invocation of ‘bhu devi’, the top of the ‘hala’ or the tiller digging the bhumi was dragging with screeching sound as though some matter was hit as being hidden underneath the ground.; Kshetram shodhayataa labdhva naamnaa Seeteti vishrita, bhutalaad utthhitaam saa tu vardhat mamatmaja/ Thus Devi Sita was called ‘ayoniya’ or unborn to a woman. Then and there, the King readily resolved to marry her off only to such a ‘Veerya shukla’ or a person of mighty semen who could lift up and get it readied for action. As Devi Sita gradually came of age, several suitors aspired for her hand but were told assertively: tesām varayatām kanyām sarveṣām prthivīkṣitām, vīryaśulketi bhagavan na dadāmi sūtām aham/ Only those valiant and virtuous princes who could truly manouver and straighten the Shiva dhanush would be the eligible youth. Following this announcement, none indeed could do this brave act so far. Several princes of near and far kingdoms in groups became angry and even threatened King Janaka of dire consequences. King Janaka recalled that as my tension increased in view of my predicament, Devas helped me in manifesting ‘chaturanga sena’ of strong foot soldiers, hores and horsemen, chariots and chatioteers, elephants and elephant men which kept the enemies far and near. Then King Janaka thus having narrated his experiences, stated that this being the background of the Shiva Dhanush, he should be pleased to show the Shiva Dhanush reiterating: Yady asya dhanuṣo rāmaḥ kuryād āropaṇam mune, sūtām ayonijām sūtām dadyām dāśarather aham/ King Janaka then addressed Brahmarshi Vishvamitra: In the event of Shri Rama being able to fulfill my ‘pratigina’ to the avowed statement that who ever could possibly negotiate this Shiva Dhanush should be eligible for Devi Sita’s hand in auspicious wedding with graritude and respectfulness!

Then the King instructed his minister to have the Shiva Dhanush brought over there; then he described that the dhanush had been kept stored in a heavy steel box of eight strong layers on a mobile platform which could be pushed by five thousand persons of extraordinary body strength. Once visualised the heaviness and hugeness, the Raja Kumaras could certainly gauge and appreciate the splendour and grandeur of the Dhanush. King Janaka having shown the Shiva Dhanush, continued: ' To this wonder striking Dhanush, the generation of Kings of Mithila had been - and so always in generations - performing daily worship. Brahmarshi! Be this known that all the devas, asura- rakshasaas, gandharvas, yaksha kinnara, maha nagas too had miserably failed to lift it , let alone to negotiate this dhanush. As the dhanush was brought near, Brahmarshi addressed Shri Rama to have a look at it. Rama replied: Idam dhanurvaram brahman samspṛśāmīha pāṇinā, yatnavāms ca bhaviṣyāmi tolane pūraṇe 'pi vā/ Now, I keep my hand on the shiva dhanush and shall endeavour to lift it up and straighten it too. That breaking resulted in earthshaking like reverberations and the masses of persons, animals and all other living beings, near and far way too collapsed in unconsciousness and solid structures fell down to pieces. For quite some time, the King and followers were dazed into unconsciousness and on gradual recovery exclaimed and addressed Brahmarshi Vishvamitra as follows: Bhagavan dr̥ṣṭavīryo me rāmo daśarathātmajah, atyadbhutam acintyaṁ ca atarkitam idam mayā/ janakānām kule kīrtim āhariṣyati me sūtā, sītā bhartāram āsādyā rāmaṁ daśarathātmajam/ mama satyā pratijñā ca vīryaśulketi kauśika, sītā prāṇair bahumatā deyā rāmāya me sūtā/ Brahmarshi! Once wedded to Shri Rama, my daughter ought to be proud to his life partner and bring in unimaginable glory to her father and the Janaka vamsha! Devi Sita my heartthrob from now onward is dedicated to Shri Rama as his 'sahadhamacharini'! With your kind approval and complaine, may we have the privilege of despatching my minister and senapati to Ayodhya to intimate about the act of incredibility here and request King Dasharatha , his queens and the entire 'parivaara' to very kindly visit Mithila for the auspicious wedding. Accompanied by Gurus, wives and intimate and other relatives and friends, King Dasharatha was happy and blissful and instructed Sumantra to let the royal treasurer carry surplus funds of cash, jewellery, nine gems ahead and for their safety there ought to be fool proof arrangements by the 'chaturanga sena' of foot soldiers, cavalry, elephantry, chariots and bull carts. Comfortable 'Palkis' be arranged for Maharshis like Vasishtha, Vaamadeva, Jaabaali, Kashyapa, Katyaayana and the Deergha Kaala Markandeya. As per the royal instructions, the chaturanga seva moved forward with the King and the queens at the rear. A four day procession with needed halts on way moved on with plentiful food and drinks with indescribable elation and blissful joy through the memorable journey. On their arrival at the outskirts of the Kingdom, King Janaka made elaborate reception with music, song, dance and ecstatic welcome showers of flowers. Mithila King Janaka welcomed King Dasharatha overjoyed ecstasy and stated: svāgatam te mahārāja diṣṭyā prāpto 'si rāghava, putrayor ubhayoḥ prītim lapsyase vīryanirjitām/ diṣṭyā prāpto mahātejā vasiṣṭho bhagavān ṛṣiḥ, saha sarvair dvijaśreṣṭhair devair iva śatakratuḥ/ diṣṭyā me nirjitā vighnā diṣṭyā me pūjitam kulam, rāghavaiḥ saha sambandhād vīryaśreṣṭhair mahātmabhiḥ/ śvaḥ prabhāte narendrendra nirvartayitum arhasi, yajñasyānte naraśreṣṭha vivāham ṛṣisaṁmatam/ Nara shreshtha Raghunandana Dasharatha! Welcome to you! This is my great fortune that you have arrived here. You will shortly enjoy the company of your great son Shri Rama who out of his valour has earned memorable fame. Vasishtha Maharshi too has arrived as my double fortune. As the illustrious Maharshis too have arrived and this appears to be Indra Sabha itself. I am highly relieved of all my troubles and worries. My relationship with Raghukula is a great matter of pride to all of us in the kingdom of Mithila/ Then King Dasharatha too responded: śvaḥ prabhāte narendrendra nirvartayitum arhasi, yajñasyānte naraśreṣṭha vivāham ṛṣisaṁmatam/ Tomorrow morning we should all initiate a maha yajna and then perform the Most auspicious marriage of Devi Sita and Kumara Shri Rama. King Janaka reciprocated stating that the 'Pratigriha daata' or the great receiver should have the final 'say'. Thus the pleasantries having been closed, both the Kings and Rishis carried on sweet conversations while Rama Lakshmanas led by Brahmarshi Vishvamitra moved forward and as the Kumaras prostrated as King Dasharatha embraced and blessed them stating : 'Deerghameva Kalyana Praptirastu'. Pursuant to the evening celebrations, the next morning after the Yajna prakriya was concluded, and 'mangalaacharana' of both the couples was celebrated.

 As the yagña karya was concluded the next morning, King Janaka enquired of purohita Maharshi Shatananda about his younger brother Kushadhvaja the younger brother of King Janaka. (Kushadhvaja's wife was Chandrabhaga and daughters were Mandavi and Shrutakeerti subsequently married to Bharata and Shatrughna) Janaka stated that his brother was a noted warrior and a dharmaatma near the banks of river Ikshumati at Saankaashya Nagara defending the four sides with yantras. Then King Kushadhvaja was called for having been briefed about the happenings at the Mithila kingdom and meet King Janaka at the earliest. On Kushadhvaja's arrival, they desired to call on King Dasharatha at his State Guest House and despatched Janaka's Minister Sudaamana to King Dashratha with the request that King Janaka and his brother Kushadhvaja along with Sage Shatananda would desire to call on King Dasharatha. On their arrival after the exchange of pleasantries, King Dashratha stated: *viditaṁ te mahārāja the latter was born Kashyapa whose son was Vivisvaan as the latter gave birth to Vaivasvata Manu. Manu was the foremost Prajapati and from Manu was born Ikshvaku the first King of Ayodhya. King Ikshvaku's son was Kukshi and the latter's son was Vikukshi. The valiant Vikukshi's son was the herioc Baana and Baana's son Anaranya who too was equally herioc. From Anaranya was born Prithu and in the further lineage of kings was born Trishanka. King Trishanka's son was Dhundhumaara. From Dhundhumara the lineage of Kings was born Yuvanaashva and Mandhata followed Yuvanaashva.

Maandhata was the Bhumandala chakravarti. In the lineage of Mandhata followed Sugandhi, whose sons were Dhruvasandhi and Prasenajit. Dhruvasandhi's son was Bharata and the latter's son was Asita. The latter had constant enmity with Haihaya, Taalajangdha and Shashabindu. Subsequently, Asita retaining a small sena retired to Himalayas with his too wives in 'vaanaprastha ashrama.' It was known that the two wives of Asita since got pregnant at the time his death. One had an abortion and another was given poison. The latter who was named Kaalindi whose life long desire was to secure a lotus like eyes approached Maharshi Chyavana the famed son of Bhrigu. The widow of Asita viz. Kaalindi was then assured by Chyavana Maharshi that she would soon secure a son but with poison in his stomach and not to worry. Kaalindi a pativrata was thus blessed by Chyavana Muni returned and eventually was blessed with a son as the Muni assured: saha tena gareṇaiva jātaḥ sa sagaro 'bhavat/ Further on to the King

It is from this lineage were born Shri Rama and Lakshmanas with whom the auspicious proposal is to wed your kanyas by way of Kanyaa daana!

Vishleshana on Ikshvaaku Vamsha [Refer to the Visleshana vide Sarga One above too]:

King Prithu picked up speedy popularity as he proved to be an ideal and virtuous Administrator endeared by Maharshis and commoners alike. In course of time there were no problems owing to physical ailments, mental tensions and even of natural calamities in the Society. This was the first King ever who performed Rajasuya Yagna. It was this illustrious Emperor who controlled Bhumi (Earth); the latter took the Form of a Cow and sought to run away as was she was expected too much from her by various sections of the Universe. But Prithu Chakravarti (literally he whose chariot wheels move forward swiftly without being interrupted by any opponent party) however chased and forced her to yield maximum milk to one and all in the form that they desired it. Prithu himself milked her having converted Swayambhu Manu as the calf and made her yield food grains to all, while in regime of Vena the staple food was of flowers and fruits. Various sections of the world milked the material as they desired; for instance, Rishis converted Chandra as a calf, Brihaspati as the milkman, Tapomaya Brahma as the milk and Vedas as the container to fill up the milk; Devas made Indra as the calf, Surya as the milkman and ‘Pushtikaahara’ or healthy food as milk; Pitru Devas requested Yamadharma Raja as the calf, Antaka Deva as the milk man and ‘Swadha’ as the milk; Nagas selected Takshaka as the calf, Iravata Serpent as the milkmen and Visha (Poison) as the milk; Asuras appointed Mathu Daitya as the milkman, Virochana as the calf and Maya (Illusions) as the milk; Yakshas preferred Kubera as the calf, Rajananaabha Yaksha as the milkman and ‘Antardhaana Vidya’ or the Art of Disappearance as the milk; similarly all other species selected their own Milkmen and calves and Gandharvas opted milk in the form of fragrance; Rakshasas opted for blood, Mountains preferred ‘Aoushadhis’ and soon thus satisfying every one in his governance! Manu Vivaswanta gave birth to ten sons including Ikshvaku, Saryati, Nabhaga and Prushaghna. Ikshvaku’s lineage included Puranjaya/ Kakustha, Yuvanashra and Mandhata. Puranjaya fought a severe battle with Daityas on behalf of Devas by riding a Great Bull who actually was Indra himself by holding the Kakutsa or the hump of the bull thus obtaining the epithet of Kakutsa or Indravahana! King Yuvanashra performed a noted Yagna targetting Indra Deva to secure a son. During the Sacrifice days, he felt very thirsty one midnight in the Yagna Shaala and drank up the ‘Mantra Jala’ or the Sanctified Water kept in a vessel. The Rishis performing the Yagna were aghast to find the vessel empty next morning as the King drank up the Sacred Water. Eventually, the King got conceived instead of his Queen and a male child came out from his abdomen which had to be cut. The child cried for milk and Indra put his index finger in the child’s mouth and saved him! The boy thus born was Mandhata, the undisputed Emperor of the World comprising Seven Dwipas ‘from where Sun rose at where it was set!’ He was stated to have discovered Manasa Sarovara on Mount Kailasha as he was reputed to have performed Tapas at the banks of the Lake. It was believed that there was a Serpent Mansion where the Emperor prayed under a Jamun Tree from which its fruits (Blackberry) dropped into the Sarovar making the sounds of ‘Jam’ and the area underneath the Sarovara was called Jambu Dwipa! Mandhata’s wife Bindumati was a pious woman and gave birth to Purukutsa and Muchukunda and fifty daughters. There was an interesting Story about the daughters. Sage Saubhari a very old and diseased person who did Tapasya under water for twelve years noticed that fishes in water were having sex and procreating; the Muni got tempted and approached Mandhata to let any of his daughters marry him. The Emperor was afraid that the Sage might give a ‘Shaap’ if declined and asked that anybody among the daughters was prepared to marry the Sage; none consented as the Sage was very old and disgusting physically with diseases. Mandhata had a problem but cleverly replied that his family custom was that all the daughters would have to wed the same person and none should disagree. The Sage transformed himself into a handsome youth by his mystical powers and presented himself. All the girls vied with each other to marry him and the youthful Sage built mansions and all of them enjoyed. But in course of time, the Sage realised that on account of the fishes in the water, his spiritual life was ruined and although very late in life reverted back to a more introspective life and intensified devotion to Vishnu. Purukutsa married Narmada the sister of Serpent brothers and she took him away to Rasatala the sub-terrain world under instruction from King Vasuki as approved by Bhagavan Vishnu to overpower Gandharvas who invaded Rasatala and other Patala Lokas. Nagas were afraid of Gandharvas as some six crores of the latter descended there for hunting the priceless 'Ratnas' / Jewels. Nagas sought protection and prayed to Vishnu in desperation. Indeed Purukutsa succeeded and Nagas gave a boon to Narmada that whosoever bathed in River Narmada by reciting a Shloka would be safe from Sarpa- Visha or Snake- Poison; the Shloka states: Narmadaayai Namah Praatarnamaadaayai Namonisha, Namostu Narmadey tubhyam traahimaam vishasarpatah/ (Devi Narmada! My salutations to you in the day or night; kindly safeguard me from the fear of Serpents and their poisonous bites!) This recitation while entering dark places as also while eating food would safeguard from any kind of poisons thanks to Purukutsa and Narmada! Nahusha who was also in the lineage of Pururava had the distinction of performing ninety nine Ashwamedha Yagnas and was nearly qualified to become Indra who should have executed hundred Yagnas. Meanwhile there was a temporary vacancy of Indratwa since Indra fled away since he killed Vritrasura with the help of the Vajrayudha made out of Sage Dadhichis's backbone; Vritrasura who was a Brahmana by birth and Brahma Hatya Sin chased Indra. Brahma thus appointed Nahusha as temporary Indra. Nahusha who was originally a King of Great Virtue became arrogant and power-mongering as he became Indra and claimed all the privileges belonging to Indra like Vajrayudha, Iravata the Elephant and even Indra's wife Sachi Devi. Nahusha insisted that Sachi Devi be his keep! Sachi Devi was non-plussed at this proposal. As advised by Deva Guru Brihaspati, she asked Nahusha to come to her residence but he should do so just as Indra was in the habit of arriving at her residence by a Palki (Palanquin) which actually was carried by Maharshis. Nahusha was excited to reach her Palace quickly and having got into the palanquin commanded Agastya Muni to reach him to Sachi Devi's Place at once; he said 'Sarpa Sarpa' meaning 'Quick, Quick' and in the process gave a kick to the Muni to go fast. Agastya purposely misunderstood the word and converted the arrogant Nahusha as an Ajagara (Python) and dropped the latter to the depths of Bhuloka into thick forests. As a repentant Nahusha begged of clemency, the Maharshi granted a reprieve that the 'Shaapa Vimochana' would be possible only when Pandavas reached the forest for twelve long years before their 'Ajnaata Vasa' or Unknown Destiny having lost a bet in the 'Maya Juda' or wilful game of chess. As Draupadi desired to secure a Sugandhika Flower Bheema got into a pond and the Ajagara caught him and agreed to release him only if he gave correct replies to the Serpent's queries. Yudhishtara had to arrive and release Bhima and Nahusha alike. Meanwhile Brihaspati and Agastya found that Indra was hiding in a lotus stem in Mana Sarovara Lake and brought him back and prayed to Brahma who exonerated Nahusha from the Brahma Hatya Sin on the ground that Vitra was no doubt a Brahmana but committed sins of killing several virtuous and innocents. Yayati, the son of Nahusha and his wife Viraja, was a famed Emperor who defeated all the Kings of the World and married Devayani the daughter of Asura Guru Shukracharya, besides Sharmishtha the daughter of Vishvaparma, a Rakshasa King. Indra was pleased to gift Yayati a Divine Chariot with seven powerful horses with which he traversed the world and divided his Empire into seven divisions to distribute it among five of his sons. A Maharshi gave a boon that if any of his sons could agree to exchange their youth to his old age then he could secure a fresh lease of youth. His eldest son Yadu from Devayani refused and so did others excepting Sharmishtha's son Puru who readily agreed. Yayati took over Puru's youth and enabled him travel around to unravel earthly pleasures for long. But finally returned discovering that the ephemeral joys of the world were endless like Agni in a Homa kunda assuming larger and larger proportions as long as ghee is served and no human would be satisfied with food, gold, ornaments or women. By so realising, he returned his youth to Puru and took to Vanaprastha or retirement.

Maharshi Vasishtha had thus detailed the highlights of Ikshvaaku Vamsha and requested to do so in respect of the Janaka vamsha too briefly as he stated that when the background of both the families would be of interest to know while alliance be mutually forged. King Janaka responded smilingly: In the days of yore there was a renowned King Nimi [pl refer to Sarga Sixty Six above for Vishneshana on Nimi and Vasishtha] who had a son named Mithi whose son being Janaka the ever first Janaka as our 'vamsha' known as of Janakas. That original Janaka had a son named 'Udaavasuka'. To the latter was born 'Nandivardhana' who gave birth to valiant warrior named 'Suketu'. To Suketu who was a dharmatma and Rajarshi was born 'Devaratha'. To the latter was born 'Maha Vira' the gallant. To Maha Vira was born a 'satya parakrami' son named 'Sudhruti' from whom was born 'Dhishthaketu'. Dharmatma Dhishthaketu was a Rajarshi too and his son was a popular King named 'Haryasva'. Haryasva's son was 'Maru' while Maru's son was 'Prateendhaka'. 'Keertiratha' was the son of Prateendhaka, and his son was 'Deva meedha' who was a very popular Raja. Then in the further lineage were 'Bibudha', 'Mahidhraka', 'Keertiraata', 'Maharoma', Rajarshi 'Swarnaroma', 'Hrasvaroma'. Tasya putradvayaṁ jajñe dharmajñasya mahātmanaḥ, jyeṣṭho 'ham anujo bhrātā mama vīraḥ kuśadhvajah/ tasya putradvayaṁ jajñe dharmajñasya mahātmanaḥ, jyeṣṭho 'ham anujo bhrātā mama vīraḥ kuśadhvajah/ Dharmagina Raja Hrasvaroma had two sons, the elder being myself, the younger one being the most popular 'Kusha dhwa'. In course of time, a neighbourly King named Sudhanva of Sankashya Nagar attacked us demanding Shiva Dhanush as also Devi Sita my daughter. As the battle became fierce, Sudhanva was killed from my hands. Then my brother Kushadhva was made the King ever since. kañyān eṣa me bhrātā ahaṁ jyeṣṭho mahāmune, dadāmi paramaprīto vadhvau te munipuṁgava/ sītāṁ rāmāya bhadraṁ te ūrmilāṁ lakṣmaṇāya ca, veerya śulkāṁ mama sutāṁ sītāṁ surasutopamāṁ/ dvitīyāṁ ūrmilāṁ caiva trir vadāmi na samśayaḥ, dadāmi paramaprīto vadhvau te raghunandana/ Maha Muni Vasishtha! This Kushadhva my younger brother is desirous of getting his two daughters too to King Dashratha's two other sons viz. Bharata and Shatrughna too. I am dedicating here by Kumari Sita to Kumara Rama- Kumari Urmila to Kumara Lakshmana; my brother Kushadhvaja would like wise his daughters to Bharata Shatrughnas, Mandaveeka and Shrutakeerti. Thereafter, Maharshi Vasishtha declared that let ‘Go daana’ be performed by the Rama Lakshmanas as also ‘Naandimukha’ and three days hence during the Uttara Phalguni Nakshatra the auspicious ‘vivaha’ be performed.

King Janaka along with Maharshi Vaishta and Brahmarshi Vishvamitra addressed King Dasharatha stating that both the Ikshvaaku and Videha Kingdoms be blessed as they both are the singular examples of Dharma and Nyaya. To establish firm links of both the Kingdoms, the weddings of Devis Urmila and Sita with Lakshmana and Rama be celebrated now. King Janaka further declared that on behalf of my younger brother King Kushadhwaja seated beside me, may I declare Devis Mandavi and Shrutakeerti to Bharata and Shatrughna respectively be wedded too. Ekāhnā rājaputrīṇām catasṛṇām mahāmune, pāñīn grhṇantu catvāro rājaputrā mahābalāḥ/ uttare divase brahman phalgunībhyām manīṣīṇah, vaivāhikam praśamsanti bhago yatra prajāpatiḥ/ Janaka further stated : may all the four Raja Kumaras be wedded on the same day. Happily two days hence, both Purva Phalguni and Uttara Phalguni Nakshatras would be arriving one after another and at those most auspicious timings may the formal weddings be celebrated! As King Janaka concluded, both the Maharshis Vasiṣṭha and Vishvamitra said: yathā daśarathasyeyam tathāyodhyā purī mama, prabhutve nāsīt saṁdeho yathārham kartum arhathaḥ/ Just as King Dasharatha of Ayodhya is dear to us, so is King Janaka of Mithila. May both the Kings be pleased with both of us the Maharshis. Then King Dasharatha replied: svasti prāpnuhi bhadram te gamiṣyāmi svam ālayam, śrāddhakarmāṇi sarvāṇi vidhāsyā iti cābravīt/ May you King Janaka reap continuous goodwill and best wishes for auspiciousness all around; then the Maharshis proceeded for the subsequent preparations. Next morning, King Dasharatha performed a lakh go daanas to Brahmanas formally, and invited all the four sons endearingly and blessed them embracingly.

On the wedding morning, Bharat Kumara's maternal uncle the King of Kaikeya desha arrived and King Dashratha was happy; Kaikeya was appropriately introduced to King Janaka. Initiating the wedding ceremony early morning, King Janaka with Maharshis ahead entered the Yajna shaala and waited for the precise time of auspiciousness. yukte muhūrte vijaye sarvābharāṇabhūṣitaiḥ, bhrātṛbhiḥ sahito rāmaḥ kṛtakautukamaṅgalah/As per the scheduled time, Shri Rama led by King Dasharatha arrived in full and visually arresting dresses along with his brothers at the wedding vedika. Vasishtha Maharshi along with a select group of Munis approached Videharaja Janaka and asked him to extend the 'vaivahika bandhana rupa mangalaacharana' or the symbolic sacred thread of wedding for tying and await the mutual bridegrooms and brides to position themselves. Vasishtha further instructed both the Kings then: dātṛpratigrahītṛbhyāṃ sarvārthāḥ prabhavanti hi, svadharmam pratipadyasva kṛtvā vaivāhyam uttamam/ The act of 'kanya daana' be concluded between both the parties of brides and bridegrooms together to perform their respective responsibilities and obligations. The vivahika vedika was got ready befitting the status and magnificence of two great Kings with splashed decoration of fresh and fragrant flowers emanating sweetness all around. At the center of the stage, a raised platform embellished with sparkling kalashas-pancha patras, golden pots of ghee, honey, panchamritas, fresh fruits, vessels and plates of gold studded with precious and prized stones of variety sizes and of thick-thin combinations, akshatas, kushas , scented sticks, plentiful dhupa-deepas and a huge homa kunda with never ending flames. abravījanako rājā kausalyānanda vardhanam, iyaṁ sītā mama sūtā sahadharmacarī tava, pratīccha caināṁ bhadraṁ te pāṇīm gr̥hṇīṣva pāṇinā/Then Janaka welcomed Devi Sita as she was heavily dressed with silks and ornaments and got seated before full flames of the ‘Homa kunda’ and beside her was Shri Rama who richly enhanced the blissful joy his mother Devi Koushalya. Then King Janaka addressed Shri Rama stating : May you be with unending flow of auspiciousness and welfare! Here with I am dedicating my dear daughter Sita as your ‘saha dharma charini’ the Life Partner. She is blessed to be famed as a ‘maha pativrata’ as your true shadow. Then the entire audience of rishis, co kings, select dignitaries of Mithila and other kingdoms blessed the couple with a big ‘tathaastu’ or ‘so be it’. It appeared that celestials from the skies too joined the chorus. Then King Janaka addressed ‘Lakshmana’ and stated that he was gifting Devi Urmila at his service for kind acceptance and place your palms with hers for ever. Janaka further addressed ‘Bharata’ and extended the tender palms of Mandaveeka to kindly extend his strong palms too. Subsequently, the Mithilaadhipati Janaka addressed ‘Shatrughna’ and handed over Srutakeerti. Puṣpavyṣṭir mahaty āsīd antarikṣāt subhāsvarā, divyadundubhinirghoṣair gītavāditranisvanaiḥ/ nanṛtuś cāpsaraḥsaṁghā gandharvās ca jaguḥ kalam, vivāhe raghumukhyānāṁ tadadbhutam ivābhavat/At that time there were heavy floral showers from high skies extending fragrances all over , celestial sounds of drums, singings, and sonorous musical instruments were heard, as the respective newly weds circumambulated the vedika with the guests of honour.

After the memorable wedding festivities concluded on the previous day, the next morning Brahmarshi Vishvamitra informed the Kings Dasharatha and Janaka left for tapasya to the peaks of Himalayas and King Dasharatha too solicited to return back with his entourage. King Janaka gifted lakhs of cows, valuable silks, ornaments, elephants, horses, chariots, and foot soldiers. With a view to serving the newly wed devis presently retained with their husbands for some more weeks, he gifted hundreds of servants and servant maids in addition to which a crore of ‘swarna mudras’, ‘rajata mudras’, pearls and other nine gems aplenty as ‘kanyaadana’ or dowry. Just before the departure of King Dasharatha and his entourage, they all felt uneasy omens of inauspiciousness in the air. Huge and frightful sky birds with sounds of shrill squeaks were hovering on the nearby skylines, shrill sounds resounding from nearby forest animals, and such ‘apashakunas’ or premonitional warning were pronounced. Even so, gales of dust storms broke off and darkness surrounded. Then King Dasharatha visioned a frightening arrival: dadarśa bhīmasaṁkāśaṁ jaṭāmaṇḍaladhāriṇaṁ/ kailāsaṁ iva durdharṣaṁ kālāgnim iva duḥsaham, jvalantaṁ iva tejobhir durnirīkṣyaṁ pṛthagjanaiḥ/ skandhe cāsajya paraśuṁ dhanur vidyudgaṇopamam, pragṛhya śaramukhyaṁ ca tripuraghaṇaṁ yathā hamaṁ/ He broke out the news that Parashu Rama the son of Bhrigukula Jamadagni Maharshi and the great destroyer of Kshatriya Vamsha was about to enter Mithila of the Kingdom of Janaka, with frightful countenance and hanging shrub like matted hairs like ‘Kaalaagni’ or the flames of death. He was carrying his ‘parashu’ or the mighty axe with which he fulfilled his dreadful revenge of uprooting the kshatriya vamsha. kaccit pitṛvadhāmarṣī kṣatraṁ notsādayiṣyati, pūrvam kṣatravadham kṛtvā gatamanyur gatajvaraḥ, kṣatrasyotsādanaṁ bhūyo na khalv asya cikīrṣitaṁ/ Maharshi Vasishtha queried: ‘Does Parashu Rama still recall his ‘pratigina’ or universal declaration of dig up and evacuate Kshatriya vamsha once again! As Vasishtha stated thus, both the Kings of Ayodhya and Mithila were non plussed with fright shivering before the flames about to engulf them all. Evam uktvārghyam ādāya bhārgavaṁ bhīmadarśanaṁ, ṛṣayo rāma rāmeti madhurām vācam abruvan/ pratigṛhya tu tām pūjām ṛṣidattām pratāpavān, rāmaṁ dāśarathim rāmo jāmadagnyo ’bhyabhāṣata/ On his arrival, Parashu Rama was atonce served with ‘arghya’ or cool water to wash his feet and drink by Rishis, he merely uttered: ‘Rama Rama! : , Dasharadha nandana Shri Rama! Veera! It is heard that your courage and fame are second to none! You seem to have lifted up and broken down the mighty and incredible ‘Shiva Dhanush’! Having been informed thus, I have now brought this another ‘dhanush’. This is the ever frightful and invincible ‘Parashu Rama Dhanush’. I seek you to draw it straight, and arrange the arrow perfectly and exhibit your valor and capability.

As Parashurama thus challenged Shri Rama, King Dasharatha intervened at once to say: Maha Bhargava! You are glorious in the entire universe that having born to the highest tradition of Brahmanatva, performed swaadyaaya of vedas, outstanding penances, you have accomplished climactic stature/ Yet by the force of circumstances, punished Kshatriya Kings as a race and wiped out their traces but now have pardoned them eventually. But now having taken now to ‘astra sanyasa’, why ought you be unkind to only to Rama and in the unfortunate even of his failure, generations of us all would have to end our lives!

Bruvaty evaṁ daśarathe jāmādagnyaḥ pratāpavān, anādṛtyaiva tad vākyaṁ rāmam evābhyabhāṣata/ As King Dasharatha stated in a highly entreating tone, Parasurama ignored the King and continued in highly heckling tone to Shri Rama as though what he had performed was not a miraculous act of breaking down Shiva Dhanush but a sheer fluke or an accidental stroke of chance!

Thus Parushu Rama tauntingly continued as follows: ime dve dhanuṣī śreṣṭhe divye lokābhiviśrute, dṛḍhe balavatī mukhye sukr̥te viśvakarmaṇā/ atisṛṣṭaṁ surair ekaṁ tryambakāya yuyutsave, tripuraghaṇaṁ naraśreṣṭha bhagnaṁ kākutsha yat tvayā/ idaṁ dvitīyaṁ durdharṣaṁ viṣṇor dattaṁ surottamaīḥ, samānasāraṁ kākutstha raudreṇa dhanuṣā tv idam/ tadā tu devatāḥ sarvāḥ pṛcchanti sma pitāmahaṁ, śītikanṭhasya viṣṇoḥ ca balābalanirīkṣayā/ abhiprāyaṁ tu vijñāya devatānāṁ pitāmahaḥ, virodhaṁ janayāṁ āsa tayoḥ satyavatāṁ varah/ virodhe ca mahad yuddham abhavad romaharṣaṇam, śītikanṭhasya viṣṇoḥ ca parasparajayaiṣiṇoḥ/ tadā taj jṛmbhitaṁ śaivaṁ dhanur bhūmaparākramam, humkāreṇa mahādevaḥ stambhito 'tha trilocaṇaḥ/ devais tadā samāgamya sarṣisaṁghaiḥ sacāraṇaiḥ, yācitau praśamaṁ tatra jagmatus tau surottamau/ jṛmbhitaṁ tad dhanur dṛṣṭvā śaivaṁ viṣṇuparākramaiḥ, adhikaṁ menire viṣṇuṁ devāḥ sarṣigaṇās tadā/ dhanū rudras tu saṁkrudho videheṣu mahāyaśāḥ, devarātasya rājarṣer dadau haste sasāyakam/ idaṁ ca viṣṇavaṁ rāma dhanuḥ parapuraṁjayaṁ, ṛcīke bhārgave prādād viṣṇuḥ sa nyāsam uttamam/ ṛcīkas tu mahātejāḥ putrasyaṁ pratikarmaṇaḥ, pitur mama dadau divyaṁ jamadagner mahātmanaḥ/ nyastaśastre pitari me tapobalasamanvite, arjuno vidadhe mṛtyuṁ prākṛtāṁ buddhim āsthitaḥ/ vadham apratirūpaṁ tu pituḥ śrutvā sudūruṇam, kṣatram utsādayaṁ roṣāj jātaṁ jātam anekaśaḥ/ pṛthivīm cākḥilām prāpya kāśyapāya mahātmane, yajñasyānte tadā rāma dakṣiṇām puṇyakarmaṇe/ dattvā mahendranilayas tapobalasamanvitaḥ, śrutavān dhanuṣo bhedaṁ tato 'haṁ drutam āgataḥ/ tad idaṁ vaiṣṇavaṁ rāma pitṛpaitāmahaṁ mahat, kṣatradharmaṁ puraskṛtya gr̥hṇīṣva dhanuruttamam/ yojayasva dhanuḥ śreṣṭhe śaraṁ parapuraṁjayaṁ, yadi śaknoṣi kākutstha dvandvaṁ dāsyāmi te tah/

Raghuṇandana! These are the two supreme and celestial pieces of dhanush; Devatas have been in admiration of their invincibility. Vishvakarma the heavenly engineer himself constructed it as of the strongest and impossible unbreakability. One of these was awarded to Maha Deva Shankara in connection with Tripuraasura and that was what 'Shiva Dhanush' which he had been proudly and arrogantly broken by you. And the second dhanush had been in my hands which was dedicated with humility by groups of Devas to Maha Vishnu used in a series of encounters against the most heinous Danava- Daitya-Rakshasas gloried as 'Vaishnava Dhanush'. Try to learn and recall that once all the Devas headed by Indra once approached Brahma Deva to assess whether Shiva or Vishnu was more powerful and mightier. Then Brahma created a rift between the two and in a mutual warfare Vishnu due to his mere possession of the Vishnu dhanush made a mere 'humkara' as the Trinetradahari Shiva was stilled with awe. Then the angry Shiva out of frustration threw his dhanush off and Videha desha Rajarshi Devarata held it and did daily veneration for generations. On the other hand, Bhagavan Vishnu having been pleased with Bhṛigu vamsi Rucyeka Muni gifted this Vishnu Dhanush; it was from Maharshi Jamadagni my immortal father that this Vishnu Dhanush had come into my possession ever since. Mahatma Jamadagni having discarded astra-shastras took to intense tapasya having built an ashram and was eventually killed by King Kartaveeryarjuna owing to materialistic obsessions. On learning about the murder of my father by the King, I returned from my penances and avenged Kshatriyas as a race by killing them several times. Thereafter having earned the overlordship of the entire 'prithvi', I performed a 'maha yajna' and donated the prithvi as dakshina to Kashyapa Muni. Having given the prithvi daana thus have retired to Mahendra Mountain for tapasya ever thereafter. Having heard of the destruction of Shiva Dhanush from my celestial vision, have hurried back to the brave young hero here aling with Vishnu Dhanush too. Tad idaṁ vaiṣṇavaṁ rāma pitṛpaitāmahaṁ mahat, kṣatradharmaṁ puraskṛtya gr̥hṇīṣva dhanuruttamam/ yojayasva dhanuḥ śreṣṭhe śaraṁ parapuraṁjayaṁ, yadi śaknoṣi kākutstha dvandvaṁ dāsyāmi te tah/ Rama! I have thus brought the Maha Vishnu Dhanush reviving my 'kshaatra dhrama' and if you were to succeed in straightening this dhanush with arrows, then I might give you the opportunity of a mutual duel thereafter.

Although his father King Dasharatha's appeal was cutshort by the long monologue bordering on the self ego of Parashu Rama, Rama had to reply to the latter. He said that he was constrained by the principles of kshatriyas and hence was not elaborating much about his own achievements.

Then Rama angrily took away the Vishnu Dhanush and the arrows from Parshu Rama. Brāhmaṇo 'sīti pūjyo me viśvāmitrakṛtena ca, tasmāc chakto na te rāma moktum prāṇaharam śaram/ imām vā tvadgatiṁ rāma tapobalasamārjitān, lokān apratimān vāpi haniṣyāmi yad icchasi/ na hy ayaṁ vaiṣṇavo divyaḥ śaraḥ parapuramjayāḥ, moghaḥ patati vīryeṇa baladarpavināśanaḥ/

Bhṛigu nandana! As by birth you are a Brahmana and as such you are respect worthy; further you have had affinity with Brahmarshi Vishvamitra too and as such am constrained not to let arrows used on you and cut short your life. 'Bhargava Rama! Even as you have had quickly earned physical and psychological powers due to your tapasya, this Vaishnava Dhanush which you are proud of, now in my hands would never hesitate to demolish you too'. This type of veiled yet composed threat that Rama confronted with against Bhargava Rama had readily attracted the attention and admiration of Deva ganas and Maharshis. Gandharva-apsarasa-siddha-chaarana-yaksha-raakshasa- naagaas too rushed to witness this 'itihasik' scene! As Rama had thus held high on his hands, Bhargava Rama stood stunned and blank and murmured with low and mumbling voice stated: 'Raghu nandana! I had just described to you a while back that I donated Bhumi to Maha Muni Kashyapa and the latter instructed me to leave away bhumi and thus I shifted away to the heights of Mahendra mountain. Vishleshana on i) Madhu Kaitabha Daityas and ii) Parashu Rama:Madhu Kaitaba Daityas from Devi Bhagavata Purana:

When Maha Vishnu was in Yoga Nidra in a comfortable posture of lying on the bed of Ananta Naga, two Demon brothers named Madhu and Kaitabha were born from the wax of Maha Vishnu's ears. Their birth was a mystery and unknown as felt by the brothers themselves whose physical forms grew fast and strong day by day, even as they were playing in the ocean surroundings, killing various kinds of aquatic species for food or play. Coming of age in course of time, the Demon brothers with huge bodies and proportionate common sense too, realised that there must have been a Massive Force which alone could have given birth to them. From the air, they heard a sound 'Vagbija' the Seed Mantra (Seed 'Bija' and 'Vak' the Speech of Goddess Sarasvati). To start with fun, but later on with maturity, they kept on practising the sound for years together, little realising the impact of the Mantra's repetition. In fact, they became so obsessed with the Mantra that they neither had food nor sleep, but with full concentration and utmost sincerity. 'The Parasakti's Voice emerged from the Skies that the Danava brothers would be invincible in the entire Universe provided they were united and fight two-some. Blessed by Maha Devi, the two brothers became swollen with pride and eventually attacked Lord Brahma Himself. On realising that they were unconquerable, Brahma who was seated on the lotus-head sprouting from Maha Vishnu's navel, tried the age-old four means. He tried to use 'Sama (Counselling) 'Dana' (Gifting or bribing), 'Bheda' (put one against another) and finally 'Danda' (Punish), but neither of these media appeared feasible; he ran away to Vaikuntha for protection but Maha Vishnu was in Yoga Nidra. Brahma had thus prayed to Yoga Nidra Devi to prompt Maha Vishnu to wake up. It was actually Maha Maya's discretion which mattered as Vishnu Himself could not regain consciousness on His own. The concentrate of 'Tamo Guna' - Maha Maya - was earnestly prayed to by Brahma, as this was a prestige issue for him and the entire domain of Gods! Maha Maya left Vishnu free and He was fully woken up to face the challenge of the hour, viz. to either manipulate or massacre the brothers, Madhu and Kaitabha. Lord Vishnu invited the brothers to fight with Himself. The fight continued for five thousand years but without a tangible result. As the Demons were clashing one after another and Lord Vishnu was in duel singly, the latter asked the brothers to give a break as it was against Justice that they took alternate positions while He was alone. During the break, Vishnu prayed to Maha Sakti and complained that the fight was unfair and that they were also given by Her the boon of voluntary death or 'Svacchanda Maranam'. Maha Sakti realised the lacuna in the duel and advised Vishnu to give boons to the brothers so that a way out would automatically open up. Meanwhile, Maha Sakti agreed to be present at the fight in physical form and disturb the concentration of the Demon brothers by casting Her fake amorous looks. This encouraged Vishnu to convey the Demons that their duel with Him was of great quality and thus He was ready to give boons to them. They got into the trap as they boasted that they were prepared to give boons to Him instead of the other way around. Vishnu grabbed the opportunity and said that He be given the boon of their death by killing each other! The brothers gave an excuse that the boon could be given only provided there was no water or wetness in the Ocean. Vishnu expanded his thighs manifold so that there could be adequate space for the killings. The Demons expanded their bodies too and thus the thighs of Vishnu and the body sizes of the brothers kept on increasing horizontally and vertically proportionately. Finally, the illusion created by Vishnu proved stronger and the brothers had to yield to their own killings. Thus Maha Sakti who assumed human physique and paved the way to the killings of the Danava brothers without breaking the Rules of 'Dharma Yuddha', partly by trickery and partly by Maya or Illusion.

Ganesha Purana is quoted: Chapters 77-82: Jamadagni-Kaartaveerya- Kaama dhenu-Kartaveerya kills the Muni- Parashuramaavatara: King Shurasena approached the ashram of Maha Muni Jamadagni the famed wife Renuka Devi in Shveta Dvipa's Sahyaadri Parvata and their illustrious son Parashurama who was in Naimisharanya for Vidyadhyayana. The Muni having extolled Sankata Charurthi Ganesha Vrata said his son Parashurama had already observed the Vrata as prescribed. Thereafter, Chakravarti Kartaveerya visited the Ashram of Jamadagni couple with his countless chaturanga bala akshouhinis who were taking refreshing bath and swim. The Muni couple invited the Chakravarti and the huge army and hosted a fabulous and highly rich and lavishing lunch with pancha bhakshya bhojana. Well before this lunch invitation the Muni Couple prostrated before the Kamadhenu in the ashram's backyard and entreated her to preserve their dignity to fulfill the invitation of lunch for the Royal Guest of honour and his mammoth number of the army. The shocked Chakravarti exclaimed as how such massive bhojana was possible to an equally huge army and requested the Muni and wife to explain out of his astonishing miracle. As they revealed the truth of mother Kamadhenu's grace and help, instantly the Chakravarti raised his tone and asserted that each and every asset in his command ought to be under his command. The Muni replied: Chakravarti! I am after all a Muni eking my life with what ever 'kandamula bhakshana' is possible in forests; how do you realise that this ashram could offer 'pancha bhakshya paramaanans' to the Royalties and 'akshouhinis' of sena is possible otherwise. You are of Vishnu swarupa and accepted my 'aatithya' as that is a great honour and trilokas could proudly state that Chakravarti Kaartaveerya was honoured by his visit along with his glorious sena which was of akshouhinis strong and the Muni served fabulous meal with pancha bhalshyas! But still the Chakravarti kept on insisting that Kamadhenu ought to be taken away even by force and left the ashram in a huff and disgust, even as the Muni kept on pleading and finally stated that the Chakravarti visited the ashram as a green parrot but finally turned as a crow! The Chakravarti who left in despair redoubled with the design of stealing kamadhenu overnight. He despatched his army men who freed the celestial cow which made reverberating noises while she became breathless and after kicking its legs flew away to skies in pitch darkness. An awful earth tremor followed and the army ran away in fright. Noticing the havoc that had happened, Kaartaveerya appeared on the scene and so did the Ashramavasis and the Mahamuni couples. As the Chakravarti faced the Muni couple, Maha Saadhvi Renuka showered curses on Kaartaveerya and having warned the interference of the former aimed at the Muni's chest and killed him with the proverbial ekavimshati / 21 arrows and left away. The disheartened pativrata could hardly do the 'smarana' of Parashurama who was in long tapasya, even as Kartaveerya shot five arrows on her chest and the 'ashramavaasis' ran away helter-skelter! Having dutifully initiated the 'dahana samskara' of the parents that followed with the assistance and blessings of Mahatma Dattatreya by 'smarana'. Soon after the 'antyeshti karma' (shava yatra- dahana-daaha yagna-udaka karma-pinda daana-sapindeekarana etc), he called on Mahatma Dattatreya with his shaven head and face narrated the details of the happenings about the Chakravarti's visit to the ashram, the enjoyment of the hospitality of the unique parents with the active help of Kamadhenu of Tri Murthi swarupini, his departure on the polite refusal to part with Kamadhenu, the nocturnal attack and of the army, the killing of Kamadhenu, his subsequent visit to the ashram to kill his unique parents and the antima smarana of his mother and cremation formalities that followed. On the fifth day of the obsequies, Parashurama got terribly agitated witnessing the matru swarupa and cried much and as the days of the karma karyas, the mrita swarupas were distorted and dimmed in their physical parts. On the final day after karma kanda, the images of the parents were radiant and blissful which demolished his fears and got kindled the fires of revenge and retribution totally replacing with child like fears and helplessness! Parashurama prostrated to the vision of Devi Renuka and asked her about the 'sarvavyapta keerti' of sahasra baahu chakravarti Kaartaveerya and his historic valour and courage and how indeed could he stand alone and face him with all the strong army behind him! Devi Renuka replied that if only Parshurama performed severe tapas to Maha Deva Shiva sincerely with devotion, he could ensure victory single handed against even the universal hero like Kartaveerya. Parashurama followed the mother's counsel and Maha Deva having been pleased with the prayers after his 'saakshaatkara' bestowed the upadesha of the shadakshara Ganesha Maha Mantra with which Parashurama recited one lakh times with unrelenting bhakti followed by dashaamsa homas and Maha Ganesha stood before him even as Parashurama broke into his rapturous praises. Ganesha was pleased and handed over a Parashu and accorded a 'parashu' with which to destroy Kaartaveerya who no doubt had been no doubt commenced his life within the precincts of dharmaacharana initially but transgressed the limits to the extent of murdering Muni dampatis and in that process killing the illustrious Go Mata the holiest cow in the Over Lords's Creation! Ganesha had implicitly instructed Parashurama to destroy the ambitious and arrogant human Kaartaveerya and also the equally cruel and sinful clan of Kshatriyas too! As a sequel to parashu daana to Jamadagni-Renuka putra Parashu Rama armed with the Parashu gifted by Ganesha as prompted by Maha Deva himself shouted thunderously at Kaartaveerya and army and killed them all in no time and in the same sweep killed the Kshatriyas and the clan is as many as 21 attacks recalling as many arrows of Kaartaveerya's bow broke his father's chest!

Brahmanda Purana too is quoted': Prashu Rama Tapasya :

The illustrious Incarnation of Bhagavan Vishnu as Bhargava Rama was the son of Jamadagni Muni and the grandson of the famed Bhrigu Maharshi and Devi Khyati. As instructed by his father and grandfather, Bhargava Rama performed stringent Tapasya in an Ashram in a deep jungle and visiting Maharshis like Bhrigu, Atri, Kratu, Jaabali, Mrikunda were impressed with the high concentration of Bhargava Rama who was seeking to target Shiva in his penance. In course of time, Maha Deva was pleased with Bhargava Rama's devotion and appeared in disguise as a hunter who presented a repulsive person with dark complexion and red eyes with bow and arrows and crude sword and knives of varied sizes and sharpness. He introduced himself as Tosha Pravarsha the Master of The Forest and that no person should step in the Forest, much less raise a Hermitage. Even Indra would not be able to reside in this forest without my permission, he said. The hunter then asked Rama as to was he and for what purpose that he was staying in the Forest for such a long time. The former replied that he was performing Tapasya to Maha Deva Shambhu and that he would like please that Sarveshwara, Sarva Sharanya, Abhaya prada, Trinetra, Sarvajna, Tripuraantaka and Shankara. The Hunter heckled at Parashu Rama and said that he was wasting his time. In the course of conversation, Parashu Rama realised that the Hunter was not an ordinary human being; he knew a lot of Shiva as the so called hunter mumbled that Shiva did Brahmahatya and that he snipped Brahma's fifth head. The Hunter further told Parashu Rama that after all he was trying to absolve himself of the sin of his mother's killing! (Once Jamadagni left for Tapsaya and his wife Renuka Devi went to a river to fetch water and witnessed Prince of Mrityukavati Chitraratha was enjoying swims in the river with his women and momentarily Renuka felt envious of the women; Jamadagni noticed that his wife committed a sin and on returning back to his Ashram he asked his sons to kill her for the sin; none of his elder sons were prepared but Parashu Rama sliced her neck and killed her at once; apparently, Jamadagni was able to revive Devi Renuka by his Mantra Shakti!). Bhargava Rama then realised that the hunter must be a Siddha! The Hunter further heckled Rama that his Tapasya was futile as he left his old father and killed his mother! Bhargava Rama then asked the hunter to identify himself: Was he Indra or Agni or Surya or Chandra or Vayu or Yama! You have come here to test my sincerity of Tapasya. Mahatma! Do reveal your self, thus prostrated Bhargava Rama and as soon as he stood up, Maha Deva revealed himself and a confused Rama in an ecstatic trance praised him as follows: Namastey Nilakanthaaya Nilalohita murtaye, Namastey Bhuta nathaya Bhuta vaasaaya tey namah/ Vkyataavyakta Swarupaaya Maha Devaaya Meedhushey, Shivaaya Bahurupaaya Trinetraaya Namonamah/ Sharanam Bhava Sharva twadbhaktasya Jagatpataye, Bhuyonanyaashrayaanaam tu twameva hi paraayanam/ Yanmaya- aprakrutam Deva duruktam vaapi Shankara, Ajaanataa twaam Bhagavanmama tatkhshantumarhasi/ Ananyavedya Swarupasya Sadbhaavamiha kaha pumaan, Twaamrutey tawa Sarvesha Samyak Shakreti Veditum/ Tasmaatwam Sarvabhavena praseeda mama Shankara, Naanyaast mey gatistubhyam Namobhuyo namonamah/ Nilakantha, Nilalohita, Bhutanaadha, Bhuta vaasa! You are Perceivable yet impossible to Perceive, Maha Deva, Shiva, Bahurupa, Trinetra, Sharva! Indeed I am your faithful devotee and you are my final refuge; I might have talked lightly about you thinking that you were a normal hunter! Do pardon my ignorance and indiscretion; who else is capable of recognising your own magnanimity excepting yourself! I have no recourse else than surrendering myself to you totally!) Shiva replied to Rama 'My Child! I am pleased with your Tapasya. I really wish I could bestow every Shakti to you although You deserve it. Yet, you are still not yet ripe enough to withstand the Rudra Shakti and the related 'Astraas'; hence you have to perform further Tapasya, resort to Sarva Tirtha Darshanaas and approach me when you consider fit. Subsequently, Bhargava Rama was engaged in Tirtha Darshanaas, fastings, Tapas, Homas, Japas, Snaanaas and other sacred deeds and moved about a lot in Bhumandala. Later, as per the instructions of Maha Deva returned to his Ashram and settled for his Shiva Puja. Meantime, there was a terrible battle between Devas and Asuras and the latter approached Maha Deva for help. Shankara then asked Mahodara to reach Parashurama to bring from his Ashram in Himalayas and the latter was instructed by Shiva to destroy the Asuras. Bhargava was bestowed with a variety of powerful Astra-Shastras and devastated Asuras in large contingents even while the remnants ran away to Rasatala. The victorious Bhargava returned to his Ashram and installed an Idol of the 'Kiraata' who confronted him in the Forest and worshipped him with flowers, Chandana, Dhupa, Dipa and Naivedyas. As Shankara made an appearance along with Marudganas and Devas, Rama fell on his feet and extolled him as follows: (Devadeva! Jagannaadha, Tripuraantaka, Sakala adhyaksha, Bhaktavatsala, Sarva Bhutesha, vrishabha -dhwaja, Sakalaadhisha, Kanukaakara, Skaklaavaasa, Sakala Devaarigana Naashaka, Shuli, Kapaali, Sarva Lokaika paala, Nitya SmashnaVaashi, Kailasavaasi, Pashayukta, Kalakuta vishaara, Sarva Vibhu, Amarvandya, Swayambhu, Shaktivaan, Sagatkarma Sakshi, Shambhu, Chandramouli, Sarpakantha haara, Shiva, Paramatma, Vibhuti sanchhanna deha, Suryachandraagninetra, Kapardi, Andhakaasura mardana, Tripura dhwamsi, Daksha Yagna Vinaashaka, Yogijana Dhyeya, Achintya Rupa, Bhakta hridayaambhoja karna madhya varti, Sakalaagama Siddhaanta Saara Rupa, Sakala Yogendra Prabhu, Shankara, Sakala Vyaapta Maha mahimna, Paramatma, Sharva, Shaanta, Jagadbrahma, Vishwarupa, Adimadhya rahita, Nitya, Avyakta, Vyaktaavyakta Swarupa, Sthula Sukshmaatma, Vedanta Vedyaa, Samasta Vishwa Vigjnaana Swarupa, Suraasurasangha Shreshtha puja paada, Shrikantha, Srishti karta, Lokakarta, Rajo gunaatma, Hiranyagarbha, Paratpara, Pratyagatma, Tamoguna Vikaara, Jagatsamhaara, Kalpanta Rudra Rupa, Parapara-Vida, Avikara, Nitya, Sadas adaatma, Buddhi Prabodha, and Buddhin- driya Vikara! My salutations to you as you are manifested in various Forms as Vasu-Rudra- Marud-Aditya- Saadhaya and Ashwini Kumaaras! You are Avikara, Aja, Nitya, Sukshma Rupa! You are not controllable and unimaginable even by Brahma! Those who continue in ignorance about you and your three major features of Srishti-Sthiti-Samhara are engaged in the cycle of births and deaths; as even great Scholars are unaware about you, what could I realise about you! Indeed your magnificence is far beyond description and voice; thus I am unable to commend you as my Stuti properly yet I know that you are affectionate to your Bhaktas!) Maha Deva was indeed gratified with this kind of touching prayers and bestowed to him all kinds of Astra-Shastra Vidyas, their usages and withdrawing capacities; a outstanding horse; a distinctive chariot, a peerless bow and bunch of arrows, a distinctive Kavacha or body shield, Beeja Mantras whose recitation could either annihilate the worlds or shower blessings to his followers and in short provided unique Siddhis to Bhargava Rama equipping him with invincible powers enabling him to punish the Evil wherever it existed and at the same time to protect the virtuous and the noble.

King Kaartaveeryarjuna and his invincibility: The most valiant and invincible King of the times Kaartaviryarjuna of Haihava Vamsha was contemporary to Bhargava Rama halted at the Ashram of Jamadagna once along with his huge army which was tired and famished on an afternoon when Sun was hot and severe; the army did not have the strength to move forward and decided to rest. The King knew that the Ashram would not have the resource to feed the contingent but the Muni did provide excellent food to them. The King wondered as to how the Muni was able to do so and discovered that the Celestial Cow Kama -dhenu was in the Ashram and fulfilled all the requirements of the inmates of the Ashram. The King desired to take away the Kamadhenu to his kingdom but Jamadagni declined politely initially and refused flatly later. The King returned to his Kingdom but sent his Minister to manage to bring the Celestial Cow, if necessary by force. Finally force was used and both the Muni and the Kamadhenu resisted till the last but were tortured; Jamadagni Maharshi was almost killed and Kamadhenu flew to Heaven! The soldiers returned only with the calf which was a wasted exercise since without the mother the calf was no avail anyway. On return to the Ashram, Devi Renuka found her husband lying dead in a pool of blood and fainted and after recovering from the shock with some passage of time, she cried incessantly enquiring about Bhargava Rama. Rama returned from the forest to fetch wood and flowers for homa and puja and was non-plussed about what all had happened. He witnessed his mother beating her chest again and again numbering twenty one times and took a vow that not only King Kartaveeryarjuna would be butchered but would also attack Kshatriyas as a race would be slaughtered twenty one times and wipe out traces of them all; for quite some time now Kshatriyas were harassing Brahmanas and Sages on many counts, mostly out of fear that Brahmanas were gaining upper hand due to their knowledge and out of fear of an inferiority complex. Renuka decided to jump into fire along with her dead husband in the execution of the old practice of ‘Sati Sahagamana’ but a Celestial Voice stopped her attempt as Jamadagni’s life would be revived once again. Bhrigu Maharshi came to learn of his son’s death and on seeing his body stated that if he the Maharshi spent all his life as per Vedas and performed all virtuous deeds including Yagnas and Tapas, then Jamadagni his son should rise up from his death bed and sprinkled sacred water on the dying body and up came Jamadagni fully resuscitated due to the glory of Bhrigu. But Bhrigu after full recovery came to realise Bhargava Rama’s vow to kill Kartaveeryarjuna and felt sad, not only because that revenge was never the principle of a Brahmana but killing a King by one of his own Subjects would tantamount to ‘Rajavadha’ which was as atrocious as killing one’s own father! Moreso King Kartaveeryarjuna was not only an illustrious King of extraordinary prowess but also an outstanding devotee of Bhagavan Dattatreya. This created a predicament to Bhargava Rama as there was a vow to kill the King and the Kshatriya Vamsha in twenty one attacks and on the other hand there was the considered advice tantamounting to an instruction of his father not to do so. Jamadagni then advised to pray to Brahma Deva and act according to his considered advice. Brahma too was not acceptable to either of the vows taken by Bhargava and affirmed that it would not be in order that if simply one King perpetrated a sin, there would be little justification to eradicate the entire Kshatriya Vamsha in twenty one battles! Yet, he blessed Rama to recite a Krishna Kavacha titled ‘Trailokya Vijaya’ and visit Shiva Loka to seek his blessings in the matter. As Bhargava Rama with great difficulty managed an audience with Shiva, the latter too felt that it was not an easy task to terminate King Kartaveeryarjuna who by his mere frown a great warrior like was disarmed and had to flee! However, the ever merciful Mahadeva suggested that he like Skanda Kumara should practise not only the Trailokya Vijaya Mantra but several other powerful Mantras like Nagasatra, Paashupata, Brahmastra, Narayanastra, Agneyastra, Varanyastra, Gandharvatra, Garudastra, Jumbhunastra and many other Astras; Rama then bowed with the greatest possible happiness and fulfillment to Shiva, Devi Parvati, Ganesha, Skanda and Nandi Deva and returned to his father Jamadagni, fully overjoyed.!

rāmaḥ śuśubhe 'tikāmayā; vibhuḥ śrīyā viṣṇur ivāmareśvaraḥ/*

As Bhargava Rama was put to shame, Shri Rama addressed his father King Dasharatha who had just returned to normalcy after the quick succession of events and said: dear father, Parashurama had left for good and now you may instruct all of us to move forward comfortably with the chaturanga balaas, and the wedding procession with joy and renewed enthusiasm. As the procession finally reached the city of Ayodhya, it was ready with dhvaja-patakas, sonorous welcome sounds of drums and musical instruments, group dances of talented damsels and youthful males, decorated house holds, sweet smells of fragrant flowers and garlanded streets and men and women dressed up with festive feverishness, and freshly cooked savories and sweets for free distribution at street corners and so on. Groups of vedic panditas were busy with vedic chantings aloud welcoming the arriving 'baraat' or those who were fortunate to see the wedding events. Rushing citizens were anxious to glance the new brides with grace and modesty.

Then King Dasharatha along with his sons and new daughters-in-law as accompanied by Devis Koushalya- Sumitra-Kaikeyi descended from their respective chariots made an auspicious entry. They were all initially ushered into their deva mandiras. The new daughters in law touched the feet of elders. Thereafter the respective new couples entered their own chambers and settled gradually. In due course of time the Raja Kumaras, refreshed themselves in the art of archery with excellent camaraderie and solidarity as some of the newly learnt mantras of 'dhanur prayogaas' were exchanged too and imparting excellent care and affection to the proud King Dasharatha. In course of time King Dasharatha accosted Bharata Kumara and addressed him to accompany Kaikeya Raja Kumara who had been there for good time at Ayodhya and Shatrugna too evinced interest to accompany Bharat Kumara too. There after, Rama Lakshmanas started to look after King Dasharath's small and big duties of officialdom as also his personal care. Pitaraagjnaam puraskritya pourakaaryaani sarvashah, chakaara Raamah sarvaani priyaani cha hitaanicha/ Having gradually deputising the duties of the King, especially the day to day issues of the public of Ayodhya and thus gained the popularity and faith. Eventually, the duties of looking after the mothers, their own welfare as also of their households were discharged perfectly by Rama and brothers. Similarly the issues related to the Gurus and workers of the 'darbaar' were resolved instantly. The word spread across Ayodhya and other places in the entire kingdom about the efficient and instant handling of the public. Teshaamatishayaa loke Ramah satyaparaakramah, svayambhuriva bhutaanaam babhuva gunavattarah/ Just as Brahma Deva himself would have looked after the welfare of charaa -chaara jajati of his creation, the Rajas of Ayodhya too assume full responsibility of the public. At the same time Rama and Sita have become famed as being of the same heart and for the passage of all the seasons of years. Antarjātam api vyaktam ākhyāti hṛdayaṁ hṛdā/ tasya bhūyo viśeṣeṇa maithilī janakātmajā, devatābhiḥ samā rūpe sītā śrīr iva rūpiṇī/ tayā sa rājarṣisuto 'bhirāmayā; sameyivān uttamarājakanyayā, atīva rāmaḥ śuśubhe 'tikāmayā; vibhuḥ śrīyā viṣṇur ivāmareśvaraḥ/ Janakanandini Mithileshwari Kumari Sita gets aware of Shri Rama's inner voice and opinion almost instantly and clearly. Indeed She has the form and fame of Maha Lakshmi Herself. The eldest of King Dasharatha's daughter in law is Lakshmi while the King Dasharatha was convinced his son Rama was Maha Vishnu Himself!

Annexure on Shri Rama's Uttara Bharata Parikrama before wedding with Devi Sita

Sri Rama's route From Ayodhya to Janakpur was the route used by the bridegroom and his 'baraatis' or the Party as also to return to Ayodhya after the Rama-Sita marriage in Janakpur acquired the name 'Ram-Sita Marg' long ago. The route of the 'baraatis' is an excellent Road and millions of pilgrims actually cover the distance on foot till date out of veneration!

Shri Rama and Lakshmana guided by Maharshi Vishwamitra, however took another route to reach Janakpur after the slaying of Tataka in Tatakavan (Forest of Tataka).

1) Azamgarh: Uttar Pradesh: Shri Ram was only fifteen years old when he and Lakshman set out with Vishwamitra to annihilate the demons who were polluting and obstructing the sacred rituals of his Yagna (firesacrifice). Their first halt was on the banks of the River Sarayu, twenty kilometers from Ayodhya. Valmiki's Ramayan describes the tranquil setting against which, Vishwamitra taught the princes about the art of 'bal' and 'atibal' which endowed them with immunity from disease and eternal good health besides freeing them from pangs of hunger and thirst.

2) Balliya: Uttar Pradesh: Walking past Azamgarh, Shri Ram, Lakshman and Sage Vishwamitra reached Balliya where River Sarayu merges with the holy river Ganga. This haven on the banks of the Sarayu was the chosen place for sages who spend long hours in meditation. Shri Ram rested here in the night before he set out at dawn crossing river Ganga to reach Vishwamitra's Siddhashram. At night, before the princes went to sleep, Vishwamitra narrated to them the story of 'Kama Deva' the God of Love who was burned to ashes there by Lord Shiva.

3) Buxar: Bihar : Tataka Vadha:- After crossing the holy Ganga, Shri Ram and Lakshman reached a dense forest where demoness Tataka lived. The dreadful forest was known as Tatakavan. Shri Ram ended Tataka's reign over the forest by slaying her and freeing its inhabitants from terror. The forest stretched between Bharoli and Baksar in Bihar. Shri Rama performed the first task of his "avtaar" (incarnation) here by destroying the evil demoness.

4) Siddhashram: Buxar, Bihar: Vishwamitra's Siddhashram was located not too far from Buxar. Siddhashram, according to Adhyatma Ramayan was a social ashram where religious instruction was imparted to people. Shri Ram and Lakshman sojourned in the ashram for three days after Shri Ram killed Mareech and Subahu, the demons who were tormenting Vishwamitra by spoiling his Yagna with bones and blood. Lakshman destroyed the demon while Shri Ram took on the mighty Maricha, son of Tataka. There are villages existing today on the banks of the River Ganga with the names Marich and Subahu.

5) Ahilya Uddhar: Ahroli, Buxar, Bihar. Three kilometers from Buxar in the northern direction is the village Ahroli. Rishi Gautam had his ashram here. According to Ram Charita Manas it was here that Shri Ram delivered Ahilya, the beautiful wife of Rishi Gautam, from a curse of her husband, which had turned her into stone. When Shri Ram and Lakshman left Siddhashram they crossed River Ganga and River Sonbhadra and set foot on the soil of Ahroli village, which still exists in Buxar district.

6) Sonbhadra River, of Gajendra Moksha Fame, Sonpur, near Patna, Bihar: Parev and Trigama are two places of significance. They have a distance of five kilometers between them. When Shri Ram and Lakshman crossed River Sonbhadra, they reached a place before Patna where they spent a night before moving on to Janakpur.

7) Vishala Nagri, Hajipur, Bihar (near Patna). Shri Ram and Lakshman crossed River Ganga and reached this town with Rishi Vishwamitra who guided them to a garden to rest for a while in its fragrant surroundings.

8) Ahilya Ashram, Darbhanga, Bihar: Valmiki's Ramayan says Gautam Rishi's ashram was in Mithila. Ahilya resided there as Shila. The place was therefore named as Ahiyari after her. Thaiyavalk (Jagvan), Shringi (Srinyia), Bhringi (Bhairav) and Gautam Rishis lived there.

9) Vishwamitra Ashram: Bisaul, Madhubani, Bihar. Bisaul was Rishi Vishwamitra's place of residence. After reaching Janakpur Rishi Vishwamitra stayed there and he set up his ashram in a garden. B) Phulhar Village (Jamuni), Madhubani, Bihar was situated in one of Raja Janak's prime gardens. It was in Jamuni (Madhubani) and was celebrated for a Gauri Temple where Sita prayed regularly. After paying obeisance to his Guru Vishwamitra when Shri Ram entered the floral section of the garden, Sita, who was present there, got her first glimpse of Shri Ram.

10) Matihani: Janakpur, Nepal. In the vicinity of Janakpur was Matihani from where, according to folklore, mud was collected and taken to create the venue for the marriage of Shri Ram and Sita. Matihani has become a sacred place as even today maidens for their marriage take mud from here.

B) Janakpur, Nepal: Janakpur was the capital of Raja Janak's kingdom. It lies 20 kilometers from India's border and is known for a temple of Ma Sita which attracts pilgrims round the year.

C) Rangbhoomi: Janakpur, Nepal. It is believed that the Dhanush Yagya (competition for lifting of the bow) or Sitaswayamvar, as is popularly understood was announced before an invited royal gathering in a huge maidan (field) close to the present Janaki Mandir. It was here that Shri Ram picked up the Shiv Dhanush and broke it into two halves with ease. The important places in Janakpur include Matihani, Rangbhoomi, Dhanusha Mani Mandap. All of them are associated with the legend of Shri Ram and Sita's marriage.

11) Sita Marhi, Bihar: According to beliefs, Mithila, one of the principalities of Raja Janak's Kingdom was passing through the trial of drought and famine. Following royal tradition, Raja Janak took out the golden plow and went to an arid field to plough the soil and appeal to the gods for rain. While performing the ritual, the plow got stuck in a deep groove in the soil. The king's men rushed to pull the plow out of the depth of the soil and lo and behold there was a girl child waiting for help. The childless king happily adopted her as his daughter and named her "Sita", the Sanskrit term by which the cutting side of the plow is known. The name of the village, Sitamarhi, is derived from the name Sita as a result. Travelers going to Janakpur in Nepal invariably stop at Sitamarhi for a "darshan" (sighting) of the land where Sita manifested in the soil.

12) Sitakund Motihari, Bihar: It is said that the 'baraatis' (procession of the bridegroom's family) while returning to the kingdom of Ayodhya after the Ram-Sita marriage stopped at Sitakund Motihari for a little rest. They bathed and freshened themselves in the Sita Kund. One of Sita's bangles fell in the kund (pond), it is believed. The baraatis (Bridegroom's family) offered a puja (worship) to Lord Shiva here. Sitakund is located 20 kms from Motihari in the South Direction. It is a well-known place in the Northern Indian Belt. Then the baraatis arrived at Derwan, Gorakhpur, Uttar Pradesh is not far from Sitakund. The baraatis (Bridegroom's family) had camped at this place and hence the name Derwan. The word "Dev" in Hindi means camp.

13) Dohri Ghat, Mhow, Uttar Pradesh: The true meaning of Dohari is Do Hari, i.e. Two Haris. One commonly used name in the worship of Lord Vishnu is Hari. As per Valmiki Ramayan, the baarat was on the way to Ayodhya when the earlier Avtaar (incarnation) of Vishnu, Parashuram, stopped the baarat at this place on the bank of the river Sarayu. Parashuram tested Shri Ram and realized who he was. Both the Haris (Parashuram and Ram, the two Vishnu avatars) met here and Parashuram returned to Maheshgiri Mountain after offering his respects to Ram. Raja Dashrath and the "baraatis" then continued their journey back to Ayodhya with Shri Ram.

Shri Ram's Vanvasa Parikrama:

It is more difficult to chart a route for Ram's journey during his period of exile. Firstly this is pan-India journey, secondly, Ram, Lakshman and Sita also wandered in the Dandaka Forest for more than 10 years. This mighty forest would encompass in today's date almost the entire state of Madhya Pradesh including parts of Gujarat and Maharashtra on the West and Karnataka on the South. Hence this makes it even more difficult. Still one might charter a basic route. There are many places that Ram visited during this 14 year period during which he had the good fortune of meeting with some of most enlightened sages and beings of that period. They were of course very delighted to meet with Ram themselves with many of them having been foretold the coming of Ram, they waited for years conducting severe penance for that fortunate time to arrive.

1) Ayodhya, Uttar Pradesh: was the capital city for the Isvaku Dynasty (Suryavanshi) of Kings. This was also the city where Son of Dasrath, Shri Ram was born (appeared). In twelve kilometers vicinity of Ayodhya there exist holy places like Veda Kund, Sita Kund, Janaura etc. that are also part of the journey of Shri Ram's 'vanvas' (exile) route. It was also from Ayodhya that Shri Ram started his journey along with Sita and Lakshman. Ayodhya was a majestic city comparable to any international city of modern times almost eleven kilometers in length full of parks, gardens, theatres and modern infrastructure and facilities for its citizens. The citizens of Ayodhya loved their Kings. It was at Tamsa River, Uttar Pradesh that Shri Ram along with Sita, Lakshman and Sumantra Minister (Mantri) rested on their first night. The modern name for Tamsa River is Madhar River and the place from where she flows is called Gora Ghat. This place is about twenty kilometers from Ayodhya. On the banks of the Tamsa River there is a place known as Purva Chakiya. The citizens of Ayodhya followed Shri Ram until this spot after their dearest Ram departed from Ayodhya. Shri Ram, Lakshman and Sita disguised themselves and left this spot in the middle of the night so that none of the people would be able to follow him.

2) Sultanpur, Uttar Pradesh on the banks of Gomati River that Sage Valmiki had an ashram. It was from here that Shri Ram crossed the Gomti river. The old name of Sultanpur was Kushanathpur, which was named after the son of Ram, 'Kush'. Vadrathi River, Pratapgarh, Uttar Pradesh The present day name Sarkani River which is situated around 8 kilometers from Pratapgarh in the Eastern Direction. Shri Ram had crossed this river near the town of Mohanganj, as per Valmiki Ramayan. Sandika River (Sai River), Mohanganj, Pratapgarh, Uttar Pradesh is situated at a distance of twelve kilometers from Pratapgarh. This place is also commonly known as Dev Ghat. Shri Ram has crossed this river from this spot. There is also a Shiv Temple here that was established by Bharat. This place has been mentioned in the Valmiki as well as Tulsi Ramayan. Further, Balukini River, Pratapgarh, Ramkaleva, Uttar Pradesh is approximately 15 kilometers from Pratapgarh in the Southern Direction. Shri Ram had crossed this river here as has been mentioned in the Valmiki Ramayan.

3) Prayag (Allahabad), Uttar Pradesh: A) Shringverpur or the current name Singrora, the capital of Nishad Raj Guha. This place is situated around twenty kilometers North of Allahabad. Shri Ram had rested on a bed of grass here. The next morning he crossed the Ganga River from here and proceeded to the Bharadwaj Ashram. The incident of 'Kevat Prasang' took place here.

B) Sita Kund, Shrinverpur, Prayag. This holy pond is around two kilometers from Shrinverpur. It was from here that Shri Ram sent back their beloved minister Sumantra to Ayodhya.

C) Sangam, Prayag: This is the divine meeting place of the three holy rivers of Ganga, Yamuna and Saraswati. Shri Ram himself praised this spot for its spiritual powers, which could uplift mankind. Bharadwaj Rishi had his ashram here. Shri Ram had rested in this ashram for a night. Ram Charita Manas as well as Valmiki Ramayan give a lot of importance to this place.

D) Yamuna Ghat, Simri, Prayag: Shri Ram along with Lakshman and Sita crossed the Yamuna River. In the Valmiki Ramayan the reference to Lakshman constructing a boat to cross the river has been made for this place. After resting overnight on the Simri Ghat Shri Ram crossed the river using the boat made by Lakshman. There are many places on the banks of the Yamuna related to the exile period of Shri Ram like Akshay Vat, Sita Rasoi (Jasra Bazaar), Rishiyan (the abode of Rishis), Murka (Hanuman Mandir).

4) Chitrakoot, Uttar Pradesh:

A) Ramnagar: Shri Ram walked along the banks of the Yamuna River in his onward journey. After crossing the Yamuna River, he reached what is known in today's time as Ramnagar. This place is birthplace of Tulsi Das, the great poet who has written Ram Charita Manas.

B) Valmiki Ashram, Lala Pur, Chitrakoot: After visiting Sage Bharadwaj's Ashram, Shri Ram reached Valmiki's Ashram and he spent the night here. It was here that Sage Valmiki himself suggested to Shri Ram to make Chitrakoot his home for a few days.

C) As suggested by Sage Valmiki, Shri Ram reached Chitrakoot Dham. Shri Ram made his ashram on the Kamadgiri Mountain near the Mandakini River. There were many sages, holy men and Rishis who had made their ashrams (abodes) near the Kamadgiri Mountain. It was this divine spot where Shri Bharat met with Shri Ram and took his padukas (slippers) with him to Ayodhya to place on the throne.

Chitrakoot has many places of pilgrimages in its vicinity like Madakini River, Bharatkoop, On the banks of the Mandakini River – Spatik Sheela, Hanuman Dhara and Atri Ashram, Gupt (Secret) Godavari. All these sacred places strengthen the place of Chitrakoot as a one of the most important places of pilgrimages while tracing the footsteps of Shri Ram's journey of exile. After the visit of Bharat to Chitrakoot, many citizens of Ayodhya had started to visit this place. Many of the holy men and sages in this area started to feel disturbed by the presence of so many people and it then that Shri Ram decided to leave this place. Hence all in all Shri Ram would have stayed in Chitrakoot for only about one or two years only. The majority of his exile period he spent in the Dandak Forest.

D) Amravati, Chitrakoot, Uttar Pradesh: Around 7 kilometers from Atri Ashram, in the middle of the jungle, there is a beautiful place called Amravati. One of the ancestors of Shri Ram called Ambrish had conducted an intense penance here for many years. After leaving Chitrakoot, Shri Ram came to Sage Atri's Ashram. It was here that the Sati Anusuya (pure and chaste wife of Sage Atri) gave the sermon of 'Pati Vrata Dharma' (service to husband) to Mother Sita. After resting in Sage Atri's Ashram for one night, Shri Ram spent the next night at the place of penance of Ambrish (his ancestor). It was in this forest that Shri Ram killed the Rakshas named Viradh. In the vicinity of Amvarti there is a village called Jamunihayi. There is a very dark and dangerous looking pit called 'Viradh Kund' (pond). This pit is situated three kilometers from Amravati. After killing the demon Viradh, Shri Ram had buried him here.

5) Sharbang Ashram, Satna, Madhya Pradesh: Around 13 kilometers from current day Chithara Station, Satna, Madhya Pradesh is probably where the Shabrang Ashram of the Ramayan is situated. After the slaying of Viradh, Shri Ram visited this ashram. It was here that he had the divine 'darshan' (sighting) of the God Indra. After having the 'darshan' of Shri Ram, Shabrang Rishi with the help of his Yogic Fire destroyed his body and attained salvation.

6) Ramtek, Nagpur, Maharashtra: Ramtek is a beautiful mountain near the city of Nagpur. Shri Ram stayed here for some time. This mountain is also connected with the writer Kalidas who wrote the famous poem 'Meghdoot' according to some historians. Approximately 9 kilometers from here there is a place called Salbardi near which there is a pilgrimage spot called Sita Nahani. According to popular legend, Shri Ram proceeded to the ashram of Sutikshan Muni from here.

7) Nasik, Maharashtra:

A) Sutiksha Muni Ashram: Sapta Srungi; After meeting with Sharbang Rishi, Shri Ram reached the ashram of Sutikshan Muni who had spent 10 years in the Dandaka Forest before reaching here. Sutikshan Muni was the disciple of Agastya Rishi. Shri Ram rested here for some time. He killed many of the demons residing in this area and also took a vow that he would rid this area of all the evil influences. There is an ancient temple of Goddess Sapta Srungi here, which attracts many pilgrims. It is said that Markandaya Rishi wrote the Durga Saptastuti at this holy place. According to popular legend, Durga Ma killed the demon Mahisasur at this place, which is represented by a hole in the mountain, which can be seen till today. The demon was hiding behind the mountain when Durga attacked him.

B) Agastya Ashram: Pimpurner, Nasik: Approximately 16 kilometers North of Nasik there is an ashram called Agasteshwar Ashram. Sutiksha Muni had guided Shri Ram to his Guru Agastya Rishi. Sage Agastya presented Ram with many divine weapons and powers here. He also advised Ram to make his Ashram on the banks of the Godavari River and live there.

C) Panchavati: Nasik; On the banks of the Godavari River there is place popularly known as Tapovan, which is the actual Panchvati of the Ramayan era. It was here that Shri Ram, Lakshman and Sita resided here in a small hut. The incident of the cutting off the nose of Demoness Shupnaka took place here. It is from here that 'Nasik' derived its name as the Sanskrit name for nose is 'Nasika'. Khar, Dhooshan, Trishara and 14,000 other Demons were slain by Shri Ram in this area after they attacked Shri Ram on hearing about this incident from their sister. The kidnapping of Sita by Ravan, The slaying of Mareech and the Slaying of Jatayu by Ravan all took place in a forest known as Janasthan in this area. In the ancient times, the ashram of Gautam Rishi was in the holy town of Trimbakeshwar (one of the twelve Jyotirlingas) nearby. In order to release himself of the burden of a curse on him, Gautam Rishi had created the Godavari River.

8) Tuljapur (Maharashtra): There is a famed temple of Devi Tuljabhavani here. It is believed that Shri Ram and Sita roamed in the forests near the temple. It is also here that Lord Shiva and his wife Sati came for the 'darshan' of Shri Ram and Sita. Sati took the form of Sita and tried to get close to Ram in order to test his purity.

9) Ramdurg, Belgam, Karnataka: A) Kaband Ashram: Kardigud, Near Ramdurg, Belgam, Karnataka In the Indian state of Karnataka there is a village called Kardigud where it is believed that Kaband Ashram was situated. Shri Ram and Lakshman slayed the demon Kaband here. After he was killed, Kabandh became a Gandharva and left for his heavenly abode. Before leaving he had requested Shri Ram to visit the Ashram of Shabari. B) Shabri Ashram: Sureban, Near Ramdurg, Belgam: Around 14 kilometers in the Northern direction from Ram Durg, near the town of Gunga is placed called Sureban. This is place where Shabri, who was a disciple of Sage Matang lived. She had waited long years for her dear Ram to arrive, and on his arrival she fed him berries which she had tasted herself to make sure that they were sweet. This angered Lakshman but Shri Ram pacified him because he could see her intense love and devotion towards him. It was Shabri who then instructed Ram to approach Sugreev in the search for his beloved wife.

10) Hampi, Karnataka : A) Hanuman Halli: Koppal, Hampi: This was the place where Hanuman met Shri Ram and Lakshman for the first time. In fact Sugreev had sent Hanuman to meet with them in order to make sure that they were not the spies of his brother and archenemy Bali. The mighty Hanuman lifted Shri Ram and Lakshman on his shoulders and took them on Rishimukh Parvat to meet with Sugreev. The capital city of Sugreev 'Kishkinda' is also near by. B) Bellari, Hampi: Near the ancient Kishkinda, around four kilometers from the town of Hampi, there exists a Mountain called Malbhavant (Prastavan) where Shri Ram has spent the monsoon season. The places to see around this area include Bali Bandara, Anjani Parvat (mountain), Matang Rishi Mountain, Spatik Sheela. It was on the Spatik Sheela that the Varan (monkey) Sena (army) had collected for the first time. Hanuman had given the news of Sita to Shri Ram at this place.

11) Tiruchallapalli, Tamil Nadu: The old name for this town is Trishirapalli. This was the abode for Ravan's brother Trishira and so named after him. On the banks of the Kaveri River here there is a beautiful Shiva Temple, which is said to destroy sins. According to popular legend, Shri Ram had prayed to Lord Shiva here in order to free himself of the sin of slaying Khar and Dooshan. On his way to Lanka, Shri Ram had stayed here.

12) Rampad, Kodikarai, Vedaranyam, Tamil Nadu: Along with the entire Vanar (monkey) Sena (army), Shri Ram had proceeded towards the Southern direction from this town. It was also from this place that Shri Ram had the first view of the sea. The footprints of Shri Ram are still found in the forests of this area.

13) Ramanadhapuram, Tamil Nadu: Ramnathpuram is on the shores of the waters bodies on the Southern tip of India. It is on the way to holy pilgrim town of Rameshwaram. It is believed that the foundation stone of the Ram-Setu Bridge constructed by Ram and the entire army to cross over to Sri Lanka is placed here in a small village called 'Chedu Karai'. One can still see the foundation stones of this architectural wonder ten feet below the waters of the ocean. Vibhishan, after having been insulted by Ravan came to seek the help of Ram at this place. The entire strategy for the war was also devised in this town. Places worth to visit in the neighborhood include Vilundi Tirth, Ekanth Ram, Agni Tirth, Ram Jaroka, Kodanda Ram Mandir, Jata Tirth and Darbhashainam. It is believed that it was in Darbhashainam, that Shri Ram made a Darbhashayana (a seat of grass) and prayed to Varun Devta (God of the Sea) for three continuous days for giving him passage to Lanka. Varun Devta appeared after three days and advised Ram to build a bridge across the sea to Lanka.

14) Rameshvaram, Tamil Nadu: Rameshwaram is one of the twelve Jyotirlingas in India. Shri Ram had established a Shiva Linga Temple here using the sand from the sea. Approximately one or two kilometers from this Temple, Nala vanara (monkey) along with the other vanars (monkeys) had made the bridge to Lanka. This bridge was constructed in five days only. Shri Ram crossed over to Lanka with his entire army using this bridge and camped at Suvel Parvat (Mountain). NASA has used modern satellite technology to photograph this bridge and they have actually unearthed an ancient bridge connected India to modern day Sri Lanka!

15) Dhanushkoti: Skanda Purana in reference to Setu Mahatmya describes: 'On the shores of the Southern Seas is the most sacred and boon-bestowing Dhanushkodi which is also the high point of destroying 'Maha Patakas' like Brahma Hatya, Suraapaana, Swarna harana, Guru-Shishyadi gamana. This is also the provider of plentiful prosperity and Kailasa Moksha Prada. It uproots indebtedness and poverty for ever. Incidentally, Dhanushkoti partially got submerged into Sea owing to recent cyclonic devastation and partly ascribed to Shri Rama's own arrows. This historic meeting point of three high Seas of Hind Sagara-Bay of Bengal and Arabian Sea is the hallowed Tirtha for Sacred Snaananas, Shraddha-Pinda pradaanas and Daanas. The Legend continues to state that Lord Shri Rama after killing Ravanaasura and his generation except Vibhishana who was subsequently made the King of Lanka, there followed a series of awe-inspiring incidents like Devi Sita's Agni Pariksha, Hanuman's despatch to Kasi to fetch a genuine Shiva Linga for installation at Raneshwara, his delayed action to do so, Devi Sita's installation of Sand Linga, and travel by Pushpaka Vimana back to Ayodhya for the most auspicious Shri Sita-Rama Kalyana at Ayodhya!

ESSENCE OF VALMIKI AYODHYA RAMAYANA

PREFACE

The Epic of Valmiki Ramayana- Rama Aayana- denotes Shri Rama's journey from vice to virtue. This is relevant now as much as in the past -present and for ever as narrated in Six Khandas or sugar cane stems viz. Baala Khanda-Ayodhya Khanda- Aranya Khanda-Kishkinda Khanda- Sundara Khanda-Yuddha Khanda. Baala Khanda comprises seventy seven Sargas- Ayodhya Khanda one hundred nineteen Sargas- Aranya Khanda has seventy five Sargas-Kishkinda Khanda has sixty seven Sargas-Sundara Khanda comprises of sixty eight Sargas- Yuddha Khanda has one twenty eight Sargas. Additionally Uttara Khanda has one hundred eleven Sargas.The current presentation is relevant to Baala Khanda.

As I had the fortune of approaching HH Vijayendra Sarasvati of Kanchi Kamakoti, who for the last fifteen years or so, blessed me to script the essence of over Ashtaadasha Puranas, Ashtadasha Upanishads, Brahma Sutras, Dharma Sindhu, Manu Smriti, Paraashara Smriti, Soundarya Lahari, and on Pancha Bhutas- Surya- Chandra-Lakshmi-Saraswati - Ganesha-Bhagavad Gita and so on. Then he spontaneously directed me to attempt Vaalmiki Ramayana in parts but with possible 'vishleshanas' or explanatory notes as per the contexts of situations and characters referred to. Indeed this is a massive effort but I have his unimaginable blessings.

The present script is a maiden effort of the endless 'Itihasa'. The Instruction is that the digestive exercise be gradual, since centuries old countless versions of Ramayana are available or unavailable, but each such Scripts from 'taala grandhaas' to the paper world had been absorbed as per the inner grasping vibrations subjectively. Hence the physical intakes of pathana-manana- nidhi dhyasas are objective realistically.

'Baala Khanda' is the trend setter in as the Yuga Purusha Rama blossoms. That was how Maharshi Vaalmiki encourages Rama's second generation of Lava Kusha Kumaras to sing for us the overview of Ramayana vide the fourth sarga itself!

From 'Baalya' to adolescent youthfulness, Brahmarshi Vishvamitra literally pushes to a jolt to King Dasharatha by equipping Shri Rama with 'astra-shastra vidya' to fight viciousness and vindicate Dharma and Nyaya. The saga and the role of Vishvamitra from a King to a Brahmarshi is the base note of the symphony of Baala Kanda. The fleeting picturisation of the Demons and Sages alike in the Baala Ramayana is a process of transformation of the Society then and now. The struggle continues as an integral part of Existence and as like an ever staged drama through years- centuries- yugas -kalpas of the eternal time cycle.

It is my fortune to imagine as to how the Seers of the yore had showered the flows of 'dharmaic' nectar on HH Vijayendra Sarasvati of Kanchi who in turn allows drops on countless followers like us and to our families too.

INTRODUCTION

Essence of Valmiki Ayodhya Ramayana is a sequel to the Essence of Valmiki Bala Ramayana. Maharshi Valmiki while bathing in Tamasa River gets aghast seeing a couple of frolicking Krouncha birds shot down by a merciless hunter and his expression was the inspirational beginning of Valmiki Ramayana! The incident of cruelty causing suffering to any Living Being, be it a human, animal or bird would surely result in a retaliatory rebound either in the same birth or the following birth. Such acts of 'adharma' inciting 'mara mara' or expressions of killings of the innocents could be nullified by the reversal expressions of 'raama raama' or the transformation of 'Rama Ayana' or from 'adharma' to 'dharma' or the travel of transformation. This is relevant now as much as in the past -present and for ever as narrated in Six Khandas or sugar cane stems viz. RETROSPECTIVE *

[*Essence of Valmiki Bala Ramayana]

Brahmarshi Narada initiated the delineation of Shri Rama to Valmiki Maharshi and thereafter departed for a bath in river Tamasa near Ganga along with his disciples; he addressed his shishya named Bharadvaja and expressed as to how refreshing was the bath. As he looked around, he spotted on the banks of the cool water flows, two krouncha birds in chirruping play and fun in a nest on a tree branch. But just then a cruel hunter released an arrow at the loving male bird which got dropped dead in blood and the female bird crooned in anguish and misery. The two love birds had always been together infatuated with each other and Muni Valmiki was truly pained and hurt in his heart and inner consciousness. The natural instinct of the Maharshi prompted him involuntarily to burst out rather reprimandingly: Mā niṣāda pratiṣṭhāṁ tvam agamah śāśvatīḥ samāḥ, yat krauñcamithunād ekam avadhīḥ kāmamohitam/ 'Hey hunter! Why have you so mercilessly killed the male partner of such loving birds suddenly! You too would soon die as a retribution!' Having shouted spontaneously thus, the Maharshi got retrospective and addressed his disciples that a few words were slipped from my tongue as the feeling was intense! The shishyas replied unanimously: Guru sire! Whatever has slipped out from your tongue has admirably fitted itself in a four lined stanza of glory with rhythmic sound metered with perfection of eight letters of prosody just as a 'veena dhvani' of the stringed musical instrument! The prime disciple Bharadvaja instantly agreed affirmingly that a meaningful stanza by framed as what the Guru has stated involuntarily! As this incident had happened, the entire troupe concluded their bath and moved on to their ashram even as the hot deliberation of the entire ashram was on the singular topic of the day. The Guru shishya 'samvada' on the principles of dharma took place subsequently although the background was basically hovering on the morning incident only. Meanwhile, the Charurmukha Brahma himself appeared and alerted Valmiki Maharshi. The latter was taken aback and prostrated to Brahma along paadyaarghya- aasana-puja- stotra formalities while Brahma endearingly made the Maharshi seated comfortably beside him. But the Maharshi was at the back of his mind about the morning incident especially recalling what he stated at that juncture. Brahma smilingly understood what the Maharshi was cogitating about recalling what all the Maharshi stated. He then suggested: ‘Maharshi! What you had stated spontaneously as a stanza was truly as per ‘chhandas’ or prosody and need not torment your psyche so much; let this stanza under reference be the inspiration of scripting the entirety of ‘Rama charitra’; Bhagavan Shri Rama as the incarnation of Maha Vishnu Himself was indeed the exemplary human figure of the Treta Yuga of virtue- sacrifice-charity-tolerance but simultaneously of bravery-heroism-and everlasting renown! This was what Brahmarshi Narada conveyed to Valmiki Muni as having expressed by Brahma to Narada. Let this Rama Charitra be publicised so far kept dormant and undescribed and let the world be aware of the completed details as to how dharma prevails as the lasting reality, despite the vicissitudes and tests of Adharma as Truth is vindicated ultimately. Narada with the inspiration of Brahma affirmed to Valmiki Maharshi: Maharshi! what ever you are going to script as the ‘Ramayana’ - Rama’s Aayana- shall most certainly be the truth and factual and hence be prepared soon as per ‘anushtup cchandas’. Yāvat sthāsyanti girayaḥ saritaś ca mahītale, tāvad rāmāyaṇakathā lokeṣu pracariṣyati/ yāvad rāmasya ca kathā tvaikṛtā pracariṣyati, tāvad ūrdhvam adhaś ca tvaṁ mallokeṣu nivatsyasi/’ As long as rivers flow and the might of mountains is sustained, the worlds should be fully saturated with ‘Ramayana Prachaara’. The Ramayana that you would script soon ought to become popular world wide and what ever seriatum and content followed by you would be lasting too! Narada thus informed Valmiki after the disappearance of Lord Brahma. Valmiki Maharshi was nonplussed with the rapid sequence of what all happened on that day. Once sensitised thus, the disciples of Valmiki kept on resounding repeatedly the shloka as they were literally dipped steep in. At the same time Valmiki Maharshi was mentally getting ready to take up the enormous task of Ramanayana of twenty four thousand stanzas plus and seeking to select the style of scripting according to meter as per ‘chhandas vedaanga’, with tuneful phrases, conjunctions, and rhymes with aptness and of tunes enriching the content and inner meanings and appropriate emotional appeals embedded therein. As per Brahmarshi Narada’s directive, Valmiki Maharshi sought to script of Sampurna Ramayana as it should be such as to fulfill the ‘Chaturvedha Phala’ or the human aspirations of Dharma- Artha- Kaama- Mokshas. Then he dutifully squatted in ‘padmaasana’, performed ‘aouposhana’ of water as a mark of ‘trikarana shuddhi’ or three folded purity of manasa-vaachaa-karmana or by way of topping up the thoughts by the heart-word -and deed. Then he pondered over the imaginary picture of Shri Rama- Lakshmana- Devi Sita; the Ayodhya Kingdom reigned by King Dasharatha with his queens; the related incidents of their collective incidents of laughter-mutual conversations-thought patterns, the do’s and don’ts of administration, and such detailing as filled on his powerful thought and memory screen. The Maharshi imagined the scene of the visits of Rama- Lakshmana and Devi Sita in sprawling garden tours and the interesting incidents thereof. Then the Maharshi seated firmly and had a rapid visual coverage on his mental retina. Just on the lines of what Sage Narada described, he visualised the Raghuvamsha Rama’s ‘Kaavya Nirmana’ or the outline of the epic of Ramayana. Rama’s birth, his outstanding bravery, his ready amiability to one and all, his unique popularity, his extreme patience and sense of forgiveness, his unparalleled truthfulness are to be emphasised on the memory screen. Maharshi Valmiki then imprinted on the screen as to how Rama and Lakshmana duo had experienced the amusing as also auspicious acts in the pioneering company of Sage Vishvamitra as imprinted on his retina including Shurpanakha’s teaching a lesson, Mithila King Janaka’s announcement of Devi Sita’s swayamvara, Shiva Dhanush bhanga in an encounter with Parashu Rama and Shri Rama Samvada , detailings of weddings of Sita Rama and Urmila Lakshmana; Rama Rajyaabhisheka vighna, the villainous role of Kaikeyi, Rama Lakshmana Sita Vana Vaasa, Dasharatha shoka vilaapa followed by his death, the sorrow of the public, the devotion of Guha the boatman, the charioteer Sumanta's loyalty.

Maharshi Valmiki's trance continued: Shri Rama, Lakshmana and Devi Sita reaching Ganges- Bharadwaaja Muni darshana and as per his directive reaching Chitra Koota and enjoying the grandeur of its surroundings and building up a hutment for the threesome to live in-arrival of Bharata to meet them and requesting them to return back - performing the remainder obsequies of their departed father- Bharata's return with the 'Rama Paduka' on his head to keep it back on the 'Rajya Simhasana' with veneration- Bharata's stay at Nandigrana-Rama's trio move out to dandaka -aranya-Viraadha vadha- Sharabhangi Muni darshana- Suteekshana samaagama- Anasuya and Sita devi together for some time [Devi Anasuya the daughter of Kardama Muni and the wife of Atri Maharshi residing in their hermitage in the periphery of Chitrakuta- being the mother of Dattatreya as Tri Murtis sought to test her chastity but converted them as toddling babes, popular as Maha Pativratas like Ahalya, Draupadi, Sita, Tara, Mandodari, Anasuya and Sumati] Having heard the background of Devi Sita's life, Anasuya gifted a miraculous ointment which could maintain her beauty and paativratya for ever!] - Maharshi Agastya darshana as he gifted Vaishnava dhanush to Rama-confrontation with Surpanakha and Lakshmana's cutting off her ears and nose- Shri Rama's killing of Khara- Dushana- Trishira's killings by Rama- his killing of Maricha disguised as a golden deer desired by Devi Sita- avenging his sister Shurpanakha's act, Ravana asura disguised as a Muni forcibly abducts Devi Sita- Shri Rama's heart -pangs of due to Devi viyoga- Jatayu vadha by Ravana asura- Rama Lakshmana getting snared by Kabandha the headless demon and their killing of the demon-Rama Lakshmana thrilled by the surroundings of Pampa sarovara- Shabari blessed by Shri Rama- the latter's severe pangs of Devi Sita Viyoga- meeting Hanuman at the foothills of 'Gandhamaadana' mount and along with Hanuman escorted to the exiled Vaanara King, Sugreeva- firming up friendship with Sugreeva-Baali Sugreeva battle- Rama's killing Baali- Sugreeva regained the Kingship- Devi Tara the widow of Baali cries away and Rama assuaging her sorrow- 'sharatkaala' interrurnam months put a stop of Sugreeva's search for Devi Sita's whereabouts- Sugreeva 'pratijna' or swearing for 'Sita anveshana' or her whereabouts and his extensive for her- the blind Kite Sampati, the brother of Jatayu, with inner vision bestowed by Surya Deva, finally makes a break through of pointing out at Lanka the other side of the ocean shores under King Ravana's rule-Hanuman despatched to Lanka with Rama's golden ring to convince Devi Sita in exile- Hanuman seeks cross the ocean- Sumudra Deva warns Hanuman about 'Minaaki' who would rise up to halt but to be warned by Hanuman, Raakshasi 'Simhini' the shadow detector as Hanuman was flying he killed by him and ' Trikuta' mounttain the indicator of Lanka. Hanuman clearly followed the indicators by Samudra and entered the kingdom of Ravana's Lanka at midnight time. Being lonely he pondered over the next step as he peeped in the palace of Ravana who was enjoying liquor and then waited for the day break assuming a mini monkey form in the Ashoka Vatika and having spotted Devi Sita brooding with successive cryings when he saw Ravana visiting her too as she was surrounded by female rakshasis headed by Trijata. On the exit of Ravana, Hanuman sneaked in and having assumed his normal form approached Devi Sita with prostrations and gave his introduction as the devout follower as a Rama Bhakta. To convince Devi Sita, he handed over Lord Shri Rama's finger ring of gold- in return she gave her 'choodaamani'. Thereafter Hanuman resorted to violent deasstruction of Lanka's capital city helter-skelter as the army of Lanka was annihilated and the survivals fled away. He then purposively surrendered by himself so that he would be taken away to the King Ravana who was seated the royal court. In the court, Hanuman thundered and with his tail elongated and got lit up by the Ravana sena burnt off all over the city regions creating a huge scare of the Lanka Capital. There after, Hanuman crossed back the ocean, participated in a revelling party to the waiting co-monkey comrades in the Madhuvan, approached Shri Rama and concealed about the welfare of Devi Sita and gave back her 'choodamani' the hair ornament as a memoir, made preparations for travel to Lanka, Rama's interaction with Samudra Deva, Nala the architect constructs a setu bridge across the Sea to let the Vanara Sena and the Selves walk over, overnight surrounding by Rama Sena around Lanka, Vibhishana- Shri Rama 'maitri', Vibhishana giving hints of killing Ravana, Rama's killing of the massive Kumbhakarna, killing of Meghanatha the son of Ravana, Ravana Vinaasha, Devi Sita's final relief, Vibhishana pattaabhisheka at Lanka, Rama's pushpaka vimana yatra with Sita-Lakshmana-Hanuman and Vibhishana and the full entourage to Ayodhya, Bharata's warm reception, Shri Rama - Devi Sita pattaabhisheka celebrations, warm send off to vanara sena, Devi Sita 'tyaaga' to forests on false accusations by a washerman in Ayodhya, her subsequent happenings and the future episodes were picturesquely described by the outstanding Valmiki Maharshi of eternal fame.

Consequent on King Dasharatha's return from Mithila after the glorious weddings of Shri Rama with Devi Sita as wells as of Lakshmana-Bharata- Shatrughnas with Devis Urmila-Mandaveeka and Shutakeeri, and settling back at Ayodhya, Rama had increasingly taken over the responsibilities of the kingdom ably assisted by Lakshmana. Bharata Satrugnas left for their residence of maternal uncle Yudhajita the King of Ashvayutha, as the latter was extremely fond of the Princes. King Dasharatha in course of time felt the absence of Bharata Shatughnas who too had turned out to be valiant warriors of virtue. Indeed he felt like a four armed Vishnu himself with two arms were away. At the same time, he had always felt that Shri Rama was like Maha Vishnu Himself; indeed. Was he not destined to show up on Earth to destroy the worst symbol of Viciousness named Ravanaasura and revive Dharma and Nyaya! Equally blissful was the prime Queen Devi Koushalya just as Devi Aditi was fond of Indra Himself! Truly, Shri Rama was not only exemplary with graceful and radiant body build but an unparalleled intrepidity. He was ever peaceful in his countenance and sweet in his voice; even when he heard harsh voices, he would reply smilingly, softly yet firmly. He would always reciprocate goodness to the helpful but never carry vengeance to the unhelpful, yet never hesitate to punish the evil. As per his Kshaatriya Dharma, he had always been kind, magnanimous, and providing safety to the needy thus being exemplary to his upbringing. While avoiding any thing inauspicious, his counsels and deeds were of what Brihaspati, the Deva Guru would be like. He was not only an erudite scholar and of convincing speech maker having digested the essence of veda-vedanga- yuddha dharmas and what was more a practitioner besides being a preacher appealing to the commoners and the intellectuals alike. In the context of the finesse of 'Astra Vidya' he excelled his father- since Brahmarshi Vishvamitra trained him thoroughly vide Bala Kanda. Shri Rama was an outstanding practitioner of the 'chatushta purusha paramarthas' of Dharma-Artha-Kaama-Mokshas keeping in view the prevailing social conditions. He had been seeking to act upon the counsels of Gurus in which he had retained trust and devotion and ever anchored to the traditional precepts of proven peripheries. Besides having been bestowed with such practical and virtuous decisiveness, Shri Rama was a known linguist, an outstanding expert of fine arts of music-dance-painting -sculpture - handicrafts and also of sports, entertainment, and group activities . Anasūyo jitakrodho na dṛpto na ca matsarī, na cāvamantā bhūtānām na ca kālavaśānugah/ evaṁ śraiṣṭhair guṇair yuktaḥ prajānām pārvīvatmajah, sammatas triṣu lokeṣu vasudhāyāḥ kṣamāguṇaiḥ, buddhyā bṛhaspates tulyo vīryeṇāpi śacīpateḥ/ tathā sarvaprajākāntaiḥ prītisaṁjananaiḥ pituḥ, guṇair viruruce rāmo dīptaḥ sūrya ivāṁśubhiḥ/ Such is the glory of Rama devoid of any shortcoming of his multi sided magnificence but is replete with idealism worthy of commendation in trilokas. Just as Surya Deva is known for his splendour by his endless rays of brightness, Shri Rama is thus famed for his countless qualities of excellence. Tam evaṁvṛttasāmpannam apradhṛṣya parākramam, lokapālopanam nātham akāmayata medinī/ This type of a 'sadaachaara sampanna' or of qualities of excellence of conduct Shri Rama be decided to be the King of Earth! Indeed the enemies of this Illustrious Kingdom had already been concerned that such a perfectionist would be soon enough turn out as the potential King and this had by now crept into the psyche of the comity of kingdoms. Atha Raagino babhuvaiva vriddhasya chirajeevinah, preetereshaa katham Rama

Raja syaanmayi jeevati/King Dasharatha had thus been planning and cogitating seriously that Shri Rama be blessed to take over as Yuva Raja the ‘primo geniture’ soon. In fact, his mind had been churning his mind as to how soon that this might fructify as Shri Rama had already become mature for the elevated status just as black clouds had hovered over the sky and that the ripe time had arrived for the monsoon to break any time! Mahīm aham imām kṛtsnām adhiṣṭhantam ātmajam, anena vayasā dṛṣṭvā yathā svargam avāpnuyām/ tam samīkṣya mahārājo yuktam samuditair guṇaiḥ, niścītya sacivaiḥ sārddham yuvarājam amanyata/King Dasharatha longed to visualize soon a situation when Shri Rama should soon become a chakravarti of the entire earth and in course of time he might leave for swarga with that glory to be fulfilled. Thus King Dasharatha’s decision impelled his ministers and close associates in the Royal Court to be convened to finalise the arrangements. At the same time, in his mind there were lurking fears and expressed them too to the closed session of ministers and others. Eventually, King Dasharatha instructed that all the required arrangements for the big event be made publicly. He convened a conclave of the contemporary Kings and Ministers to make the significant announcement, along with the very important personalities of his and other kingdoms too. However he had somehow not been able to intimate the great news to King Kaikeya - besides Bharata Shatrughnas- and to Mithila Kings as he was very confident that both the Kings would get excited about the most significant development any way!

King Dasharatha initiated the proceedings of the Maha Sabha in his thunderous voice in high and excited voice addressing the invitees stating that in the true traditions of Ikshavaku Vamsha, the administration in his kingdom had been as per the footprints of dharma and nyaaya and for the welfare of all the sections of the Society. Sincere endeavors had been made to safeguard the rightful demands of the public and to make this Kingdom a star in the comity of the kingdoms. Even as the announcement was thus made, the audience including the co-kings and the learned responded positively and unanimously and readily congratulated King Dasharatha with clappings and loud cheers. One after another in the audience especially the Kings and also the learned panditas showered encomiums on Shri Rama- his popularity, his energy, his level of balance of thinking, ability to express his conviction and skilful aptitude to enforce the rules. They said: rāmaḥ satpuruṣo loke satyadharmaparāyaṇaḥ, dharmajñāḥ satyasamḥsaś ca śīlavān anasūyakaḥ/ kṣāntaḥ sāntvayitā ślakṣṇaḥ kṛtajñō vijitendriyaḥ, mṛduś ca sthiracittaś ca sadā bhavyo 'nasūyakaḥ/ In this entire 'samsara' Rama should be an ideal satya vaadi- satya parayana - satpuruṣa and 'saakshaat' or ever-ready epitome of exemplariness. He is the singular provider of contentment and calmness to all Beings like Chandra and at the sametime of the quality of forgiving one's shortages of lapses like Mother Earth. He is like Brihaspati in 'buddhi' or mental maturity and knowledge, and in valour and invincibility like Devendra himself. Shri Rama is known as a dharmagjna, satya pratigjna, sheela vaan, deena duhkha saantvana, mridu bhaashi, kritagjna, jetendriya, komala svabhaava, sthira buddhi, kalyana kari, asuyaa rahita, satya vaadi. At the same time, he excels in 'dhanurvidya' far above the levels of devas-asuraas, manushyas. Gandharvecha bhuvi shreshtho babhuva Bharataagraja/ Bharataagraja Shri Rama is also an expert of 'gandharva veda' or of sangeeta shastra whom none on earth could compete with him.

[Vishleshana on Gandharva Veda: In the Swara Shastra, the Swara of Archika is related to Rig Veda, 'Gaandhik' is to 'Gaadha' and 'Saamik' is to Sama Veda. A 'Swara' is according to 'Ruchas' (Hymns) and their variations, while in 'Gathas' or metered rhythmic verses Sama Veda has 'Vyavadhaanas' or pauses. The Yajna stotras, karanas and Mantras are required to be pronounced as per Swaras; otherwise they turn out to be ‘Viruddha Swaras’. In the entire ‘Vangmaya’ Shastra (Vocabulary), pronunciation originates from ‘Vakshasthala’ (chest), ‘Kantha’ (throat) and ‘Mastaka’(head); from the chest emerges the low level sounds normally resorted to morning singing, from the Kantha emerge the medium and very broad variety of sounds and from Mastaka are emanated high pitch sounds and their variations of volume. The Sapta Swaras-Sa, Ri, Ga, Ma, Pa, Da, and Ni-are ‘Prathama’ (Shadaja), ‘Dwitiya’ (Rishabha), ‘Tritiya’ (Gandhara), ‘Chaturtha’ (Madhyama), ‘Mandra’ (Panchama), ‘Krushtha’ (Dhaivata) and ‘Atiswara’ (Nishadha). Shadaja-Sa- stands for ‘Sagar’ (Sea) with peacock as the representative bird, ‘Muladhara’ (the base of the spine) as the Chakra (body part) and the ruling Deity as Ganapati. Rishabha Re-means bull representing the bird Skylark, ‘Swadhishtana’ or genital as the Chakra and the ruling Deity is Agni. Gandhara Swara ‘Ga’ means Gagan or Sky with goat as the representative animal, ‘Manipura’ (solar plexus/ naval) as the Chakra and Rudra is the concerned Deity. Madhyama-Ma-means the Middle, represented by the bird dove, Anahata (heart) being the relevant body part and Vishnu as the Ruler concerned. Panchama-Pa-means the fifth, represented by nightingale and ‘Vishuddha’ (throat) as the relevant body part and the Ruling Deity is Sage Narada. The Swara titled Dhaivata-Dha- means Dharti or Earth, the representative animal being horse, the relevant Chakra being ‘Aajna’ or the third eye and the Ruler being Sada Shiva. The Seventh Swara viz. Nishada-Ni- meaning Hunter and standing for the animal Elephant, has ‘Sahasrara’ (the crown of the head) as the body part, the Ruler being Surya as the Deity. Besides the Swaras, Shadaja, Madhyama and Gandhara are known as three ‘Graamaas’ (gamut or scale in music). Those who render ‘Saama Gana’ approve twenty graamas in Madhyama Swara, fourteen in Shadaja and fifteen in Gandhara. Source : Narada Purana.]

In the context of Dharma and Artha of the Purushardhas, Shri Rama had excellent schooling by Veda Panditas; while in the context of security of villages and cities, his excellence along with Lakshmana was such that any detail of an issue had ever been ignored! As and when Rama Lakshmanas return from major battles with thumping success to their kingdom, they get anxious to learn of the welfare of the citizens, be they panditas or agnihotris, or house wives, servants and so on. Even in normal conditions, when Rama Lakshmanas meet other’s parents they enquire of the offspring, so also the teachers about their students, kashatriyas about their war materials, and the staff about the treatment from their bosses and so on. Whenever any person faced a tragedy or problem, the famed brothers meet them and readily offer any kind of assistance for ready compliance. The brothers were indeed satyavaadis, maha dhanurdharas, jitendriyas and vriddha jana sevakas. Whenever Shri Rama would initiate conversation with others, he would smile foremost heartily; he would endear, befriend and converse only auspiciousness and never indulge in negativities. Being arrestingly handsome with sparkling eyes, he had been like Vishnu himself. In his conversational style, he was like Brihaspati himself. Ramo lokabhiraamoyam shourya veerya paraakramaihi, prajapaalana samyukto na raagopahatendriyah/ As he could endear and provide contentment to all the lokaas arising from his invincibility and undefinable bravery of righteousness and administrative excellence, neither traces of his sensuousness nor any of his faulty conduct could ever dare him from his decisive steadfastness. Let alone the earthly matters but of three lokaas too, He is the singularmost personality who could save and safeguard the universe. But his anger against injustice and egoitism could never ever be wasted as a futility. What ever the age old Scriptures prescribed, no penalty would be small that justifies vindication. Tameva guna sampannam Raamam satyaparaakramam, lokapaalopamam naadhamakaayata medini/ It is that type of ‘Sarvaguna sampanna’, ‘sarvalokapaalaka samaana', 'satya paraakrama' Shri Rama alone would be the most befitting Prithvi palaka indeed. It is that singular most Rama who is needed by Davaasura, manushya, gandharvaas as the favorite King of earth. Most particularly, Ayodhya's older and younger generation especially the feminine community are head over heels passionate to welcome HIM alone as their next King. Rāmam indīvaraśyāmam sarvaśatrunibarhaṇam, paśyāmo yauvarājyasthaṁ tava rājottamātmajam/ taṁ devadevopamam ātmajam te; sarvasya lokasya hite niviṣṭam, hitāya naḥ kṣipram udārajuṣṭam; mudābhīṣektuṁ varada tvam arhasi/ King Dasharatha! It is He who has the graceful blue vision luster, 'shatrusamhara samartha', your eldest son of unparalleled glory that one and all would look forward to be anointed as the celebrated Yuva Raja soon.

King Dasharatha was overjoyed with the highly enthusiastic and spontaneous response from the ‘maha sabha’ ranging from co kings to vidvans and commoners. Then Maharshis Vasishtha and Vamadeva expressed that the most suited month for the Yuva Rajaabhisheka of Shri Rama be in Chaitra Month when there would be greenery all around in the Nature. As there was considerable free flow of ideas and plans as to what all be done at the joyous time, King Dasharatha asked Vasishtha Maharshi: abhishakaaya Raamasya yat karma saparicchhadam, tadadya Bhagavan sarvamaagjnaapayitumarhasi/ Vasishtha then announced to the royal staff that procurement be initiated with gold and precious jewels, all kinds of oushadhis, white flower garlands, honey and ghee, new clothings of enormous variety, chariots, asthras-shastras, recruitment of chaturanaga sena, excellent elephants, vyanjanas made of cow tails, dhvajas, white umberllas, all the relevant paraphernaliya’s for agni karyas, bright ‘kalashas’ of varying sizes, tiger skin ‘aasanaas’ - all to be supplied to the Maha Raja’s agni shaala forthwith. Then ‘antahpura saamagri’ to the entire Ayodhya be supplied including garlands of fresh flowers of fragrance, and door ornamentation of chandana-dhupa-sugandhas. Then varied types of chitraanna, dadhi anna, etc. for lakhs of citizens, apart from morning ‘satkaara’s to vedic brahmanas along with ample quantities of milk, curd, and dakshinas be arranged. There should be ‘swasti vachanas’ be before sunrise and arrangements be made of brahmanas and their welfare be arranged. All over Ayodhya there should be festivities with colourful flags, kites on the sky, group dances, and musical instrumentation, especially in the fore grounds of the Royal Court. The festivities should span all over in the temples, conjunctions of four roads, and street ends. There should be provisions for mini-meals and cool drink facilities at market places and a variety of gifts too signifying Shri Rama’s elevation. May royal soldiers donned with battle dresses and long swords and headgears step in and out of the fore yards of the royal court to liven up the hearts of the citizens with enthusiasm and fanning up their spirits. Maharshis Vasishtha and Vamadevas thus passed on instructions to the respective departmental heads for immediate compliance. Having waited for a few hours for the compliance of the instructions and on receipt of feed back, Vasishtha approached King Dasharatha and reported compliance of big and minute actions and conveyed readiness for the much awaited Shri Rama YuvaRaja Pattaabhisheka. The King then called for Sumantra the Royal Charioteer to report to Shri Rama and bring him to the Raja Bhavan. There the Kings of all directions were assembled where the King was seated like Lord Indra amid Marud ganas. As Rama made an entry in the court yard, King Dasharatha was happy to receive him even as the former touched the feet of the father as the latter embraced Rama; they proceeded as followed by Sumanta. It appeared there was a flash of sustained radiance as a King of Elephant with poise and grace was walking with the countenance of full moon. There was a whiff of air of congeniality as Rama glanced the dignitaries seated all around. King Dasharatha was so happy with the way Rama was dressed up and looked around that the onlooker co Kings were truly thrilled to vision the ideal father-son duo of heavenly affinity. Then King Dasharatha addressed Shri Rama as though Kashyapa Maharshi addressed Indra as follows: Jyēṣṭhāyām asi me patnyām sadṛśyām sadṛśaḥ sutaḥ, utpannas tvam guṇaśreṣṭho mama rāmātmajaḥ priyaḥ/ tvayā yataḥ prajāś cemāḥ svaguṇair anurañjitāḥ, tasmāt tvam puṣyayogena yauvarājyam avāpnuhi/ kāmataḥ tvam prakṛtyaiva vinīto guṇavān asi, guṇavaty api tu snehāt putra vakṣyāmi te hitam/ bhūyo vinayam āsthāya bhava nityam jīvendriyaḥ, kāmakrodhasamutthāni tyajethā vyasanāni ca/ My dear son, Shri Rama, you being my eldest son from the Prime Queen Koushalya, you happen to be of the most eligible with qualities of outstanding excellence endearing the public and of pride of co Kings, it has been universally approved to become the Yuva Raja of the Kingdom of Ayodhya at Pushya Nakshatra . My sincere counsel to you would be to upkeep and enrich the proven and popular age old principles of Ikshvaku Vamsha of lineage of Kings as a ‘Jitendriya’ being a controller of ‘kama krodha lobha moha mada matsaras’. You should take into account of ‘Pratyaksha- Paroksha Nyaya’ or justice keeping in view the ready and hidden evidences. You must always keep in humor and excellent affinity with Mantris and Senapatis or Ministers and Heads of Army. Hence my dear son, keep up your equanimity and sharpness of decision making as of an ideal king. In reference to fair sex, keep them always in excellent humor with grace and lenience by gifting them away with jewellery and gold ornaments at all possible opportunities of public or in small groups. As King Dashratha had counselled Shri Rama this in a confernece, the co Kings departed happily, stalwarts of public left too in rejoicement and exultation.

King Dasharatha convened a meeting with his ministers and programmed the Yuvaraja Pattaabhishekha on the next day as that would coincide with the 'pushyami nakshatra'. The over enthusiastic King instructed Sumantra despatched for Rama to arrive as the latter wondered why was the father was asking for him once again so soon. Rama was ushered in and prostrated to the father who embraced Rama with great affection; then Dasharatha stated that he had become old and during his life time, he had countless tasks of virtue including maha yagnas, had conquered several battles, established glory, amassed experience and blessings from Deva- Rishi- Pitru-Brahmana- Prajas alike. He continued further stating that there could be no further ambition for him except to make him the Yuva Raja. Api cādyāśubhān rāma svapnān paśyāmi dāruṇānsanirghātā maholkās ca patantīha mahāsvanāḥ/ avaṣṭabdam̐ ca me rāma nakṣatram̐ dāruṇair grahaiḥ, āvedayanti daivajñāḥ sūryāṅgārakarāhubhiḥ/ prāyeṇa hi nimittānām īdṛśānām samudbhava, rājā vā mṛtyum āpnoti ghorām vāpadam̐ ṛcchatī/ My son! Of late, I have been experiencing bad dreams in the nights and even during day times have been witnessing fearful sounds as though there have been frequent falls of meteors. These inauspicious prognostics are indicative that my end of life ought to be round the corner. This indeed is the reason why that I should desire to hasten the process of making you the heir apparent as early as possible. To day, Moon is about to exit Punarvasu nakshatra very soon and enter Pushya nakshatra and hence my great anxiety to take over the position of 'Yuva Rajatva', come what may! To night, control your body senses and along with Devi Sita too practise 'brahmacharya' and 'upavasa', do sleep on a ground mat. This type of precaution would be called for necessarily to ensure that all should pass through well auspiciously. King Dasharatha further stated that even Bharata and Shatrughna were away to their maternal king, the 'abhisheka karya' ought not to be postponed but be completed as planned. Indeed there was no doubt at all that Bharata would readily be happy and consent to Rama's 'pattabhishekha' as he had been a true and ardent follower of Rama's foot steps being a dharmatma, daya swarupa, and jitendriya being truly self restrained and ever fond of Rama. Ragunandana! No doubt even the mentality of self controlled person be wavery at times but certainly not so in respect of Bharata Kumara! Having heard what all had been stated by his father, Shri Rama took leave of the father with admiration and veneration and returned back to his chamber. But since Devi Sita left for his mother Devi Koushalya, he approached the latter's chamber and found that his mother was in meditation with prayers for the auspicious time of Rama's 'abhisheka' should approach soon and without any remote issue whatsoever. On hearing the happy news of Devi Sumitra and Lakshman were excited with excitement and reached Devi Koushalya even as Devi Sita too reached there. That was precisely the time when Koushalya opened her eyes from her meditation, the entirety of Rama-Sita-Sumitra-and Lakshmana were there altogether. Shri Rama prostrated to his mother and stated: Mother! Father has now instructed me to get ready for the 'yuva rajyabhisheka' tomorrow and further gave certain duties tonight to me and Sita and your blessings are sought to let us get ready. As Rama made the statement, the mother was moved with joyful tears and in a bass tone said : Vatsa rāma ciraṁ jīva hatās te paripanthinaḥ, jñātīn me tvam̐ śriyā yuktaḥ sumitrāyās ca nandaya/ kalyāṇe bata nakṣatre mayi jāto 'si putraka, yena tvayā daśaratho guṇair ārādhitāḥ pitā/ amogham̐ bata me kṣāntam̐ puruṣe puṣkarekṣaṇe, yeyam̐ ikṣvākurājyaśrīḥ putra tvāṁ samśrayiṣyati/ My beloved son! As Shri Rama was blessed by Devi Koushalya, Shri Rama held both his hands together in endearing effacement and smiled at Lakshmana standing next to both the illustrious mother Devi Sumitra. Rama said: Lakṣmaṇemām̐ mayā sārdham̐ praśādhi tvam̐ vasum̐dharām, dvitīyaṁ me 'ntarātmānaṁ tvāṁ iyaṁ śrīr upasthitā/ saumitre bhuṅkṣva bhogāṁs tvam̐ iṣṭān rājyaphalāni ca, jīvitam̐ ca hi rājyaṁ ca tvadartham̐ abhikāmaye/ Dear Lakshmana! As Shri Rama's Yuva Raja Pattabhisheka was scheduled on the following day, King Dasharatha requested Vasishtha Maharshi to let Rama perform 'Kalyana Siddhi Vighna Naashaka Upavasa Vrata'. Then Vasishtha along with veda panditas proceeded to Shri Rama Mandira. Shri Rama with great devotion and courtesy received the Maharshi along with the group of Panditas. Vasishtha addressed Rama to emphasise that King Dasharatha was extremely fond of the famed son and had therefore decided to arrange for Rama and Devi Sita to observe 'upavasa' with seriousness. Prātas tvām abhiṣektā hi yauvarājye narādhipaḥ, pitā daśarathaḥ prītyā yayātiṁ nahuṣo yathā/ ity uktvā sa tadā rāmam upavāsam yatavratam, mantravat kārayām āsa vaidehyā sahitaṁ muniḥ/ tato yathāvad rāmeṇa sa rājño gurur arcitaḥ, abhyanuñjāpya kākutstham yayau rāmaniveśanāt/ Raghu nandana! Your father's serious desire is to let the vrata be performed impeccably in a manner that King Nahusha performed his son Yayati's Rajyabhisheka on the following morning. As the formal Puja was thus performed, Vasishtha and Panditas blessed Rama and Sita with most endearing compliments and left.

[Vishleshana on Kings Nahusha and Yayati:]

Nahusha who was in the lineage of Pururava and had the distinction of performing ninety nine Ashwamedha Yagnas and was nearly qualified to become Indra who should have executed hundred

Yagnas. Meanwhile there was a temporary vacancy of Indratwa since Indra fled away since he killed Vritrasura with the help of the Vajrayudha made out of Sage Dadhichis's backbone; Vritrasura who was a Brahmana by birth and Brahma Hatya Sin chased Indra. Brahma thus appointed Nahusha as temporary Indra. Nahusha who was originally a King of Great Virtue became arrogant and powermongering as he became Indra and claimed all the privileges belonging to Indra like Vajrayudha, Iravata and even Indra's wife Sachi Devi. Yayati, the son of Nahusha was a famed Emperor who defeated all the Kings of the World and married Devayani the daughter of Asura Guru Shukracharya, besides Sharmishtha the daughter of Vishvaparma, a Rakshasa King. Indra was pleased to gift Yayati a Divine Chariot with seven powerful horses with which he traversed the world and divided his Empire into seven divisions to distribute it among five of his sons. A Maharshi gave a boon that if any of his sons could agree to exchange their youth to his old age then he could secure a fresh lease of youth. His eldest son Yadu from Devayani refused and so did others excepting Sharmishtha's son Puru who readily agreed. Yayati took over Puru's youth and enabled him travel around to unravel earthly pleasures for long. But finally returned discovering that the ephemeral joys of the world were endless like Agni in a Homa kunda assuming larger and larger proportions as long as ghee is served and no human would be satisfied with food, gold, ornaments or women. By so realising, he returned his youth to Puru and took to Vanaprastha or retirement.]

As Rama and Sita returned to their palace, there were highly excited crowds of men and women with rapturous joy; in fact, all the streets, gardens, temples and market places of the city of Ayodhya were jam packed with overflowing crowds of unimaginable exhilaration and thrill. All the houses were decorated with tall and flying flags and decorations with an all pervading festive atmosphere of jubilation and unending excitement like the roaring sounds of ocean waves. Men, women and children, be they rich or otherwise were awake all through the dusk and night awaiting the hours of dawn. Ayodhya's greatest festival was thus most sought after as the citizens were in a state of frenzy and unprecedented anticipation. Even as the first rays of Surya Deva became visible on the horizon, Maharshi Vasishtha arrived at the Palace of King Dasharatha and both met as though Deva Guru Brihaspati and Lord Mahendra had. As the King stood up from his glittering and bejewelled throne, he smilingly uttered to the Maharshi : is everything ready! And the Maharshi responded with suppressed glee: 'Yes!' Then like a Lion the King entering its massive den entered his Interior Hall while the steps were laced up with beautifully dressed up girls of mini-smiles like Apsaras were lined up on the steps of Indra Sabha!

Shri Rama had then taken bath and along with ‘sahadharma chaarini’ initiated ‘Shri Ranganadha Puja’. He kept the ‘havishya patra’ or the vessel of offering cooked rice on his head and with bent head and offered the same to ‘Homaagni’ to appease Sheshashaayi Narayana dutifully. [Padma Purana explains that this Idol of Sheshashaayi Ranganadha was worshipped by generations of Kings in Ayodhya and after the killing of Ravanaśura when finally Shri Rama Pattabhisheka was celebrated, Rama gifted this idol to Vibheeshana and that very idol subsequently travelled to Shri Ranganadha Kshetra] Sheṣam ca haviṣas tasya prāśyāśāsyātmanah priyam, dhyāyan nārāyaṇam devam svāstīrṇe kuśasaṃstare/ vāgyataḥ saha vaidehyā bhūtvā niyatamānasah, śrīmaty āyatane viṣṇoḥ śiṣye naravarātmajah/ The remainder of the ‘havishanna’ offered to Agni thus, Rama and Sita ate the ‘praasada’ and with observing complete silence and self control slept off in the Mandira on a mat with prayers to Maha Vishnu. Past three ‘yaamas’ of the night, the fourth part of the night got up from the mat and instructed the servants to initiate the decoration of the ‘Sabha Mandapa’. On hearing the auspicious music of the soft instruments, Shri Rama then took his bath and performed ‘Sandhya Vandana’ Gayatri with extreme concentration. Thereafter he donned a shining dress and prayed to ‘Madhusudana’ while select groups of ‘Brahmanottamas’ initiated ‘swasti vaachanaas’. The ‘punyahvachana ghosha’ of the raised resonance then got resounded whereafter the sounds of innumerable ‘vaadyas’ got reverberated the length and breadth of Ayodhya. The distant citizens of Ayodhya had thus come to realise that the celebrations of ‘Sita Rama Upavaasa Vrata’ had got initiated. Then the sky high lofty tower tops of temples, city squares, lanes and byelanes, tall tree tops, market places, individual shops and establishments, were all profusely decorated with flags in typically competitive spirit of exhibitions. Groups of street dancers, musical instrumentalists ranging from flutes to high sounded drums, exclusive singers of excellence to group singings were attracting the ready attractions of various audiences. All the individual houses were in competitive spirit in decorating their own houses, doors, windows with flags and multi-colour combinations. Fresh flowers, natural and artificial fragrances and odours readily ushered in celestial atmosphere all over. Detailed discussions among boys and girls, youth and elderly, men and women, the learned and the ignorant, the haves and have-nots, in groups or mutual had the singular topic of the ‘Patthabhisheka’ only. Most of the citizens of Ayodhya having anticipated the night fall ahead had made elaborate arrangements of lighting the streets, roads, market places, temples, tree tops, and individual houses. There were extensive discussions in the street corners, market places, temples and gatherings about the magnificence and munificence of the King Dasharatha who had decided to name the successor who too was the real chip off the old timber of the outstanding Ikshvaaku Vamsha! The excerpts of the conversations of the public were as follows: Aho

The great and popular most King Dasharatha had finally decided to retire after long innings of his gloried life in favor of an equally notable son of proven worth of bravery, virtue and assured safety and welfare to us all. Surely, Rama ought to shine as a person of integrity and wellbeing to us all most certainly. He had proven himself as a calm, composed, knowledgeable, practical, personality who would surely look after us as with his own brothers!' Tatas tad indrakṣayasam̐nibhaṁ puram; didṛkṣubhir jānapadair upāgataiḥ, samantataḥ sasvanam ākulaṁ babhau; samudrayādobhir ivārṇavodakam/ Thus to have the unique opportunity of witnessing Ramaabhisheka would be comparable to what 'Indrabhisheka' to attend to which might be comparable to Maha Sagara's various species like gigantic whales, crocodiles, huge and small fishes!

Of the three queens of King Dasharatha, Devi Kaikeyi was the youngest. She had an old servant maid named Manthara whose antecedents were mysterious; she was used to always cling to the queen. None indeed ever aware about Manthara's birth, her parentage details, place of origin and her erstwhile whatabouts. The night before the Rama Rajyabhisheka, Devi Kaikeyi was enjoying moon shine on the palace top and noticed that there was lot of commotion on the streets which were all lit up and noisy with crowds of men-women-children. There were high flying flags, agog with sounds of music and dances; shouts and loud cheers all around; temple tops were decorated with colourful flags, veda pathanas too were heard again and again, and there appeared several crowds dancing away too. Then she turned her view to the top of Rama's residing palace and found that it was distinguished with garlands of lights atop with bright flags wavering away. She felt delighted and remarked to Mandhara: Mandhara! Tell me how happy I am that Shri Rama patthabhisheka is due now tomorrow morning. Devi Kousalya must now be busy distributing gifts to select ladies as the wives of ministers, heads of army and leading persons of the society. Tell me how joyous and blissful that my dear husband be feeling right now as the most auspicious task round the corner; indeed he ought to be the most excited and busy personality ever! Kubje! Are you aware that tomorrow early morning Maha Raja Dasharatha should be performing the most auspicious deed as the pushya nakshatra would arrive when Shri Rama the most endearing, flawless, fearless and singular person of virtue and fame should be the Yuva Raja of this glorious empire! Such was the extraordinary excitement expressed by Kaikeyi. Dhātryās tu vacanam śrutvā kubjā kṣipram amarṣitā, kailāsa śikharākārāt prāsādād avarohata/ sā dahyamānā kopena mantharā pāpadarśinī, śayānām etya kaikeyīm idam vacanam abravīt/ As Kaikeyi's exciting expressions were thus heard, Mandhara's inner self was ignited so much as ghee was poured on dry wooden sticks and as though she was thrown down from the high Kailasa mountain top down with a steep fall on the ground. Kaikeyi understood Mandhara's disapproval and negative reaction. Uttiṣṭha mūdhe kim śeṣe bhayaṁ tvām abhivartate, upapluta - mahaughena kim ātmānam na budhyase/ aniṣṭe subhagākāre saubhāgyena vikatthase, calam hi tava saubhāgyam nadyaḥ srota ivoṣṇage/ Then Mandhara shouted on Kaikeyi with pent up anger! 'You foolish woman, get up from slumber to awakeness! I am shuddered of a heavy burden about to fall on you as a mountain is about to break against you and you do not realise the calamities ahead of you. Your beloved husband comes and makes you feel that he is paving to you a path of roses for you owing to your ignorance and taking advantage of your innocence and stupidity! You hardly realise the mischievous and back side motives and well planned negativities to be faced by you ahead! Just as running waters tend to thin down the flows in summer, your fortunes too would soon get dried up as the momentary opportunity on hand once lost would disappear for ever.' Kaikeyi was taken aback with the comments made by Mandhara. She reproached Mandhara for her inauspicious blabberings and shouted on her that she was not in her senses while expressings such ridiculous feelings of jealousy and uncalled for chatter of narrow mindedness. Kaikeyi further said that Mandhara had all along been a skilful thinker and talker but today she had betrayed her mischievous and harmfully hidden inner psyche. But Mandhara continued with her slow poisonous conversation and evil mindedness: Akshemaṁ sumahad devi pravṛttam tvadvinaśanam, rāmaṁ daśaratho rājā yauvarājye 'bhiṣekṣyati/ sāsmi agādhe bhaye magnā duḥkhaśokasamanvitā, dahyamānānaleneva tvaddhitārtham ihāgatā/ tava duḥkhena kaikeyi mama duḥkham mahad bhavet, tvadvṛddhau mama vṛddhiś ca bhaved atra na saṁśayaḥ/ Devi! the terminal point of your welfare is about to be reached and misfortune could never be reversed. Tomorrow King Dasharatha is poised to make Rama the Yuva Raja. Having realised this, I am totally depressed and disgusted with this development and am drowned in fathomless and fearful ocean of sorrow and hence have arrived in hurry to prevent this catastrophe and thwart the mischief being played on you. When you are about to face a calamity, I too would have to drown into it and have thus made a timely intervention possible. Devi! You were born and brought up in a royal family and absorbed queenly features but how are you ignoring the true characteristics and upbringing of a queen! Dharmavādī śaṭho bhartā ślakṣṇavādī ca dāruṇaḥ, śuddhabhāve na jānīṣe tenaivam atisaṁdhitā/ upasthitam payuñjānas tvayi sāntvam

Your husband looks innocent but is a schemy and calculated father with little consideration for your well being. He takes full advantage of your innocence and immaturity of mind and is openly favouring Koushalya and her everlasting benefit by making Rama as the next king. His vily mentality is such that he had very conveniently despatched Bharata to your brother's kingdom and is planning for the coronation of Rama peacefully! Shatruḥ patipravādena mātrevā hitakāmyayā, āśviṣa ivāṅkena bāle paridhṛtas tvayā/ yathā hi kuryāt sarpo vā śatrur vā pratyupekṣitaḥ, rājñā daśarathenādyā saputrā tvaṁ tathā kṛtā/ pāpenānṛtasantvena bāle nityaṁ sukhocite, rāmaṁ sthāpayatā rājye sānubandhā hatā hy asi/ Oh innocent! As a mother brings up a son with care and spontaneous affection, you too have so far treated Dasharatha likewise; [the well known adage states : Karyeshu dasi, Karaneshu manthri; Bhojeshu mata, Shayaneshu rambha; Kshamayeshu dharithri, Roopeshu lakshmi; Satkarma yukta, Kuladharmā patni/ An ideal wife should be like a loyal maid for service; an intelligent adviser; a mother like with affection while feeding food; a romantic- proactive and comforting woman like a damsel in bed; a woman of beauty, charm and richness like Goddess Lakshmi Herself with dedication and humility; and above all be ever forgiving with compassion and ready understanding like Bhudevi Herself!] But unfortunately your husband Dashatratha has actually turned out to be an ingratitude enemy of yours! This is like a situation of an innocent and well meaning person takes a vicious serpent on the lap and similarly you have invited your husband into bed but he would naturally bite you poisonously with least consideration! Innocent Kaikeyi you! You do deserve everlasting fortune as a queen now and Queen Mother as long as you long you survive! Sā prāptakālāṁ kaikeyi kṣiprāṁ kuru hitaṁ tava, trāyasva putram ātmānaṁ mām ca vismayadarśane/ Kaikeya Raja Kumari! You are staring at me with shock and impulsiveness this harangue of mine but now come back to your senses and straighten your action plan at least now and save yourself and your dear son from perpetual slavery all through your life!' On hearing the wake up call of Manthara, Devi Kaikeyi left her bed with sudden spurt of energy and decisiveness of thought and action as though the full moon of sparkle smashed the black clouds on the starry night. With elevated self confidence and decisiveness, Devi Kaikeya gifted away to Manthara an invaluable gift of gold and stated: 'Manthare! You have now given me unusual strength of mind and purpose of resolve as I am ever grateful to you for awakening me from indifference and ignorance! Rāme vā bharate vāhaṁ viśeṣaṁ nopalakṣaye, tasmāt tuṣṭāsmi yad rājā rāmaṁ rājye 'bhiṣekṣyati/ Indeed, I find little distinction between Rama or Bhartata! Those who appreciate this fundamental identity should perform Rajyabhisheka to Bharata himself! Kaikeyi then assured a magnificent gift to Manthara soon after 'Bharataabhisheka'!

Instead of gratefully accepting the golden gift that Devi Kaikeyi given to her, Manthara threw it away with extreme anger and broke into tears and exclaimed: Aho! How naïve and childlike immature are you, Kaikeyi! Instead of open anguish and furious rage, you are placid as if nothing untoward had happened. Don't you realise that you are in a deep ditch and mess right now and on a high point of a volcanic rupture! I am indeed aghast at your stupidity! Arreh! Sapatni putrasya vriddhim mrityorivaagatam/ The son of a co wife is like 'saakshaat mrityu' or the open death itself! Don't you realise that both Rama and Bharata have the same and equal authority and that precisely why Rama is afraid of Bharata. This is why I am always sunk deep in sorrow and hence the plan of Rama to let Bharata to be out of this scenario now. Like Lakshmana is a follower of Rama, so is Shatrughna a true follower of Bharata. Bhamini! Therefore both Rama and Bharata have equal right over the kingship and that precisely how Rama cunningly planned everything accordingly. My deep fright and confirmed suspicion is that Rama being a clever 'pandita' of shastras, political acumen, and timely dutifulness to the King and Ministers had earned reputation and sidelined Bharata and thus worked himself towards the final objective of 'Yuvarajatva' by totally sidelining Bharata! Now once Rama upgrades himself as the prospective King, you will be totally subservient to Kousalya with folded hands for ever! However in the event of Bharata becomes the king, even the young and pretty lasses in the 'antahpura' or the innermost chamber of Sita Devi would cry away, let alone Devi Sita! Having heard all whatever Manthara sought to poison her mind, Kaikeyi still argued with Manthara: Dharmajño gurubhir dāntaḥ kṛtajñāḥ satyavāk śuciḥ, rāmo rājñāḥ suto jyeṣṭho yauvarājyam ato 'rhati/ bhrātṛn bhrtyāś ca dīrghāyuh pitṛvat pālayiṣyati, saṁtapyase katham kubje śrutvā rāmābhiṣecanam/ bharataś cāpi rāmasya dhruvaṁ varṣaśatāt param, pitṛpaitāmahaṁ rājyam avāpsyati naraṣabhaḥ/ Kubje! Shri Rama is a dharmajnata, gunavaan, jitendrtiya, even grateful, and ever truthful as the eldest son of King Dasharatha and is fully justified to become the Yuva Raja. He should indeed provide excellent administration to the kingdom and its subjects surely. After Rama, Bharata should indeed be the next king anyway. Mandhare! At this auspicious time, why are you getting excited with jealousy! No doubt, Bharata as my dear son would be very precious and wish him very well ahead; but on balance Rama would be dearer to me for his outstanding qualities. In fact, Rama serves me even more than even to his own mother! You should feel that if Rama secures kingship, Bharata too would have secured it as well, since Rama never made any distinction among his brothers. As Kaikeya was exhorting likewise, Manthara took long and vexatious breathing out of sheer helplessness. She stated in extreme desperation as follows: Anarthadarśinī maurkhyān nātmānam avabudhyase, śokavyasana - vistīrṇe majjantī duḥkhasāgare/ bhavitā rāghavo rājā rāghavasya ca yaḥ sutaḥ, rājavamśāt tu bharataḥ kaikeyi parihāsyate/ na hi rājñāḥ sutāḥ sarve rājye tiṣṭhanti bhāmini, sthāpyamāneṣu sarveṣu sumahān anayo bhavet/ tasmā jyeṣṭhe hi kaikeyi rājyatantrāṇi pārthivāḥ, sthāpayanty anavadyāṅgi gunavatsv itareṣv api/ Rani! Foolishly and most ignorantly, you keep on explaining to me by wheels within wheels as ‘charvita charvanam’, but never realise the impending reality. You are not still not realising the catastrophic ocean is facing you despite my repeated warnings. As soon as Rama secures the kingship, his sons would be authorised to claim it, but never ever Rama’s brother! How foolish and ignorant are you that Bharata could ever claim the kingship! Eventually, Bharata would be eliminated from the lineage of Kingship. Bhamini Kaikeyi! This is my final warning not to slip the situation out of hands for ever! As per the established law of kingship, the eldest son should secure the subsequent kingship and only if the elder son proves his inability for any reason of, say, bad character or inability to administer, then only the second in the line would become eligible ! Sāham tvadarthe samprāptā tvam tu mām nāvabudhyase, sapatnivṛddhau yā me tvam pradeyam dātum icchasi/ dhruvam tu bharataṁ rāmaḥ prāpya rājyam akaṇṭakam, deśāntaram nāyayitvā lokāntaram athāpi vā/ This indeed the reason why , stated Manthara that she had made the timely arrival to warn and bring forth the rules of kingship and the established concept of the lineage of kingship! She made a final warning that in the event of Rama securing the kingship, the latter would eventually banish Bharata on one excuse or another from the kingdom or even to ‘paraloka’! Bāla eva hi mātulyam bharato nāyitas tvayā, saṁnikarṣāc ca sauhārdaṁ jāyate sthāvareṣv api/ Even at this stage, did not Rama create convenient and innocuous situations to pack off Bharata Shatrughna to his maternal uncle’s kingdom as an excellent precautionary measure! This kind of mental framework is normally experienced and expected even in one’s childhood; after all would not a ‘lata’ or a plant climber and the tree embracing each other not betray similar features and qualities! If Bharata were to be here, he could have made a justified claim on one half of the Kingdom! Bharata was quietly packed off along with Shatrughna as though it would look like a normal pair like Rama and Lakshmana! Tasmā rājagṛhād eva vanam gacchatu te sutāḥ, etad dhi rocate mahyam bhṛśam cāpi hitam tava/ evam te jñātīpakṣasya śreyaś caiva bhaviṣyati, yadi ced bharato dharmāt pitryam rājyam avāpsyati/ sa te sukhocito bālo rāmasya saha jo ripuḥ, samṛdhārthasya naṣṭārtho jīviṣyati katham vaśe/ Hence the golden advice to you Kaikeyi! is that instead of proceeding further from the Raja Bhavan for the Rajyaabhiseka, let Rama proceed for ‘aranya vaasa’! This is the single and inevitable way to exit from the ongoing mess. Mind you, being the co queen’s son, Rama be always and forever deemed as your hardest and natural enemy ! How indeed could Bharata the most innocent be subservient to Rama all through his life! Therefore, save him from this impending danger and risk of his well being and his very life itself! This situation is similar to a lion occupying a forest and a deer like Bharata being chased until death; so save him. As Rama would keep on occupying oceans and mountains and earn worldwide glory, so then would Bharata become smaller and smaller in his stature to finally become a non entity, even if he could survive, if at all! Yadā hi rāmaḥ pṛthivīm avāpsyati; dhruvam pranaṣṭo bharato bhaviṣyati, ato hi saṁcintaya rājyam ātmaje; parasya cādyāiva vivāsa kāraṇam/ Beware and watch out finally as an ultimatum, let not Rama become bigger and bigger while Bharata be insignificant and miniscule increasingly by the days; before this golden opportunity is lost for ever and ever, make sure that Rama be packed off for vana vaasa right now..

As thus Manthara gradually ignited her inner feelings, Kaikeyi started breathing heavily and agitated. She said with firmness: Adya rāmam itaḥ kṣipram vanam prasthāpayāmy aham, yauvarājyena bharatam kṣipram evābhiṣecaye/ Kubje! I will soon despatch Rama to the forests and arrange for Bharata to secure the Kingdom. But, how this ambition to be materialised! Manthara replied in low voice secretively: if only you really do not mind my saying so, listen to me carefully: do recall that in the remote past, when your husband in his youthful days and when you were perhaps just married, you accompanied him by his royal chariot to attack an ‘asura’ named Shambara living in ‘dandakaranya’ far beyond the popular city named Vijayanta. Shambara was so cruel that villagers, cattle, and domestic beings were being killed mercilessly that he was a perpetual threat to them even in Dasharatha’s far precincts of his kingdom. Shambara used a chariot flag with a huge whale insignia and was a notorious ‘maayaavi’ of endless make beliefs who was the ill fame of even attacking Indra who himself was vexed attacking him several times. In the successive battles with the previous kings nearby, he was in the habit of eating off the hurt and wounded soldiers of those kings lying by the nights. In fact King Dasharatha too made several attempts to attack the Asura but out of frustration used to retreat several times. Dasharatha utilised all his skills of archery with ‘mantrik’ support but had to return without success. Having been equipped with new military and mantric skills, he returned back with unusual confidence of mantrik power, Dasharatha attacked the Asura when the newly wedded Kaikeyi assumed the role of a secondary chariotee, sitting pretty next to Dasharatha. The Mayavi Shambara proved not much of an opponent to the well toned up mantras of the skills of Dasharatha but made an all out attack which an unwary Dasharatha slipped up momentarily. It was at that split second, Kaikeyi as the copilot saved Dasharatha when he got swooned momentarily and saved the King who once again attacked the Asura with the newly acquired mantric skills and succeeded in finally exterminating him even as the co-rakshasas tried to run back but were all killed away. That was how, King Dasharatha was pleased and in fact saved his life by Kaikeyi. tatrāpi vikṣataḥ śāstraiḥ patis te rakṣitas tvayā, tuṣṭena tena dattau te dvau varau śubhadarśane/ sa tvayoktaḥ patir devi yadeccheyam tadā varau, grhṇīyām iti tat tena tathety uktaṁ mahātmanā, anabhijñā hy aham devi tvayaiva kathitaṁ purā/ tau varau yāca bhartāraṁ bharatasyābhiṣecanam, pravrajānam ca rāmasya tvam varṣāṇi caturdaśa/ As Dasharatha was at his wit’s end and was almost collapsing away, it was at that nick of time, Kaikeyi rescued and having felt extremely delighted and even grateful to her stated : Shubha darshini! I am happy and delighted to bestow two boons from me . Then Kaikeyi replied: Prana Natha! I would avail of these two boons at my convenience and the King approvingly stated : ‘tathaasthu’! Manthara thus reminded of this and stated: Devi! don’t you recall those two boons! I had always been reminding you but used to smile and ignore me. Now, this is indeed the most opportune time to utilise right now to receive these two boons and certainly reverse the exigency of Rama Pattabhishekha. The two boons be therefore demanded; one to perform Bharata’s Rajyabhisheka and another to instruct for Rama’s ‘aranya vaasa’ for fourteen years. Krodhāgāraṁ praviśyādya kruddhevāśvapateḥ sute, śeṣvānantarhitāyām tvam bhūmau malinavāsini, mā smainam pratyudīkṣethā mā cainam abhibhāṣathāḥ/ Mandhara then advised Kaikeyi to change to an ugly and uncouth dress with anger and short temper and enter the the distinct ‘chamber of extreme anger’ in her residence with disheveled hair with a grumpy manner, readily noticeable by the servant maids and security personnel. Then she might lie down on a mat on earth. As the word would get spread like lightning, the King would become aware and on his arrival, she should neither open her eyes nor utter one word even. The King could never ever see you upset and angry in that manner as he is most affectionate with you. He could never see you angry, much less tolerate you in this condition. He could never in his life sideline your wish. Therefore may your fortune and hope be sustained and fortified. He might offer you innumerable material enticements in exchange but never yield to them. Remind him of the boons that he gave you at the time of the battle with the asura and the boons bestowed to to you then and the demand of yours now: yadā tu te varam dadyāt svayam utthāpya rāghavaḥ, vyavasthāpya mahārājaṁ tvam imaṁ vṛṇuyā varam/ rāmaṁ pravrajayārāṇye nava varṣāṇi pañca ca, bharataḥ kriyatām rājā prthivyām pārthivarṣabhaḥ/ In the event of Dasharatha of getting haughty and fiery when you ask him of the two boons, then you might remind him coolly about his ‘dharma pramaana vachana’ or the oath of his conscience and truthfulness. Then you should affirm to him with firmness and decisiveness: Rāmam pravṛājayāranye nava varṣāṇi pañca ca, bharataḥ kriyatām rājā pṛthivyām pāṛthivarṣabhah/ When you are asking for the two ‘varaas’, say it sternly and firmly: ‘ Send Rama to a far off forest for fourteen jungle life and let Bharata be made the King’. Kaikeyi! once Rama goes off for forest life far away for fourteen years, then Bharata should be well established and the Public too would get used to Bharata and the memory of Rama would be wiped out by that time. Devi! you must most certainly seek the boon of Rama’s ‘vana vaasa’ then your dear son’s life ambition of becoming a King would come true! Within that time frame, Rama too would lose his sheen and Bharata would be rid of opposing forces. More over Bharat’s sons would come of age and maturity. They too would increasingly have the desire for acquiring military skills and by the passage of time, the roots of hopes for kingship would get stronger by the day and ‘Ramaabhisheka’ would become a mirage in public eye. As Manthara concluded her poisonous counsellings, Kaikeyi admired her forecating skills and said that this Kubja was indeed the very best and most articulated convincer of forecastings of events. She said: Kubje! How skilfully you had interpreted the ‘shadyantra’ or unravelling of the masterly plan of King Dasharatha! Being slim and petty in stature with bent down back holding a stick, you do possess a typical sinister mind to fathom the evils of powerful men like a fallen flower some how withstanding the sweeps of forceful winds. While continuing to shower praises of Mandhara’s slim and crooked body frame with the fathomlessnss of her evil brain power, Kaikeyi exclaimed: Asuraraja Shambara was an adept with thousand ‘maayaavi’ skills, but Mandhara was by birth aware far many more of them as they are replete with her ‘mati-smriti-buddhi-and raaja neeti’! As Kaikeyi was not fatigued by complementing negative and anticipatory futuristics of Kubja, and declared: atra te pratimokṣyāmi mālām kubje hiraṇmayīm, abhiṣikte ca bharate rāghave ca vanam gate/ jātyena ca suvarṇena suniṣṭaptena sundari, labdhārthā ca pratītā ca lepayiṣyāmi te sthagu/ Kubje! In the eventuality of Bharata’s Rajabhisheka and Rama’s ‘aranya vaasa’, I shall present to you a very heavy golden necklace studded with precious jewellery and invaluable and celestial silk dresses and once you are adorned with them you should be elevated to a high pedestal with bright maidens serving you with decilacies to eat and body parts to be softly massaged. As Kaikeyi was flying high on the skies of imagination, a very practical Manthara reminded Kaikeyi to transform her mood to the immediate task ahead and lie down with uncouth hair and dress soon. Kaikeyi then asserted : Aham hi naivaastaraani na srajo nachandanam naanjana paana bhojanam, na kinchidicchhaami na cheha jeevanam nachodito gacchhati Raagavo vanam/ In the event of Rama not being despatched to the far off forests, then I shall never sleep in comfort, nor wear normal dresses, nor adorn flowers, chandana, anjana, bhojana, and in such a miserable life even end up. So saying she entered a dark room on a miserable mat on the ground.

King Dasharatha being busy head over heels with multifarious responsibilities had just concluded a meeting of his minsters and close advisers took a long breath and felt that indeed, he had yet not met his queens and alert with latest reports that all the preparations were nicely falling in place. He had first entered the interiors of Devi Kaikeyi foremost. In that palace, one would normally witness even at the entry the groups chirrups of parrots, peacocks and swans, soft and lilting sounds of music instruments, busy groups of servant maids competing each others with their dresses and ornaments, clean and elevated platforms surrounded by a variety of green and clean plants and fruit bearing trees, and full of rich varieties of eats and sweets being carried from one chamber to another and such divinely atmosphere. But Dasharatha found the surroundings inactive, dark, with deadly calmness and surprisingly lonely, quiet like a burial ground. Normally the servant maids should have announced the entry of the King himself and amid lot of fanfare, the Queen should have come out to welcome him and usher him in. He could not see her either in waiting halls, nor living rooms and not even in her bed room. Dasharatha wondered as what would have happened and remarked within himself that this was all very strange and unreal. He raised his voice in a commanding tone and shouted as to where was the ‘pratihaari’ or the informer woman. The latter ran forward to the King and with a covered face and bent feet mumbled: The queen ran towards the ‘Kopa griha’ or the corner home of anger and anguish with crestfallen face and unkempt dress and loosely hanging hair! Dasharatha paced fast along towards the dark corner room and witnessed the queen lying lonely crying away with swollen cheeks and sleepy eyes with incessant tears in her eyes often jerking up with heavy breathing on a naked mat with crumpled dress and unkempt hair. The King was old and the wife was in charming youth and always treated as of his own ‘praana’ the vital energy. The King was indeed flawless and Kaikeyi appeared to be decisive. He saw her as if a celestial women fell on the bare earth! The King then bent down and touched her with both of his hands and having emboldened himself with the trepidation as to what might she want touched smoothly all over her legs and feet. na te ’ham abhijānāmi krodham ātmani samśritam, devi kenābhiyuktāsi kena vāsi vimānitā/ yad idam mama duḥkhāya śeṣe kalyāṇi pāmsuṣu, bhūmau śeṣe kimarthaṁ tvaṁ mayi kalyāṇa cetasi, bhūtopahatacittveva mama cittapramāthinī/ Devi! is you anger against me! had somebody offended you! As King Dasharatha was literally inebriated with the arrows of Kama Deva and became too impulsive with passion for his dearest life partner, Devi Kaikeyi coolly with equanimity and even coquettishly and flirtatiously replied with reciprocative affection displayed by Dasharatha: Nāsmi viprakṛtā deva kena cin na vimānitā, abhiprāyas tu me kaś cit tam icchāmi tvayā kṛtam/ pratijñām pratijānīṣva yadi tvaṁ kartum icchasi, atha tad vyāhariṣyāmi yad abhiprārthitaṁ mayā/ Deva! If you could fulfil that wish then you make a 'pratigjna' or truthful and firm promise. The King was then got diluted from his erstwhile anxiety and anguish and then lifted her lying on earth on a miserable mat and taking her on his thighs and embrace, and said *avalipte na jānāsi tvattaḥ priyataro mama, manujo manujavyāghrād rāmād anyo na vidyate/ bhadre hṛdayam apy etad anumṛśśyoddharasva me, etat samīkṣya kaikeyi brūhi yat sādhu manyase/ balam ātmani paśyantī na mām śaṅkitum arhasi, kariṣyāmi tava prītiṁ sukr̥tenāpi te śape/*Devi! You ought indeed be aware that without Shri Rama, I cannot be alive without seeing Shri Rama for even an hour! And on such Shri Rama now, I swear that your wish be fulfilled! Then Kaikeyi turned her mind to selfishness and concentrated her thoughts in favour of Bharath. She said: Raja! May Indra and all the Devas too hear your swearing now. Let Chandra, Surya, Aakash, Planets, Directions, Universe, Earth, Gandharva, Rakshasaas too bear witness to what the King had just sworn about. Then she stated: Maharaja! Do you recall that at the time of your battle with Shambara in dandakaranya when I accompanied you by keeping awake up day and night and at a crucial moment you were saved by me and in turn you bestowed two valuable boons to me which I stated that I would avail of them at a time of my choice. In case you are not prepared to grant those two boons now, then I would have to perform my 'praana tyaga'. This was how the King was being ensnared cleverly from various angles. She thus said that she would now like to avail the two boons and finally expressed: Abhiṣeka .samārambho rāghavasyopakalpitaḥ, anenaivābhīṣekeṇa bharato me 'bhīṣicyatām/ nava pañca ca varṣāṇi dandakāranyam āśritaḥ, cīrājinajaṭādhārī rāmo bhavatu tāpasah/ bharato bhajatām adya yauvarājyam akanṭakam, adya caiva hi paśyeyam prayāntam rāghavam vane/ Deva! As Kaikeyi conveyed her frightful statement likewise, Dasharatha was stunned and shoked to the core as momentarily lost his balance of mind. He felt that he was visioning a bad dream or was it an illusion! Her words were piercing into his ears and right into his heart. He felt that a tiger was suddenly caged became helpless. He was merely able to state: 'aho dhikkaar! what a sudden turn of evens and swooned with senselessness. After lapse of time he recovered somewhat and shouted loud with rage and feeble vulnerability : ' Oh heartless, malicious and vintictive woman! You were born to destroy and the outstanding tradition of this Kingdom. What wickedness and hatred that you have had for Shri Rama! He has had always worshipped you even more than his own mother! It looks that you had entered into this great family only like a coiled and poisoned serpent woman only to uproot and devastate it. The entire universe esteems Rama for his unimaginable qualities. I could disown Koushalya and even Sumitra, but never Rama Lakshmanas. If I do not find Rama even for a minute, I lose my mental balance. Even in the absence of Sun my universe might survive and agricultural fields might still yield crops without water but I could never survive without Rama! May I prostrate to you by falling my head at your feet, but oh! sinful female, do not very kindly be so spiteful and malicious in this manner! I am indeed prepared to let Bharat be adorned with Rajyabhisheka if that satisfies your ego and meanness ! Satya-daana-tapa-tyaga-mitrata-pavitrata-saralata, vidya and guru shushrusha or truthfulness, charity, meditation, affability, purity of mind and action, softness, knowledge and service to Gurus are the hallmarks of his personality! Kaikeyi! Do realise that I am aged awaiting the termination of my life and my condition is terribly miserable. Please be kind to me!’ Having heard all these entreaties by her husband, Kaikeyi replied: Raja! Having given the boons, you appear to be retracing steadfast promises and make belief lame excuses. Your ‘pratiginas’ or assertive declarations do not become of your stature and family background. Do you not recall that your ancestor Emperor named Shaihya intervened in the fight of an innocent pigeon and an eagle by weighing that much of meat of the pigeon and offered it from his own body! Similarly, King Alarka donated his own eyes to a blind brahmana boy and deserved higher lokas!

[Vishleshanas about Kings Shiabya and Alarka:

King Shiba, the most illustrious the son Ushinara, of Bhoja King was the husband of Parishthana the daughter of King Yayati. King Shaihya conquered the entire world single handed and performed several Ashvamedha Yagnas and was an outstanding personality of charity. He was famed to have willingly offered his own flesh by weighing the equal quantity of his own flesh but an innocent pigeon caught by weighing that much quantity of its raw meat from his own flesh. At the conclusion of this kind of charity never heard of in the past or for all times to come, the pigeon and the hawk revealed themselves as Agni Deva and Devendra who were testing the extent to which the King could reach in his disposition of charity. They blessed the king to reach swarga with his own mutilated body. Yet another instance of Shiba’s earlier life was that he never hesitated to kill his own son to satisfy the demand of a brahmana of great virtue as the son committed a ‘maha pataka’ of stealing. Dharma Raja in the form of the Brahmana who actually tempted the boy for stealing restored the boy’s life once again. Yet in another context, the Chakravarti was stated to have encountered the ‘Atma’ of King Yayati after the latter’s death and facilitated it to restore it back to swarga!

King Alarka according to Markandeya Purana was the son of King Ritudhwaj crowned him early duu to ond age. At the time of crowning, queen Madalasa presented him a ring and said - 'O son! This ring contains a note which will teach you on how a king should administer the kingdom.' Saying this, Madalasa blessed Alarka and left the palace with her husband Ritudhwaj to spend their lives in the forest. After his accession to the throne, King Alarka ruled justly. In due course of time, he got many sons. He followed the dictates of Dharma, Arth and Kama while ruling his kingdom. In spite of enjoying all the luxuries, Alarka still could not experience bliss and felt as if he was missing something in his life. Very soon, Subahu came to learn about the royal luxuries of his brother Alarka and got tempted to enjoy the same luxuries. To attain his objective, Subahu took the help of the king of Kashi. The king of Kashi sent an envoy to Alarka with a message to give the kingdom to Subahu, which Alarka refused. Instead, he sent a reply that the request must be made by Subahu himself. 'I will not give him my kingdom out of fear of war,' said Alarka. But Subahu did not pay heed and with the help of the king of Kashi, launched a massive attack on his kingdom and conquered it. Now Alarka's days of sorrow had begun. He then remembered the ring presented by his mother Madalasa. He opened the ring and found a letter in it. The letter said- 'When you lose your everything, give up the company of your present advisors and join the company of learned sages.' This message made Alarka to pine for the company of the learned sages. Very soon, he went to the refuge of Dattatreya and requested him to remove his miseries. Dattatreya assured him of removing his miseries at once but before doing that, he wanted to know the reasons for his miseries. Alarka said- 'I do not long for pleasures but my elder brother wants to grab my kingdom.' Markandeya Purana further states: King Alarka approached Mahatma Dattatreya as a ‘Sharanardhi’ (refuge) and prayed to him to guide him and wipe out his distress. Dattatreya replied that the King was indeed truthful as he made a confession that he was suffering from anguish. He then asked Alarka to carry out an introspection as to who was he? What kind of grief did he suffer from? King Alarka tried to figure out the inter-relationship of the Soul and the three kinds of basic problems of humanity viz. Adhi-Bhoutika, Adhyatmika and Adhi Daivika, ie the troubles related to physical, internal and God-made categories. He reasoned that he was not a component of ‘Panchabhutas’-Prithivi (Earth), ‘Aapas’ (Water), ‘Tejas’(Fire), ‘Vayu’ (Wind) and ‘Aakash’ (Sky), but has the sensibilities related to these Entities. Even if he were not the ‘Sharir’ (Physique), he however had the independent feelings that led to the complexes of Inferiority or Superior feelings. Indeed, it would be essential to discard those kinds of feelings by an enlightened Gyani. After all, when a person is aware that essentially a human body is not eternal, then why should there be the feelings of happiness or otherwise; especially when there was a realisation that these feelings were made by the mind but not the inner soul which was free from such illusive fears. Alarka thus analysed the current situation arising out of the state of his mind, since he was not the body, nor the mind, and not even his superficial consciousness. Thus analysed, the King Alarka convinced himself that there was no harm done if his elder brother Subahu desired to take over Kingship, then there was no need for resisting the idea! Also, desire and attachment propelled by ego and prestige are the root causes of happiness or grief. Mahatma Dattatreya stated: Ahami tyamkurotpanno mameti skandhavaanmahaan, Gruhakshetroccha shakhaascha putradaaraadi pallavah/Dhanadhanya maha patro naikakaala pravardhitah, Punyaapunyaagra pushpascha Sukha duhkha maaphalah ('Ahamkaar' or sense of self is the seed which produces a huge tree of 'Agyaan' or Ignorance; 'Mamatva' or selfishness is the trunk of the tree; Gruha (Abode) and Kshetra (Farm lands) are the high and large branches; wife and children are the tender leaves; 'dhana dhanya' or money and foodgrains viz. wealth are the enormous leaves; 'Punyaapunya' (Fruits of noble deeds or sins) constitute the major flowers and 'Sukha Duhkkas' or delight and misery are the end results.) How could those human beings, who are tired of 'Samsar' (Life and Family matters) and seek shelter under the 'Agyan' Tree which is rooted in the lack of correct knowledge or awareness, ever consider to attain Salvaton? Only those noble persons who possess a sharp axe named 'Vidya' (Knowledge) could pull down the mammoth tree of ignorance and egocentricity with the active help of the heavy rocks of 'Satsanga'! King Alarka expressed his gratitude to Mahatma Dattatreya that he gave him the solace in clearing his conscience about the eventualiy of stepping down from his throne in favour of his brother Subahu. But his doubt in his mind continued to waver and was not able to detach from natural strings. He desired to learn the art of disconnecting human psyche from Paramatma, so that there would not be a recurrence of 'Punarjanma' (Rebirth). Dattatreya replied: Yogecha shaktividusham yena shreyah param bhavet, Muktiyogaatatha yogah samyakjnaa mahipathey /Sangaddoshod bhavah duhkha matatwasakta chetasamam/ (Yogis are able to distinguish 'Gyan' from 'Agyan' and that is called 'Mukti'; manifestation of Parabrahma takes place despite the natural features of the illusory world. From Yoga emerges 'Moksha', 'Samyak Gyan' (detailed analysis) comes from Yoga, 'Duhkha' (Sorrow) springs from Gyan; 'Mamata' (Sense of Belonging) comes from 'Duhkha'. Further, Selflessness demolishes 'Mamata' and results in 'Viragya'; this is the state suitable for Yoga or configuration of the Self with the Super Force.]

Kaikeyi states Aham hi vishamadyaiva peetvaa tavaagratah, pashyante marishyaami Ramo yadya abhishicyate/ If Rama's abhisheka were performed, I will instantly take to poison. King Dasaharatha stated: Kaikeyi! Do you understand that in case Rama declines your own personal instruction of his having to leave for the forests, then too he would carry out your instruction and such is the magnanimity of Rama! But what indeed would follow be your widowhood and with none else to look for in my absence and of Rama, the treatment to be meted out to you as a tyrant is unimaginable! Kaikeyi! then be happy and greatly contented without me, Koushalya and Sumitra! Raja Kumati! It is my unimaginable misfortune that you had entered into our lives. How indeed could you ever horrible words of Bharata's rajyabhisheka and Rama's 'vana vaasa'! This gives me a repulsion on womanhood as you could be so extremely selfish, but the entirety of womanhood is distinctive but the mother of Bharata is exceptional. Here is an example of a son being drowned in miseries and a father being ready to rid of the son. Likewise the woman whom the husband is ravished about but the woman desires to kill the husband. Whenever Rama with bright clothing and masculine jewellery is visualised by me, I get restored my own days of youth. Let the universe be without Surya, let not Indra the vajradhari not bestow rains on earth, but if Rama were to be safe then my life gets fortified. Arre! Kaikeyi! You are my destroyer and the worst enemy, donning the form of my death; how indeed could I got ensnared to a 'nagin', a serpent woman! As you are threatening me with death like this, how come your teeth be intact without breaking into thousand pieces ! I prostrate to you in disgust and desperation, Kaikeyi! be kind to me!

Maharaja Dasharatha the greatest hero of the times was literally down to earth crawling in the most miserable condition crestfallen at the feet of Kaikeyi! He was in the same condition as his his ancestor Chakravarti Yayati of Ikshvaku lineage who was turned down from Deva Loka after his death since the positive balance of his virtue and viciousness was of enormous negativity due to his uncouth reliance on charming but vicious womanhood.

[Visleshana on Yayati:

Yayati, the son of Nahusha and his wife Viraja, was a famed Emperor who defeated all the Kings of the World and married Devayani the daughter of Asura Guru Shukracharya, besides Sharmishtha the daughter of Vishvaparya, a Rakshasa King. Indra was pleased to gift Yayati a Divine Chariot with seven powerful horses with which he traversed the world and divided his Empire into seven divisions to distribute it among five of his sons. A Maharshi gave a boon that if any of his sons could agree to exchange their youth to his old age then he could secure a fresh lease of youth. His eldest son Yadu from Devayani refused and so did others excepting Sharmishtha's son Puru who readily agreed. Yayati took over Puru's youth and enabled him travel around to unravel earthly pleasures for long. But finally returned discovering that the ephemeral joys of the world were endless like Agni in a Homa kunda assuming larger and larger proportions as long as ghee is served and no human would be satisfied with food, gold, ornaments or women. By so realising, he returned his youth to Puru and took to Vanaprastha or retirement. That was how he slipped down from the experiences of swarga but descended down into the company of 'Saadhu Pungavas' or of Groups of Virtue and Enlightenment!]

Kaikeyi too in her inner consciousness was concerned that her public support and even his own son Bharata's reaction were of lurking concerns , sought to prolong the conversation with Dasharata and said: Maha Raja! you had been all the time posing to me that you had been a 'satyavaadi' and 'dhriddha pratigjna'but at the opportune time seeking excuses of escapism! This jibe of Kaikeyi led Dasharatha from the state of entreating and seeking to convince her made him suddenly flare up and shouted on her as follows: Oh, low class woman! You are my enemy! As Rama would leave for forests and I would die, then be happy forever! In the heaven too, Devas would be enquiring me of Rama's welfare and which reply could I give them! Should I answer that Rama was despatched by you to forests by threatening my life and hence could not hold myself and reached here! Or should I tell Devas that out of my infatuation for Kaikeyi I packed Rama for forest life! If I state like that then the earlier statement would be contradictory. How could indeed ask Rama the shuraveera-vidvan to get lost in the forests! How could Rama the blue lotus eyed hero with broad shouldered invincibility be punished to go suffer the forest life for no fault of his! Even with full awareness that a person who sacrifices anything for the happiness of fellow beings be made unhappy with a wretched life for fourteen long years and rejoice myself! Oh, sinful stone hearted woman named Kaikeyi! do you realise that on entire earth, your name would be blackened with disgrace and shamefulness forever! As Dasharatha was haughtily reprimanding Kaikeyi in disgust and desperation thus, sunset was closing in and stars on the sky commenced twinkling; he looked at the sky and addressed it: 'Raatri Deva with the starry sky! I prostrate to you not to speed up the next morning kindly with my folded hands! If you do not delay and prolong the night, then I should have to witness the deadly and sinful face of Kaikeyi in the day light! Then he addressed Kaikeyi again: 'Kalyanamayi Devi! I am the helpless, death nearing King of this Country named Dasharatha seeking your mercy! I made a public announcement about Rama's pattabhisheka early morning tomorrow; please make me not a butt of joke and of shame! Be kind to me! If you allow Rama to be the king, you should be happy for ever and ever. Maha Devi! Sumukhi! Sulochani! This proposal is doubtless rejoicing merriment to me, to Rama, to the public, to acharyas, and even to Bharata; as such let this be fulfilled!

Kaikeyi's stubbornness to relent - Vashishta Maharshi's intervention fails and Charioteer Sumanra asked Rama's arrival at the King's Palace

As King was disheartened and lying on the ground with disillusionment, Kaikeyi resumed her tirading harangue: Maharaja! What all you had granted me as your two boons to me are now being socisited now and this would not behove of you to fall on ground like this as this is neither a gentleman's way of conduct nor a truthful fulfillment of a promise. May I once again recall the golden examples of Shiblya and Alarka that I had given you and how they had finally achieved 'sadgati' subsequently. The Great Oceans of force and fury too never cross the boundaries prescribed on earth by vidhata. Satyam sananuvartasva yadi dharme dhrutaa matih, sa varah saphalo mestu varado hyaasi sattama/ Truthfulness is of Pranava swarupa embedded into dharma; satya is indestructible and from that truthfulness one secures the Parabrahmatva! Arya! In case you are still unable to fulfil my justified desires as you promised than I would have no other option but to resort to 'atma tyaga'. Evam pracodito rājā kaikeyyā nirviśaṅkayā, nāśakat pāśam unmoktum balir indrakṛtaṁ yathā/ udbhrāntahṛdayaś cāpi vivarṇavanado 'bhavat, sa dhuryo vai parispendan yugacakrāntaram yathā/ This was how Kaikeyi tied up underlining Dasharath's appeal to truthfulness like Bali Chakravarti could not wriggle out from his promise of donating a mere three feet area for Vamana's tapasya!

[Vishleshana on Vamanavatara was detailed in Essence of Vaalmiki Bala Ramayana but some excerpts are given for ready reference: Having been trained in all these disciplines of Dharma, Vamana Deva as a brahmachari had one fine morning left for the Yagna Shaala of Bali Chakravarti as the latter was executing a Sacred Yagna while carrying his mat, danda /stick, chhatra / umbrella and kamandulu / water vessel. Danava Guru Shukracharya was aware that Vishnu Deva in the form of Vamana Murti was arriving at the Yagna and briefed Bali Chakravarti to be extremely careful as Vishnu was a sauve and highly talented person to put words in the mouths of the opponents. The Guru reminded Chakravarti that the latter denied the age-old practice of rights to yagna's shares to Devataas and that Vamana Murti might as well ask for the revival of the practice but those shares were now enjoying by Danava Chiefs. Bali replied to Danava Guru that in case Vishnu in the incarnation of Vamana Murti came and requested for any thing then how could a King say 'no' to it! Bali told the Danava Guru: Brahman katha -maham bruyaamanyapihi yachitah, Naastiti kim Devasya Samsaarasyaaghahaarinah/ Vratopa-vaasairvividhairyah Prabhurgrunhatey Harih, Sa mey vakshyati deheeti Govindah kimato -dhikam? Naasteeti yanmayanoktamanyeshaamapi yaachataam, Vakshyaami kathamaaya -tey tadadya chaamarechutey/Shlaagha eva hi veeraanam Daanaacchaapt samaagamah, Na badhaakaari yadyaanam tadanga Balavat smrutam/ (Brahmanaachaarya! How could I deny any body requesting me for a favour! And if that Supreme Deva asked me for a charity, then what else would be the alternative! While Parameswara received the fruits of Vrataas, Upavaasaas, and so on from one and all, and if that Parameswara himself asked a boon from me, could there be a greater fortune to me! When even an ordinary person approached me for a favour, then too that could not be denied by a King; then when Narayana himself asked for it, could such an opportunity presented itself, this chance could never indeed be missed. Even if there are difficulties in executing a charity, the value of charity would get multiplied and 'Veera purushaas' would never deter from performing the deed) Having said the above, Bali asked Shukraachaarya: Yatagjnaatwaa Munisreshtha! Daanavighna karenamey, Naiva Bhavyam Jagannaatheey Govidey samupastitheey! (By understanding the above, Munisreshtha! Please do not create 'Daana Vighnaas' or hurdles in the execution of the Charity!). As Vamana Deva arrived at the Yagna shaala, Bali welcomed him, offered 'Arghya', 'Aasana', Puja and offered him limitless gold, jewellery, elephants, horses, cows, women, clothes, bunches of villages or townships or whatever would be his wish! Vamana Deva replied smilingly: Mamagnisharanaarthaaya dehi Rajan Padatrayam, Suvarnagraamaratnaadi tadarthibhyah pradeeyataam/ (Raja! Please provide to me three feet of land to enable me to set up an Agni- Shaala). Bali said that after all three feet would be nothing as he could ask for a lakh of feet which could be given away, but Vamana Deva replied that he was indeed satisfied with that much of Bhumi and if the King were to offer more he might as well provide to the other needy! Bali Chakravarti readily agreed not understanding the implication and as the deed of Daana was being executed and Vamana Deva extended his hand to the King and expanded his Vamana Rupa gradually immediately: Sarva Devamayam rupam darshayaamaasa tatksanaat/ Chandra Suryoutu nayaney dyouh shirascharanou Kshitih, Paadaangulyah Pishaachaastu Hastaangulya –scha Gruhakaah/ Vishvedevaascha jaanusthaa janghey Saadhyaah Surottamaah, Yakshaah naksheshu sambhuta rekhaapsaraastathaa/ Drushtirrukshaanya seshaani keshaah Suryamshvah Prabhoh, Taarakaa romakupaani romeshu cha Maharshayah/ Baahavo vidishatasya Dishaah Shrotrey Mahatmanah, Ashvinou Shravaney tasya naasaa Vayurmahaatmanah/ Prasadey Chandramaa Devo Mano Dharmah samaashritah, Satyasyaabhavad Vaani Jihvaa Devi Saraswati/ Greevaarditirdeva mataa Vidyaastadvalayastathaa, Swargadwaaramabhunmaitrah twashtaa Pushaa cha vai bhruvou/ Mukhe Vaishvaanarschaascha vrushanou tu Prajaapatih, Hridayamcha Param Brahma Pumstwam vai Kashapo Munih/ Prushthesya Vasavo Devaa Marutah Sarva saandhishu, Vakshasthaley tathaa Rudro Dharryachaasya Mahaarnavah/ Udarey chaasya Gandharvaa Marutascha Mahaabalaah, Lakshmirmedhaa Dhrutih Kaantih Sarv Vidyaascha vai Katih/ Sarvajyoteesham Yaaneeha Tapascha Paramam mahat, Tasya Devaadhi Devasya tejah prodbhutamuttamam/ Tanou Kukshishu Vedaascha jaanuni cha Mahaamakhaah, Ishtayah pashavaschaasya Dwujaanaam cheshtitaanicha/ Tasya Devamayam rupam drushtaa Vishnormahaatmanah, Upasarpanti tey Daityaah patangaa iva paavaakam/ Chakshurastu Mahaa Daityaah Paadaangushtam gruheetavaan, Dantaabhyaam tasya vai greevaa mangushtheynaahana dharih/ Prathamya Sarvaansuraan Paadahastathalairvibhuh, Krutwaa Rupam Mahaakaayam Samjahaaraashu Modineem/ Tasya Vikramato Bhumim Chandraadityaou stanaantarey, Nabho Vikramamaanasya sakthidesho stitathaarvibhou/Param Vikramaanasya jaanumuley Prabhaakarou, Vishnoraastaam sthitasyaitow Devapaalana jkarmani/ Jitwaa Lokatrayam taamscha hatwaachaasura pungavaan, Purandaraaya Trailokyam dadou Vishnurunurukramah/

(Instantly, Vamana Murti displayed his Virat Swarupa: Chandra and Surya were his two Eyes, Shy was his head, Prithvi his feet, Pishachaas were his foot-fingers, Gruhyakaas were his hand fingers, Vishwa Deva Ganaas were in his jaanus /knees, Sadhyas were his janghaas, Yakshaas were his nails, Apsarsaas were his palm lines, Nakshatras were his Eye sight, Surya kiranas were his hairs, Stars were his body hairs, Maharshiganaas were in the hair roots, Vidishas were his hands, Dishaas were his ears, Ashwini Kumars were his faculty of hearing, Vayu was his nose, Chandra Deva was his joking faculty, Dharma Deva was his thinking capacity, Satya was his voice and Saraswati was his tongue, Deva Mata Aditi was his neck, Vidya was his valiyaas or long poles; Pushas were his eye brows, Swarga dwar was his anus, Vaishvanara his face, Prajapati his vrushanaas, Param Brahma was his heart, Kashyapa Muni was his Pumstwa, Vasu Devata was his back, Marutganaas were his Sandhis, Rudra was his Vakshasthala, Mahaarnavaa was his Dhairyaa, Gangharvas were in his stomach; Lakshmi, Medha, Dhruti, Kaanti and all Vidyaas were in his ‘Kati Pradesha’; the luster and radiance in the total Universe as also the Tapo teja or the power of meditation was the reflection of the magnificence of Natayana; Vedas and Scriptures and the huge Yagnaas and the Sacred Deeds of the Virtuous like Maharshis and Brahmanas were all inside in his ‘kukshi’ or belly. On viewing the Paramatma’s ‘Virat Swarupa’, the so called ‘Mahaasuraas’ referred to earlier in ignorance by Chakravarti Bali before Prahlada’s curse to him got burnt off like flies before a gigantic out break of Fire! Having thus occupied the Universe in totality including the sub-terrain Sapta Paatalaas, Vamana Deva stated that since Bali took the water in his hand and donated the THREE FEET of Land, and blessed him to be the King of the Sapta Paatalaas and granted him long life till the end of Manvantara of the on-going Vaisawata Manu. He also blessed Bali that all the ‘Homa Phalas’ at the time of Shraddhas to be performed even by Brahmanas, besides incomplete and defective Vratas, Agni Kaaryaas without ghee, and Kusha grass roots as also the daanas without detachment would belong to Bali and his followers.]

The Sarga is continued: Dashratha’s face was like that of an ox irked and tightly tied between two strong wooden poles and his usual brightness of face got faded off pale and his heart beat got speeded up badly. With shaken up face as his usual kingly courage dimmed away, he had with tormented tone uttered the vedic verse of homage to Agni with prostration stating : Saashtaangam te grihnaami soubhagatvaaya hastam/ and so on and mumbled holding Kaikeyi's both hands: 'Paapini! I am hereby sacrificing my own son of glory!' Then he continued: the night is over and as soon as Surya Deva rises, I shall no doubt declare likewise, but kindly do me the favor of allowing Rama to 'offer jalanjali' after my death! Recently I made the public announcement with pride about Rama's pattabhisheka but please not insist of a similar announcement openly with my head hanging down with shame. Kaikeyi then said haughtily: Raja! call for Rama now and initiate arrangements for Bharata to become the next King soon. King too desired to see Rama. Meanwhile as the early hours of the morning chimed, Ayodhya got extremely busy with the Rajyabhisheka, as flags were furled afresh, public got assembled gradually on high roads, street corners and market places, shops and temples got busy and a typical atmosphere of joviality and excitement got elated. Vasishta Maharshi in a great sense of fulfillment accompanied by other Rishis and groups of Vedic Panditas approached Sumanta and instructed him to convey to the King that he had arrived. All types of seeds, sugandhas, honey, ratnas, fresh curds, plentiful milk, kushas, fruits, eight beautiful kanyas, elephants, white horses of excellent nativity, khadga-dhanush-palkis- chhatra- chamara- well fed and huge bulls, simhasanas, vyaghra charmas, suvarna malas, white and coloured robes, herds of white cows, acharyas, brahmana panditas, and the cream citizens of Ayodhya were getting in place rapidly all awaiting the arrival of Pushya Nakshatra soon enough. As per Vasishta's instruction, Sumantu entered King Dasharatha's palace to hurry up the King as Vasishta was already awaiting his arrival. King's erstwhile evening instructions not to allow any visitor was ignored and Sumantu started forcing his way to the King's interior chamber and initiated his praises aloud from a distance just as Maathali the celestial charioteer would to Devendra! He eulogised Dasharatha and requested him to get ready soon as the entire Rajya Sabha pioneered by Vasishta was awaiting his most auspicious arrival. The more that Sumantu was showering praises on Dasharatha, the worse that Dasharatha was sinking in his spirits. As he was not responding at all, Sumantu heard the voice of Devi Kaikeyi in an agry and harsh tone: Sumanta! Fetch Rama here at once! As Sumantu peeped out there was a commotion of jubilation as of the noisy and uncontrollable waves of the ocean were about to cross its limits.

Through out the previous night, the full strength of Brahmanas and co-Purohitas spent the entire time on the Vedika itself. The Ministers, Senadhipati and his top officials of army-cavalry-elephantry and so on too were in their best uniforms and dresses. The full strength of Brahmanas were busy on the vedika with their respective duties. The gorgeous robes for Shri Rama with moon shine bright pure white and yellow streaked colour stiched with precious stones and jewellery were readied too. Varied kinds of musical instruments and musicians in their striking dresses were readied for action. Meanwhile, Sumantu who had earlier addressed the 'sabha' addressing the audience to add to the excitement: ' I am now leaving for the palace of King Dasharatha to request him to grace here even before Shri Rama would make his grand appearance; are all ready to welcome the King with applauses; then came a reverberating reply with exuberance and applauses! Then Sumantu reached the palace of the King and forced his way into the interiors despite the protests that the King ordered that none ever should go inside. As Devi Kaikeyi had earlier ordered angrily to bring there at once, Dasharatha too in half sleepy and highly annoyed tone shouted at Sumanta: Ramamaanaya Suteti yadasyabhihito, kimidam kaaranam yena mamaagjnaa prati-vaahyate, na chaiva samaprasuptohamaanayehashu Raghavam/ Have you not heard the loud instruction to bring Rama at once! Why are you not heeding that instruction at once! What is the reason for not complying the instruction forthwith! As the King heard the annoyance, Sumanta drove away the chariot at once and on way noticed the unprecedentedly surging crowds on the 'Raja Marga' and made headway to the Palace of Shri Rama which was looking like 'Indra Bhavana' with decorations of flags, huge flower garlands, decorated bye lanes, minarets with sky high banners and buntings, strings of most attractively chiselled 'Murtis' in marble stones as also silver and shining brass decoratives at the entrance 'praakaras'. Saaradhi Sumantra then made an entry by his multi- horse driven chariot into the long brass metal covered runway leading to the waiting reception hall. Indeed the Shri Rama's palace was like the elegantly decorated prototype of possibly imaginable Indra Bhavan with the surroundings of green grass of freshness with 'mriga pakshi ramaneeyata' or of the ambience of deers, peacocks and other birds like doves with water fountains.

Sumantra reached the inner chamber of the Palace as being under the security of women headed by an old male and asked him to convey that Sumantra had arrived at the door step. On reaching this message Rama realised that the most trusted charioteer of the King Dasharatha had arrived at the door step of the inner chamber of his palace and despatched the personal attendants to usher Sumantra to see him. As Sumantra was let in after through the layers of the security rings, he saw Rama was being seated along with his dharmapatni Devi Sita as both were seated together with hand in hand like Chandra and Chitra Nakshatra both smeared with 'sugandhita chandana lepa'. The well-bred, civil, gracious symbol of politeness Sumantra involuntarily stated 'Shri Rama! How fortunate and blessed be the mother Koushalya to have begotten a son like ! Having thus exclaimed, Sumantra then conveyed the message that King Dasharatha as being seated with Queen Devi Kaikeyi had asked Rama to meet him at once without any delay whatever.. Then Rama told Devi Sita: Devi devaś ca devī ca samāgamya madantare, mantreyete dhruvam kiṁ cid abhiṣecanasamhitam/ lakṣayitvā hy abhiprāyaṁ priyakāmā sudakṣiṇā, saṁcodayati rājānaṁ madartham madirekṣaṇā/ yādṛśī pariṣat tatra tādṛśo dūta āgataḥ, dhruvam adyaiva mām rājā yayauvarājye 'bhiṣekṣyati/ hanta śīghram ito gatvā drakṣyāmi ca mahīpatiḥ, saha tvaṁ parivāreṇa sukham āssva ramasya ca/Devi! It appears that father Dasharatha and mother Kaikeyi together must have surely thought of something very special and auspicious being planned in connection with my impending Rajyabhisheka! It ought to be in respect of a detail that might have slipped away from their thought-horizons and Mother Kaikeyi therefore ought to have desired to know of my considered opinion for my compliance in that special context! Indeed my mother Kaikeyi must have planned something very very special and hence this message being conveyed only through their most trusted and intimate Sumantra the King's conscience keeper. As the 'antaranga parishad' or the most intimate one to one meeting of my parents must be in progress for my ready compliance, they ought to have commanded for me and hence this very special message! Let me therefore hasten to leave and Devi Sita! Meanwhile do enjoy with you group of your special and intimate mates meanwhile! As Rama got up ready to let Sumanta accompany him, Devi Sita accompanied Rama upto the door as a sign of auspiciousness. Then Sita reminded of her erstwhile suggestion by herself to request the King and the Queen to ascertain from the Vidvans that as a sequel to the Rajyabhisheka it should be a good idea to follow up soon with Rajasuya Yajna also. Indeed that was how Indra asked Brahma , did he not! My best wishes to you dearest husband as you are then dressed up in deer skin in vrata diksha holding a deer horn and as I would be at service behind you then at the yagjna! How indeed would that I would like to imagine that at such glorious occasion, the Vajra-dhaari Indra from the east, Yama Raja from the south, Varuna Deva from the west and Kubera from the north would protect and bless you! So surmising, Devi Sita came upto the door, as Lakshmana stood waiting for Rama with folded hands. Then Rama met some intimate friends in the middle hall and proceeded to the chariot and got seated comfortably as driven by Sumantra. As the chariot was proceeding as through on the high road as sounding with ‘megha garjana’ or the roars of clouds. Lakshman too was standing behind Rama as a body guard. The chariot then passed through the enthusiastic crowds while a group of mighty soldiers surrounded the chariot making way ahead and clearing behind. Then as the chariot was passing through sounds of orchestrated instruments of music were tuned and ‘Vandimaagadhas’ or well dressed men and women singing away in harmony showering flowers and praises. The onlooker women , all dressed up colourfully were expressing how fortunate was Devi Sita to secure the most deserving husband as Rama! Thus the citizens of Ayodhya were able to have a thrilling glimpses of Rama with surging crowds were being controlled with the Defence Forces lined up all along the route.

As Rama was thus riding the chariot on the ‘Raja Marga’ the Royal Highway, he witnessed by himself that the city was decorated to the brim with flags, banners, scented airs of freshness, showers of scented flowers, and surging crowds in lanes and byelanes. The select associates of Rama accompanying him noticed that several onlookers were in trances gazing lost and moved by his darshan with surging tears of joy and fulfillment. Some were stating: āśīrvādān bahūñ śṛṇvan suhṛ̥dbhiḥ samudīritān, yathārham cāpi saṁpūjya sarvān eva narān yayau/ Our sincere blessings to Rama as he was deserving the best! Others were stating in high tones: pitāmahair ācaritam tathaiva prapitāmahaiḥ, adyopādāya taṁ mārgam abhiṣikto ‘nupālaya/ Raghunandana! May you follow the tradition of enormous name and fame with which your great grand fathers, grand fathers and the father ruled and administered with virtue and justice. Some of the onlooking passers by were addressing the audience: yathā sma lālītāḥ pitrā yathā pūrvaiḥ pitāmahaiḥ, tataḥ sukhataram sarve rāme vatsyāma rājani/ Friends and brothers! We should all be far more fortunate to have Rama as the King than how kind and concerned the present and the previous Kings have been! A few of other onlookers expressed: alam adya hi bhuktena paramārthair alam ca naḥ, yathā paśyāma niryāntam rāmam rājye pratiṣṭhitam/ As we are about to vision Rama as the next King soon after emerging from his father's climactic blessings, then we should be rejoicing with fulfillment now and the 'paramartha maarga' thereafter! Etās cānyās ca suhrdām udāsīnaḥ kathāḥ śubhāḥ, ātmasaṃpūjanīḥ śṛṇvan yayau rāmo mahāpatham/ While listening to the welcome praises and best wishes and compliments being showered on him and the ancestry, Rama had well gauged the samples of the public image, their personal affection and their innermost feelings. Sarveśām sa hi dharmātmā varṇānām kurute dayām, caturṇām hi vayahsthānām tena te tam anuvratāḥ/ Dharmatma Shri Rama thus like a cynosure attracted the admiration of all the classes of the Ayodhya society as they were unquestionable loyalists to him surely. Thus Rama had entered the King Dasharatha's Grand Palace and walked in straight in the innermost chamber of the King Dasharatha who was waiting for Rama like the ocean was the Moon indeed!

Rama witnessing the heart broken Dasharatha and Kaikeyi's rude intervention demanding Rama's Vana Vaasa for fourteen years in proscribed dress code and of Bharat's Kingship

As Rama entered the interiors of the King's palace, he found both Dasharatha and Kaikeyi were seated in chairs and were looking drowned in distress and agitation with dried up, swollen faces and pitiable faces. He prostrated before them and touched their feet. Dasharatha in a feeble tone said: 'Rama!' and burst out and kept silent. There were tears in his eyes and could not look into the eyes of Rama. Rama was alarmed with fear as though he touched a serpent and jumped with shock. He realised that his father was crying away for a long time as though a tragedy attacked him from his senses. He was breathing heavily and broke into crying as if the ocean was distressed with high tides and as though Rahu grasped Surya tightly and with a firm grip. Rama wondered as to what could have been the root cause for this and got agitated like the ocean waves which rose higher and higher on a full moon night! What indeed could have happened to day as his father was not even speaking to me eye to eye, whereas he would look at most fondly and break into endearing pep talk that each time he met him. Anyadā mām pitā dr̥ṣṭvā kupito 'pi prasīdati, tasya mām adya samprekṣya kimāyāsaḥ pravartate/ Normally on any occasion on any day whenever he was angry with me, he was always cool down on seeing me and become normal very soon and get back to his characteristic joviality. So thinking, Rama turning pale with sorrow and dullness then having greeted Kaikeyi once again and asked her: Kaccin mayā nāparādham ajñānād yena me pitā, kupitas tan mamācakṣva tvaṁ caivainaṁ prasādaya/ vivarṇavadano dīno na hi mām abhibhāṣate, śārīro mānaso vāpi kaccid enaṁ na bād hate, saṁtāpo vābhitāpo vā durlabhaṁ hi sadā sukham/ Mother! Have I committed any blundering slip up mistake due to which my father is serious with me! Kindly ask him to forgive me and get him back to normalcy. I find that today, father is not even looking at me properly, let alone talk to me endearingly; what indeed could have been the cause of this unusual abnormality for this grievous situation! Is either physical ailment or mental disturbance tormenting him! Even one always seeks normalcy in health it is but natural that human body is at times susceptible some times. kaccin na kiṁ cid bharate kumāre priyadarśane, śatrughne vā mahāsattve mātṛjñāṁ vā mamāśubham/ Trust that beloved Bharata or Mahabali Shatrughna or any of mothers Koushalya and Sumitra are happy and safe! yatomūlaṁ naraḥ paśyet prādurbhāvam ihātmanaḥ, katham tasmin na varteta pratyakṣe sati daivate/ kaccit te paruṣaṁ kiṁ cid abhimānāt pitā mama, ukto bhavatyā kopena yatrāśya lūlitaṁ manaḥ/ etad ācakṣva me devi tattvena paripṛcchataḥ, kiṁnimittam apūrvō 'yaṁ vikāro manuḥjādhipē/ All the human beings realise that their very origin is initiated from the fathers and they are the 'pratyakṣa devatas' or the readily visualizable Gods on earth and that is why his anger on me is deplorable. Devi! May I in all seriousness seek your kind reply as to why my father is disgusted with me! Atoṣayan mahārājam akurvan vā pitur vacaḥ, muhūrtam api neccheyāṁ jīvituṁ kupite nṛpe/ I am not prepared to live even for an hour or two as my father is unhappy with me out of his disgust! Then Kaikeyi replied to all the searching queries of Rama in sheer shamelessness as follows: Na Raja kupito Rama vyaśanam naasya kinchīna, kinchīna manogatam tasya thadbhayaannanubhashate/ Rama! Maha Raja is neither angry nor faced with any physical nor mental difficulty; but he is unable to express himself out of fear from you! Priyam tvaamapriyam vaktum vaanee naasya pravartate, tadavashyam tvayā kaaryam yadnenaashrutam mama/ You are his darling son and as such he is disabled to open his mouth to utter what you might not like to hear from him and out of sheer fear of you that he is keeping silent! Once in the past, he was so happy with me as I saved him in a battle when I happened to accompany him in his chariot and he gave me two boons and now having realised the serious impact of those boons, he is repentful when I am demanding their fulfillment now. At that time when he assured to gift the boons to me but now is unable to wriggle out of those promises. Could one withstand the rushing force of a flood with the building of a barrier now! Dharma moolamidam Rama viditam cha sataamapi, tat satyam na tyajet Rajaa kupitastvatkrute yatha/ Rama! Truth is the root of Virtue; now you are the root cause of that Truthfulness and Virtue-fulness and that is why the King's two options are to lose you or the virtue! Now, you may decide yourself either to forego the value of virtue or to keep it up aloft! Yadi tad vaksyate Rajaa shubham vaa yadiyaashubham, kariipyasi tatah sarvamaakhyaami punastavam/ Yadi tvabhihitam raagjnaa twayi tatra vipatyate, tatomabhidhaasyaami na yosha twayi vakshyati/ In case if the King desires to declare something- be that auspicious or otherwise- then if you are readily and heartily follow it in letter and spirit, then only I could reveal it, but not otherwise! If only you are able to bear what is the factual then only I could declare it for you vividly and clearly! As Kaikeyi blasted as above, Rama was stunned like a stone totally shaken up to the roots and stated: 'Aho Devi! You ought not to utter such statements from your mouth and tongue! If only the King orders me, I could jump into ferocious flames, happily consume deadly poison, and jump into the depths of an ocean! Maharaja is my guru, father, well wisher! On receiving his instructions, what all could I not be done for him. I am hereby swearing that his instruction be fulfilled against by life! Be it known firmly that Rama is not used to double speak ever!' Then Kaikeyi replied: the foremost fact was that in the context of 'Devasura samgrāma' when you were badly hurt by the arrows of the daitya then I saved him and gave me two precious boons and in turn I am claiming two boons: Tatra me yaachito Raja Bharatasya abhishechanam, gamanam dandakaaranyo tava chaadaiva

Raghava! Raghava! The first boon that I have desired is that Bharata be gifted with Rajabhisheka and the second boon would be that Rama be despatched to Dandakaranya. If you are truly and unhesitatingly seek to prove that you are a ‘Satyavaadi’ then you have the choice of being of ‘Pitru vaakya paripalaka’ or otherwise! Further, you too just now firmed up your vow then you ought to take these promises of the King accordingly! Sa nideśe pitus tiṣṭha yathā tena pratiśrutam, tvayāranyaṁ praveṣṭavyaṁ nava varṣāṇi pañca ca/ sapta sapta ca varṣāṇi daṇḍakāranyaṁ āśritaḥ, abhiṣekam imaṁ tyaktvā jaṭācīradharo vasa/ bharataḥ kosalapure praśāstu vasudhām imām, nānāratnasamākīrṇām savājjirathakuñjarām/ Thus you should proceed for Vana vaasa for fourteen years soon and allow Bharata’s rajyabhisheka! Raghunandana Rama! May you thus resolve the puzzle of your father the King of Ayodhya by upholding dharma and truthfulness and save your father’s longstanding reputation!’. As Kaikiyi had thus announced the ultimatum, Dasharatha with swollen eye lids and dried up face drooped his head in shame and could not attempt his face to be shown to Rama. Yet Rama kept his calm and mental equilibrium, while Dasharatha stood up totteringly crying away incessantly.

Shri Rama replied to Kaikeyi with poise and dignity: ‘Evam astu gamiṣyāmi vanam vastum aham tv atah, jaṭācīradharo rājñah pratijñam anupālayan/ Mother! What ever instruction that you have given to me would be most certainly carried out as per father’s wish and to uphold his decision. But, mother! why is my father who is an outstanding warrior with great strength of fortitude is remainig silent. He is my well wisher, mentor, and father and I am ever grateful to him all through my life. May I, if you do not mind, make this query! This doubt is arising as to why my father himself never expressed his desire to let Bharata be the next king! Aham hi sītām rājyam ca prāñān iṣṭān dhanāni ca, hr̥ṣṭo bhrātre svayam dadyām bharatāyāpracoditaḥ/ kiṁ punar manujendrena svayam pitrā pracoditaḥ, tava ca priyakāmārtham pratijñam anupālayan/ Even by your own instruction, I could have left this kingdom, discard Devi Sita, and even sacrifice my life without hesitation and even with joy! She further commented that his departure be acted upon at once, lest Dashratha would not be able to take his bath and food. As she commented thus: Dashratha heaved with long breathing shouted: ‘dhhikkara! What kind of misfortune has fallen onto me!’ and having said thus swooned and fell on his golden bed. Then ShriRama lifted his swooned father, arranged him in a lying posture and even as leaving for his travel to dandakaranya reacted to Kaikeyi’s heinous jibe that Rama’s departure if further delayed, his father might not take his bath and food as follows: ‘Devi! I would never wish to anchor my life for the sake of wealth. Kindly be assured that like Rishis I would value Dharma far beyond the reaches of wealth. I could any day discard even by life but not the values of virtue! Kindly remember this as my parting assurance. ‘Pitru agña paripalana’ of my father’s instruction happens to be my outstanding dharma and I esteem that far above my very life. Anukto 'py atrabhavatā bhavatyā vacanād aham, vane vatsyāmi vijane varṣāñiḥa caturdaśa/ na nūnam mayi kaikeyi kiṁ cid āśamsase guṇam, yad rājānam avocas tvaṁ mameśvaratarā satī/ Even if my faher has not instructed me to proceed for ‘aranya vaasa’ by himself , I deem that you have an equal authority to instruct me yourself. Please never hesitate to do so as you have yet to assess me deeper. Now I shall seek my mother Devi Kousalya’s blessings too forthwith and explain the position to Sita too before proceeding for ‘dandakaranya’. Kindly also explain the position suitably as he should assume kingship forthwith as a great relief to the revered father and seve hom in the old age as that is the traditionl virtue and of responsibility’. So saying to Devi Kaikeyi, Rama prostrated to the swooned father, touched the feet of Devi Kaikeyi and having circumabulated them both made an exit from the ‘antahpura’ the interiormost chamber even as Lakshmana as also were suppressing their anger and anguish. Rama then was mentally prepared and decided to proceed for the travel forthwith. The select gathering of friends, associates, and prominet citizens who were already aware of the meteor like stunning news of Rama’s departure for ‘dandakaranya’ instead of Rajyabhisheka were nonplussed with disbelief and dismay. Then Rama proceeded to Queen Koushalya’s palace with his charactersic equanimity and poise. Lakshmana too was suppressing his mental turmoil and accompanied Rama.

As the frightful news Rama's instantly proceeding to 'dandakaranya' and of Bharat's pattabhisheka subsequently was spread up like wild fire, there were talks that King Dasharatha had gone insensitive and even insane. From the queen's palaces there were loud and incessant 'aartanaadaas' or howls of cryings especially from the palaces of queens by their maids and male servants who had almost gone berserk like unruly herds of cows. Out of shame, King Dasharatha hid himself and so did the friends and relatives staying in the royal palaces from public interaction. Shri Rama then proceeded to his mother Devi Kaushalya's inner chambers accompanied by Lakshmana. While entering the queen's inner chamber, there were intimate servants and select visitors making 'Jaya jaya ninaadaas' or loud victory sounds and shouts of spontaneous sympathies. Select groups of elderly Vedagjna Pandithas raised their tones of 'vijayee bhava' or may Rama be ever victorious! The 'aantarangika' intimate and chosen women of the Prime Queen Devi Kausalya ran ahead to notify Shri Rama's arrival. The queen was awake through the previous night earnestly performing Vishnu Puja and was just concluding the 'aahutis' or offerings to Agni. Raghunandana Rama then realised that in that 'Deva Karya' she was surrounded by several 'puja dravyas' like curd, akshatas, ghee, modakas, havishya, dhaanya, white flower garlands, samidhas and naivedyas and kalasha patras with sacred waters of rivers. She was wearing a bright and white saree and was looking extremely tired due to 'raatri jagarana and upavaasa' or keeping awake the night long and fasting. It was in that condition as she was offering 'tarpana' to Devas of her faith, Devi Koushalya was nearing Rama like a female horse was nearing its colt. Rama prostrated and touched her feet and she had atonce hugged him with mother's love. She said: my darling son! May you be blessed with long life, glory and victory in what ever task you would handle. She said further: Maha Raja had decided to soon fulfill your rajyaabhisheka as the Yuva Raja ! Then she requested him to be seated comfortably first and take his food too. Thereafter having realised that he would have to at once proceed for 'dandakaranya' he initiated saying with folded hands: devi nūnaṁ na jānīṣe mahad bhayam upasthitam, idaṁ tava ca duḥkhāya vaidehyā lakṣmaṇasya ca/ caturdaśa hi varṣāṇi vatsyāmi vijane vane, madhumūlaphalair jīvan hitvā munivad āmiṣam/ bharatāya mahārājo yauvarājyaṁ prayacchati, mām punar daṇḍakāranyaṁ vivāsayati tāpasam/ 'Devi! You are indeed not aware that there is a huge danger awaiting you and on realising this, Sita too would be shaken up as you too. Now, I am destined to proceed to dandakaranya and now you are asking me be seated comfortably as I should be soon seated on a mat of 'kusha grass'! I would have now to discard the kingly pleasures now and be contented with 'kanda mula phala- pattas', or leaves and roots for food for fourteen years in thick forests. King Dasharatha had decided that Bharata be the King and I be despatched as a tapasvi to dandakaranya. As I have to leave for the forests now, would it not be proper to wear kusha grass clothing and be content with the food of roots and leaves.' On hearing the statement of Rama, Devi Kouslyia had collapsed with a shock like a massive 'salva vriksha' got smashed with a mighty axe, just as celestial woman was forced to fall down wilfully on earth! All through her life, she never was aware as to what the expression of misery had meant nor had ever experienced it all through her erstwhile life. She then sought Rama's assistance to stand some how as the latter sought to brush out the dust from her body. She then attempted to speak to Rama while Lakshmana was present too: ' My son Raghu nandana! I am now faced with such a tragedy that I would have liked to have been a childless barren woman and thart you were not born to me at all so that this pitiable condition would not have been encountered by me. A barren woman would perhaps been worried that a child were not born to her at all. Rama! I longed for and cherished the fulfillment of my ambition that even during my prime queenship, my husband would bestow the gift of my son's Rajyabhishekha and that I would have the privilege of being the 'Raja maata' while I would have reaped the advantages thereby. Now I would have to listen and bear the taunts and sneers of the forthcoming Queen Mother. Then what would happen when you should be away for very long! Women could never tolerate such a situation excepting misery and abusive slurs! Being excessively obsessed with his pretty and youngext wife, my husband has been passive with me for long time now. Now the situation would be far the worse especially her son Bharata would be the king. How indeed could I pass my time without your being away and Devi Kaikeyi would soon become harsh, fault finding and abusive towards me now on! Now your child hood and bachelorship were over and you had entered married life and I have been longing for peaceful and contented life ahead, but with no support from cognizable sources, how do you presume my daily life would not be a deathlike misery! Do you not realise that with growing age and with no possible support, you mother would be left away to doom and death! My son! Do you not realise that I observed frequent fastings, Deva Pujas, bringing you up the extraordinary care, helping and guiding the helpless men and women, and countless deeds of virtue, but is there a return now when I am in dire need for myself. sthiraṁ tu hṛdayaṁ manye mamedam yan na dīryate, prāvṛṣīva mahānadyāḥ sprṣṭam kūlam navāmbhasā/ mamaiva nūnaṁ maraṇam na vidyate; na cāvakaśo 'sti yamakṣaye mama, yad antako 'dyaiva na mām jihīṛṣati; prasahya sīmho rudatīm mṛgīm iva/ Rama! Indeed my heart is like a stone bearing what all has befallen to me; in fact, it is like a boulder withstanding the unusual force of heavy rains originated from high mountains! Most essentially learnt lesson of my life is that what all the outcome of lifelong vrata-daana-limb controls are a mere waste. The long and deep meditations that were made for good progeny proved to be like sowing seeds for reaping wasteful dry grass. I should be like a helpless old cow without the support of a male calf, ever waiting for Yama Raja to be kind and lift me up with death soon for relief from my bondage!

Lakshmana gets agitated at the turn of the events and so did Kousalya but Rama assuages their badly hurt psyche, but Rama explains that ‘pitru vaakya paripaalana’ ought to be his life’s motto and dharma.

As Devi Kousalya was describing of the fate of a helpless woman, Lakshmana sought to cut short her description of another type of a woman with a knife laced with honey edges. He explained that Shri Rama too was most unhappy with the ongoing happenings but the nature in another type of womanhood as of Kaikeyi had become overwhelming for the father. ‘ Elder mother! you must please understand that firstly father has become old and lost balance of mind along with his analytical power. Secondly, he is under the control of Kamadeva. I am totally convinced that Rama is above board and does not deserve to be humiliated and banished for fourteen hard years of jungle life by any stretch of imagination but is bound by the dictum of ‘pitru vaakya paripalana thus he having become a victim of circumstances being tied up tightly with principles. Now, as regards King Dasharatha, you ought to be aware that as to which father who has the great reputation of being an outstanding reputation of courage, diplomacy and enormous love for Rama would have ever imagined of banishing his own son especially as the latter is a soft, clean minded, self controlled and even passive for his sworn enemies! All the same, how indeed such reputed King could have taken a childish decision is due to the huge pressure on his mind’. Thus Lakshmana sought to soften the troubled psyche of Devi Kousalya. Then Lakshmana addressed Shri Rama: ‘Raghu veera! When you hold and lift up your dhanush and stand straight up like Yama Raja with extreme concentration to destroy the enemy, who do you think that stands beside you for defence behind and who else do you realise that along with you would by complementing and multiplying your arrows and suffocate the opposing forces. In case either Bharata or his co defending champions fight against you or me, then the again the entire Ayodhya could be dismantled into splintered pieces. If an eventuality might arise that Kaikeyi encourages violence against you, then I am prepared to throw her into prison even against the will of the King Dasharatha! Raghunandana! How dare one could oppose me and that Bharata to be made the King. *Anurakto 'smi bhāvena bhrātaram devi tattvataḥ, satyena dhanuṣā caiva datteneṣṭena te śape/ dīptam agnim aranyaṁ vā yadi rāmaḥ pravekṣyate, praviṣṭaṁ tatra mām devi tvam pūrvam avadhāraya/ harāmi vīryād duḥkhaṁ te tamaḥ sūrya ivoditaḥ, devī paśyatu me vīryaṁ rāghavaś caiva paśyatu/*My senior mother! I swear on my truthfulness, my dhanush, the charities that I have given away and so on, believe me that I admire and love Rama for ever! I could jump into flames for his sake even as we are about to enter into deep, thick and dingy jungles! Then the bravery and fortitude of Rama as supplemented by my own too should protect you from any eventuality of sorrow and helplessness like the brightness of Sun smashes darkness’. As Lakshmana assuaged Kousalya’s pitiable condition and fright, she stated: ‘My son Rama! As I am strengthened by Lakshmana’s assurances, I am being slowly getting somewhat relieved of my distress and dismay. As such, I leave you to abide by your own volition and may decide as per your considered judgment. Yet at the same time, you are no doubt aware that ‘seva’ to mother would be as per dharma. yathaiva rājā pūjyas te gauraveṇa tathā hy aham, tvām nāham anujānāmi na gantavyam ito vanam/ tvadvīyogān na me kāryaṁ jīvitena sukhena vā, tvayā saha mama śreyas tṛṇānām api bhakṣaṇam/ yadi tvam yāsyasi vanaṁ tyaktvā mām śokalālasām, aham prāyam ihāsiṣye na hi śakṣyāmi jīvitum/ Just as you are proud and respectful of your father, so ought to be of your mother. I might not be able to instruct you to get lost into the forests, but surely request you not go to the forests. In case you decide not to accede to my request, I find to reason to my carry on with my life. If you leave me behind like this, then I should keep on fasting for days or months and fall dead.’ Then Rama replied: ‘ Dear adored mother! May I place my head down at your feet. I have no capability and audacity to negate father’s instructions and have no option but to go to dandakaranya as that would tantamount to ‘go hatya’. There was the instance of Vidvan Kandu Muni on receiving the instruction of his father never hesitated to perform ‘go hatya’! *asmākaṁ ca kule pūrvam sagarasyājñayā pituḥ, khandabhiḥ sāgarair bhūtim avāptaḥ sumahān vadhaḥ/ jāmādagnyaena rāmeṇa reṇukā janatī svayam, kṛtā paraśunārāṇye pitur vacanakāriṇā/*Our heritage and ancestry has been such that by the instruction of Sagara Chakravarti, his son and even the latter lineage of King’s of Bhagiratha were never contented to dig up earth and secure Akasha Ganga to Patala to purify the souls of the ancestors. Also, Bhargava Rama the son of Maharshi followed the instruction and killed his own mother!

[Vishleshana on 1. Bhagiratha and 2. Parashu Rama . Bhagiratha: Emperor Sagara performed Asvamedha (Horse) Sacrifice and Indra hid the horse which was discovered by the unruly 60,000 sons of Sagara, nearby the place where Sage Kapila was practising Sankhaya Yoga and when disturbed badly, the Sage burnt all of them into ashes by his power. Sagar's another son Ansuman pursued the search of the Sacrificial Horse and found the Horse where Kapila was in meditation. Ansuman begged of the Sage about the whereabouts of his cousins and was informed that the hooligans were burnt to death and could be brought back to life only when washed by the River of Ganges which could only be brought down to Earth from the Skies. The Sacrifice of Horse having been performed by Sagara, Ansuman began his devotion to Lord Siva to bring Ganges down to Earth. But neither he nor his father Dilipa could succeed in the mission. It was for Bhagiradha to pursue the operation further. His life's mission was to bring Ganges down to Earth from Heavens. Bhagiradha's prayers were indeed granted by Mother Ganges to the devotee but warned him that the force of the flow from the Heavens to Earth could be withstood by no less than Lord Siva Himself! Bhagiradha never stopped his grand endeavour and worshipped Lord Siva with austerity and purity who agreed, not only because of the sincerity with which the devotee desired to fulfill the long-standing family wish but also owing to the reason of Universal advantage. The Lord assumed a massive body and controlled the force of the River flowing from Lord Vishnu's feet and bore the brunt of the impact on His head in His 'Jatajut' or twisted hairs and released but a portion of the Holy River. Bhagiradha directed the fiery flow by riding a fast Chariot and brought it to the place where the ashes of his forefathers were purified and their souls liberated to Heavens. Maha Bhagavata)

Parashu Raama was a paradigm of paternal devotion and destruction of Evil. In the lineage was born Jamadagni and his wife Renuka gave birth to their youngest son Parasu Rama or Rama with an axe. He destroyed the whole clan of contemporary Kings who were tyrants and cruel to their Subjects. Devi Renuka the mother of Parasurama reached a River for bathing and found a Gandharva King too bathing with his wives. She had a slight fascination of the Gandharva in her mind. This was noticed by Jamadagni and as she returned from the river-bed ordered her head to be chopped. Son Parasurama killed his mother with his axe instantly even as an evil-feeling of mind was felt by her. Sage Jamadagni appreciated the spontaneous action and asked for a boon to Parasurama and the latter requested that his mother be brought to life again. Such was the paternal devotion and fearlessness of Parasurama who re-established Dharma and valour. Maha Bhagavata]

Shri Rama continued: 'There were many instances of 'Pitru VakyaParipalana' down the ages being fully aware of the risks of blatant 'adharma' like digging the earth deep, 'go hatya' and even 'maatru hatya'! Naaham dharmapurvam te pratikulam pravartaye, purvairabhipreto gato maargonugamyate/ Therefore, dear mother, I am not diverging from the established principles of dharma which my ancestors, or Rishis or Maha Panditas had traversed along in the past. Tadetat tu mayaa kaaryam kriyate bhuvi naanyathaa, piturhi vachanam kurvan na kaschinnaama heeyate/ I am faithfully following the most appropriate path destined and prescribed for me and nothing contrary to it. Whosoever would follow the instructed path chosen for my father should be indestructible howsoever frightful and heinous that might be!' Having thus reiterated his decision of 'aranya vaasa', Rama addressed Lakshmana as follows: 'Brother Lakshmana! I am fully seized of your attachment for me and am your valour, bravery and indomitable energy. Mother Koushalya is highly agitated and is unable to overcome it. She is still not able to appreciate the values of dharma, satya, dama, and kshama or virtue-truthfulness- self restraint and forgiveness. You are aware of the value of dharma on earth in which truthfulness is embedded into. Father's directive to me is a component of dharma. Persons of faith and worthy significance have the duty of complying with and obeying the instructions of father, mother, guru and the learned. Veera Lakshmana! That is why father's considered instruction could not be transgressed as explained in his presence by no uncertain terms by Devi Kaikeyi. That is why those who abide by the 'kshaatra dharma' ought to discard the so called common sense, anchor to dharma and soften the resistance and attitudinal rigidity.' Having thus firming up his resolute action, he bent down at his mother's feet once again and said: Anumanyasva maam Devi! gamishyaantamito vanam, shaapitaasi mama praanaih kuru svastyanaani me/Devi! I will proceed to the forests and give me your permission with best your wishes for 'swasti' and farewell. Just as Rajarshi Yayati in the past had abandoned swarga and returned to earth, I too take a vow that I shall most certainly return to Ayodhya.! Shokam sandhaaryataam maatarhridaye

saadhu maa shuchah, vanavaasaadi haishyaami punah kritvaa piturvachah/ Dear mother! do very kindly suppress your anguish and do not cry away; after obeying the instructions of revered father, I will most certainly return back to Ayodhya! My sincere advice to you, to me, to Sita, to Lakshman, and Mother Sumitra too that we ought not to transgress the wishes of dear father and that indeed is the ‘sanaatana dharma’ the age old and time less principle! Mother! do not yet discard all items meant for the Rajyabhisheka but do please suppress your emotions, have the items required for my forest life to be offered to me and kindly allow me to exit for now. As Rama had thus unemotionally and convincingly assuaged the most disturbed psyche of his mother, the latter had somewhat recovered and said: ‘dear son! In the context of dharma I am also visualising the inevitable and sudden occurrences; but indeed could I survive in your absence. You should not have left me away in this way. How could I survive in your absence! Of which worth are all these fastings, pujas and jagaranas! What have I achieved now excepting of a ‘jeevan mrityu’ or of the form of a dead aliveness!’ Then Devi Kousalya addressed Lakshmana and said: ‘I am no doubt aware of your valour and deep attachment to Rama but you are also a party to this mess and are putting me and Sumitra too subjecting us to untold misery. I am fully seized of the outstanding significance of Dharma per se, but are ignoring the other aspects of dharma like bharya dharma-artha dharma-and kaama dharma and these three essential aspects of dharma. ‘Atthi satkara’ along with one’s wife is dharma; like wise, execution in the form of one’s beloved wife is kaama dharma; putra prapti and subsequent attainment post life is dharma. Dharma encompasses discharge of artha-kama-mokshas of the Purusharthas. Dharma against the rudimentary precepts of ‘purusharthas’ is that which is devoid of meaningful life and be worthy of being discarded. I am aware the a father figure is of uniqueness but the directives given by him out of infatuation, or mental disability, or prejudice, or anger are worthy of discarding; the carry outs of such mental aberrations of a father are not prodharma but its negations. Kumara Lakshmana! Remember, while following the instruction of a cruel father, then one should seek to the considered advises of the mother or a guru.’ As Kousalya was prompting Lakshmana like wise, Rama tried to somehow divert the attention of both of them; indeed, he felt her genuine expressions of agony at the misfortune befallen on her suddenly and over night, especially from the peaks of the erstwhile rejoicement. But since he had made up his mind with his firm decision he felt that he would have liked to somehow moved out prostrating and circumambulating thrice before his departure along with Lakshmana. He then addressed Lakshmana as a diversion.

Rama asked Lakshmana to remove all the preparatory materials like the vessels etc. meant for his Rajyabhisheka since that would be unwanted then

As the Rama Rajyabhisheka was cancelled, Lakshmana was utterly frustrated and disgusted psychologically and was looking like a fumingly mad elephant king with restless and roving eyes. But Shri Rama was cool and composed with self control as though nothing had gone amiss and addressed Lakshmana with no feeling of ill will: 'Lakshmana! Be normal and unflustered; what all the materials many of which were expensive and rare with studiousness and patience have been collected and acquired for the Rajyabhisheka be please disposed off and instead collect the simple paraphernalia for our journey for settlement into the forests. There should not be any remnants and traces of whatever material and arrangements had been collected and made which Kaikeyi would not have liked be please dismantled and disappeared. I would not like any delay in wiping away the traces of neither the material nor the memories even. She should not be disturbed with sad memories of men and women frantically collecting material and pre arrangements. Lakshmana! I might have offended my mothers or father in the past on some occasions unknowingly or unrealisingly for which I am regretful. Especially, father has been tormented by the fright of death! May that fear be kept far aloof! In case my 'rajyabhisheka' was not stalled and that I have not have proceeded to forests forthwith, then that feeling of death might have been doubled up. Lakshmana! Abhiṣekavidhānam tu tasmāt samhṛtya lakṣmaṇa, anvag evāham icchāmi vanam gantum itaḥ punaḥ/ mama pravṛjānād adya kṛtakṛtyā nṛpātmaajā, sutaṁ bharatam avyagram abhiṣecayitā tataḥ/ It is due to these reasons that I wish to remove traces of my rajyabhisheka and proceed with no further loss of time to the forests. On my exit, may mother Kaikeyi be contented and with the least apprehensions commence Bharata's rajyabhisheka with comfort and peace of mind! As I am shortly dressed up in deer skin and with dishevelled hair with a 'jataajuta' on head, then she should me contented. I do not really disappoint her as she is merely following my fate which Brahma has destined for me. This eventuality must therefore be construed as an act of God only to be reconciled with and obeyed. Other wise how could Kaikeyi have thought of this occurrence! Soumya Lakshmana! Do not you recall the times when I had never realised any feeling of difference of my mother and the other mothers and vice versa too and similarly the sons were affectionate to all the mothers and brothers as a well knit family. But the act of God made the difference of Kaikeyi's mind and used such deplorable language as from a lowly woman while attacking the father. Yad acintyaṁ tu tad daivaṁ bhūteṣv api na hanyate, vyaktaṁ mayi ca tasyām ca patito hi viparyayaḥ/ kaś cid daivena saumitre yoddhum utsahate pumān, yasya na grahaṇaṁ kiṁ cit karmaṇo 'nyatra dṛśyate/sukhaduhkhe bhayakrodhau lābhālābhau bhavābhavau, yasya kiṁ cit tathābhūtaṁ nanu daivasya karma tat/ As has now happened is what God has willed. None of the Beings on earth or even those in the upper lokas could neither foresee nor stall what has been willed by the directive of Vidhaata and thus prompted Kaikeyi to provoke and influence father. Indeed, when the time arrives for either joy or sorrow, the fruits of the erstwhile 'karma' of a Being become irresistible and no force on earth or the universe in totality. Sukha-dukkhas, bhaya-krodhas, utpatti vinaashas are inexplicable as one experiences and are thus the Acts of the Unknown.

[Bhagavad Gita Stanza 56 of Sankhya Yoga is quoted: Duhkeshvanudvignamānaḥ suksheshu vigataspruḥaḥ, veetaraaga bhaya krodhaḥ sthitadheer- muniruchyate/ Getting terribly agitated while facing insurmountable impediments and getting extremely overjoyed by very joyous experiences is the negation of an equanimous mind and the ability to neutralise the emotions. One's capacity to neutralise the inner emotions of pleasures and pains alike is the State of 'Sthitapagñantva'! Sorrows and joys are the consequences of discontent and of success. The vicious circle of discontentment leads to disappointment which itches on the fear of failure. This creates irritability, fear, anguish, anger, and back to dissatisfaction of life. Sadhakas realise that without Shiva's approval even an ant or insect would not do harm. And 'Shivaagjna' is on account of one's own doings of the previous births and of the ongoing one, besides the estimated future foretellings too. The Karma Sutra explains: Avashyamanubhoktavyam sthitam karma shubhamashubham/ or our own 'karma phala' or the sweetness or sourness of the fruit is reciprocated. That firm belief of hope or disappointment as the case that may be, is the 'Atma Swarupa' which certainly not is the body but the Self Consciousness of the concerned body which is clean and transparent and indestructible and eternal.]

Shri Rama thus exhorted Lakshmana: May all the materials and arrangements made for my Rajyabhisheka be expunged and destroyed traceless and never even feel that the root cause of this confusion and chaos is Kaikeyi but an act of the Unknown.

As Rama instructed to remove all the materials and expunge all the traces of the erstwhile proposal of Rama Rajyabhisheka, Lakshmana took to long and heavy breathing with indescribable anguish and fury like a cobra pulled out of its deep outlet and like a lion raged from its cave. He shook his head like a reluctant king of elephants throwing its trunk up, down and sideways and saw Rama's face and said: 'My dear brother! You might be thinking that a section of the public might perhaps be feeling that how could you be a king of virtue in case you defy the instruction of the father. You might also be thinking that in case you might not be following the paternal instruction, others too might follow your example and that in this manner the principle of dharma might get degraded! You are also talking in terms of 'daivika nirṇaya' and taking umbrage under the garb of one's fate on the principle of 'as you sow, so you reap'! Does not this kind of psychology tantamount to escapism and even helplessness. This is another form of 'asamardhata' or lack of courage and assertiveness. Why are we concerned of the likely criticism of sinful sections of the society! Is 'dharma' the reversal of 'nyaya' or of mutual complementarity! Raghunandana! Why are you of proven background of fame and valour taking umbrage of fate as after all such beginnings of fate might as well have taken the forms of non starters! Kindly pardon my inability to follow your unjustifiable instructions! Rama Prabhu! You are being carried away by the instruction of the father under the cover and clothing dress of dharma, and I am still not convinced. Surely you are yourself be of two-mindedness and as father himself too should not have been too, but got succumbed equally so as per the misleading interpretation of dharma of which Kaikeyi herself was neither a believer nor a follower. But she took advantage of father's weak mindedness which with equal weakness that you too are following up like a sheep following another! Indeed it is time to get out of this vicious circle. I am still not convinced that father and mother were standing in the way of your Rajyabhisheka owing to 'Daivika Prerana' or the celestial decision and even if you are so convinced, still that would be challenged by me. viklavo vīryahīno yaḥ sa daivam anuvartate, vīrāḥ sambhāvitātmāno na daivam paryupāsate/ Only those who are timid, nervous and apprehensive take the coverage under lucklessness and misfortune but are unable to vindicate with desisive and resolute action. yair vivāśas tavāraṇye mitho rājan samarthitāḥ, araṇye te vivatsyanti caturdaśa samās tathā/ ahaṁ tadāśāṁ chetsyāmi pitus tasyāś ca yā tava, abhiṣekavighātena putrarājyāya vartate/ madbalena viruddhāya na syād daivabalaṁ tathā, prabhaviṣyati duḥkhāya yathograhāṁ pauraṣaṁ mama/ Rajan! I would take a 'pratigjna' or vow that just as the tides of an ocean would never cross the boundaries, your kingdom too would be saved by me for ever. Therefore, kindly do let me be allowed to retain the materials for your 'rajyabhisheka'. My hands are not merely meant as symbolic brightness nor my dhanush and sword but are truly and genuinely meant for destroy the enemy and once as I am convinced that a person is an enemy, I could never leave without destruction. Once I hold my sparkling sword is lifted up by my arms, it might be presumed as of Indra the 'vajra dhaari' himself. As its mighty punch gets hit, elephants and horses are torn to pieces like thunderous clouds on the sky. Rama! Why do you not insrtuct me here and now, to sift the two categories of your true followers and enemies and remove traces of the latter. Having heard the heated up emotions of Lakshmana as above, Shri Rama reiterated his forceful descisiveness and said: Soumya! Do please understand that I am firm in my resolve to truthfully follow the instructions of my parents as this is the singular path to be followed most assertively.

Meanwhile, Devi Kousalya continued her expressions of frustration and anguish with interterminal weeping and unclear low voice said: how could I ever survive this shock of life by realising that Rama would have to survive by counting each morsel of uncooked rice, roots and fruits while even servants and maids would be eating well flavored and tasty food each day. Could Maharaja Dasharatha banish for forest life the cynosure of the Kakutstha heritage and shake up in the deep sleep of one and all of even the public! Undoubtedly the entire public would be ready to follow Rama to forests voluntarily and with gratitude for ensuring their life safe, happy and with dharma. His popularity comes from the depths of their thoughts and deeds as the ideal most human being. My unbearable anguish is like red hot fire fanned my forceful winds of helplessness. It is due to my desperation that my heavy breathing too is like a furnace of an irrevocable disaster. katham hi dhenuḥ svam vatsam gacchantam nānugacchati, aham tvānugamiṣyāmi yatra putra gamiṣyasi/ Beloved son! As normally a cow takes its steps forward and its calf follows the mother's tail; but in this case, as you proceed I shall follow you footsteps. As Kousalya was crying away her heart out, Rama said: dear mother! Kaikeyi has no doubt brought over this disaster by provoking my helpless father any way. Now, in this way if you too desert him, how indeed could he survive! Bhartuḥ kila parityāgo nṛṣaṃsaḥ kevalam striyāḥ, sa bhavatyā na kartavyo manasāpi vigarhitaḥ/ yāvaj jīvati kākutsthaḥ pitā me jagatīpatiḥ, śuśrūṣā kriyatām tāvat sa hi dharmāḥ sanātanaḥ/ Leaving behind a helpless and aged husband would doubtless be the most cruel and heartless act for a woman of virtue. Even a single flash of such thought should be most abhorable and the meanest since that would pave the way of his ruinous disaster! As long as he the the jewel of the Kakutsa Vamsha Maha Raja Dasharatha survives, it is your golden duty to serve that glorious husband of yours. Instantly, Devi acquiesced with compliance and got heart broken again. Then Rama exhorted his mother: 'Revered father's instruction is an equal duty; more so, he is the King, master of his subjects, peerless guide, our Ishvara and the unquestioned over lord. My dearest mother! As far as I am concerned, I should like to visit and tour the proverbial and massive 'dandakaranya' and return with fame and pride, even as your memories and thoughts are deep rooted in my innermost self always.' As Rama thus assuaged the tormented Devi Kousalya's psyche, he stated further: 'My dearmost mother! do you not realise that on her entire life long, a woman of 'Pativratya' esteem the husband as a Devata and Ishvara, just as I ought to consider both of you as my prized and priceless possessions! As long as the great and celebrated King Dasharatha is alive, never think you are an 'anaatha' or helpless. Further, bharataś cāpi dharmātmā sarvabhūtapriyamvadaḥ, bhavatīm anuvarteta sa hi dharmarataḥ sadā/ Bharata too is a 'dharmaatma' or the symbol of dharma and nyaya, who is known for helping each and every individual and be assured of special 'seva' and considered service for you. From the view point of outstanding stree dharma, maintain the 'vrata-upaasa' routine and attend to the service to husband which surely concretizes the path of heaven and to the contrary pulls down to the 'atho lokas'. Do follow this as a routine and await my return with patience and faith in Almighty. If only the Great King, my dear and most venerable father were to await my return, that should be deemed as my greatest gift of my life! As Rama sought to explain and convince his mother, she made great efforts to stop her incessant cryings and said: My heroic and peerless son of my unique pride! May your 'aranya vaasa' bestow supreme self confidence with epic like success, victory and safe return with such vindication that mankind and mother earth had never witnessed.

With great difficulty, Rama finally convinces Kousalya to let him leave for 'vana vaasa' and she relented finally

Then having finally, albeit reluctantly, given permission to Rama to leave for ‘vana vaasa’, Devi Kousalya accorded ‘mangalacharana’ as a mark of sending him off with auspiciousness and best blessings and stated: Raghukula bhushana! Now nothing would prevent you from proceeding and keep on treading only on the path of dharma followed by men of high virtue. At the same time, you should always be vigilant and keep safe from risks and dangers. My son, you have all been visiting temples of Deva- Devis and ashramas of Maharshis; may all of them provide security at every moment. May all the ‘astrshastra vidyas’ so meticulously taught to you by Brahmarshi Vishvamitra provide constant protection to you. May your inborn traits of ‘pita-sushrysha’ - ‘maata seva’ - ‘satya paalana’ provide constant safety. Nara shreshtha! May samidhas-kusha grasaa-pavitris- yajna vedis-puja mandiras-deva puja related places and temples - parvatas- trees- plants- water bodies- birds- serpents- and lions in the forests too extend protection. May Saandhyas-Vaishva Devas- Marud ganas - and Maharshis be vigilant to accord constant protection and so do Dhata- Vidhata-Pusha-Bhaga-Aryamas. May Indra-Ashta Loka Paalakaas- Shat Ritus- and Kala maana of years-months- days and nights- kshana kshanas provide you auspiciousness. May Shruti- Smriti-and Dharma ensure your well being. To Skanda Deva- Soma-Brihaspati- Saptarshis- and Brahmarshi Narada , may I seek Rama’s welfare at every minute. My son! May I make appeals to Siddha ganas, ashta dishas, and dik palakas for Rama’s protection constantly. My earnest submissions to all the mountains, oceans, Varuna Deva, Dyuloka, Antariksha, Prithivi, Vaayu, charaachara praanis, the entirety of nakshatras, nava grahas, dusks and dawns to grant safety to Rama. May the eternal Kala Devata bestow safety to my son constantly. May he not be concerned even for a minute of any fright or panic from the fearful Rakshasas- Pishachas-and cruel animals. May not the deep jungles infested with lions, tigers, wolves , cunning foxes, poisonous snakes, and even ants and mosquitos give any type of trepidation to my son Rama. Then having pleaded all possible sources of vigil and safety, Devi Koushalya blessed Rama thus: āgamās te śivāḥ santu sidhyantu ca parākramāḥ, sarvasampattayo rāma svastimān gaccha putraka/ svasti te ’stv āntarikṣebhyaḥ pāṛthivebhyaḥ punaḥ punaḥ, sarvebhyaś caiva devebhyo ye ca te paripanthinaḥ/Dear son! May all the ways and means bestow auspiciousness to you; your intrepidity and treasures of virtue ensure your welfare! My best wishes and blessings to you for your travel and safe return. Swasti to you from the celestials, from earth and thereunder, and even from your enemies. Rama! The ‘dandakaranya’ that you are about to enter is governed by Shukra-Soma-Surya-Kubera and Yama; may I make sincere appeals to ensure safety, comfortable stay and safe return back to Ayodhya. Similarly, may Agni-Vayu- and Rishis enable Rama to steadfastly remember and recite during his worships, snaana-aachananas and so on’. So stating , Kousalya concluded her pujas, and formally performed the worship of Homagni for invoking various Devas in the presence of Ritviks and Veda Panditas and gave the ‘Prasaada’ to Rama Lakshmanas, while the latter gave away dakshinas and new clothes to the veda brahmanas. Yan maṅgalaṁ sahasrākṣe sarvadevanamaskṛte, vṛtranāśe samabhavat tat te bhavatu maṅgalam/ yan maṅgalaṁ suparṇasya vinatākalpayat purā, amṛtaṁ prārthayānasya tat te bhavatu maṅgalam/The according of ‘Mangalacharana’ in that context was indeed memorable by Devi Koushalya along with the innumerable ritvikas and veda panditas was reminiscent of what Sahasra netra dhari Mahendra’s auspicious send off in the context of killing Vritrasura or that of Vinata Devi to her son Garuda secure ‘Amrita’! Subsequently, Devi Koushalya drew dear Rama near to her with love and deep attachment and blessed him again and again and stated to proceed with safe return with suppressed feelings and low-hoarse-shaky and murmuring tone, while Rama with stoic placidity made repeated ‘pradakshinas’ and ‘paada namaskaaraas’ repeatedly to mother and proceeded to Devi Sita’s ‘Mahal’.

[Vishleshanas: 1. on Vritrasura- Dadhiti-Indra - 2. Vinata - Garuda- Amrita: 1) Indra’s Court is a masterpiece of the Universe, with Indra as a cynosure, surrounded by several semi-Gods and seated along with him by Sachi Devi. Guru Brihaspati, the Great Guide and Teacher of all the Subjects of the Court was among the Principal Advisor. In this ideal setting unfortunately, Brihaspati felt humiliated by Indra, as due respect to a Spiritual Master was not paid to him as Indra started cutting short and interrupting the Guru often. In course of time, Brihaspati stopped attending the Court. Indra no doubt apologised to the Guru, but the Guru did not relent. Lord Brahma called Indra and reprimanded him for his follies and had to look for an alternative. At the request of Demi-Gods, Brahma then appointed Visvarupa, the son of Diti’s daughter Rachana and Prajapati Tvasta. In course of time, Indra got suspicious of the intentions of Visvarupa, the newly appointed Guru of Devatas; although Visvarupa was the son of Prajapati Tvastha, his mother Rachana was the daughter of Diti whose credentials were of Demons. While performing ‘Homams’/ ‘Yagnas’, he was in the habit of reciting the offerings to Fire God meant for Indra, Varuna and other Devatas loudly, but offered ‘Ghee’(classified butter) secretly to demons as well. Also, Visvarupa who had three heads, used to consume ‘Soma Ras’(Nectar) with one mouth, another with Wine and the third one with food. In a fit of rage, Indra killed Visvarupa, despite the knowledge that killing a Brahmin Priest would attract heavy penalty which was cleared by suitable means eventually.. On learning what Indra did, Tvastha performed high-quality spiritual ceremonies with a view to avenge the death of his son. As a result, a huge, frightful figure emerged from the Fire-pit, who looked like capable of destroying the entire Universe. Tvasta named the giant demon as Vritra, as he was the product of enormous asceticism covering all the planetary systems. The entire army of Devas, headed by Indra, pulled out their collective strength pitted against the one man militia of Vritra to no avail. They had to, in fact, run in different directions in sheer self defence. Finally they made a group prayer to Lord Vishnu for a quick solution as Vritra was growing in power minute by minute. The divine response came that Sage Dadhichi could only help retrieve the ugly situation. The Sage assimilated spiritual knowledge and passed on the same to Asvini Devatas who attained the position of Jeevan Muktha (Liberation in life itself). The Mantras, including Narayana Kavacha was passed on to Prajapati Tvasta who in turn passed it on to his son Visvarupa too. The Narayana Kavacha fortified the body of Sage Dhadhichi and only the backbone of the Sage could help to put an end to Vritra. The Devas thus made a collective prayer to Dadhichi to spare his body for the noble cause of ending Vritrasura. Dadhichi consented and his back- bone was converted into a mighty Thunderbolt by the Divine Architect, Viswakarma. A ferocious battle followed then, when Satya Yuga was ending and Threta Yuga was being ushered in, as the entire force of powerful Demons headed by Vritrasura on one side and the mighty Demi Gods headed by Indra seated on ‘Airavatha’ - the Heavenly Elephant- fortified in his arms with the thunderbolt made out of Dhadhichi’s back bone prepared by Viswakarma. Before using the Thunderbolt, Vritrasura became furious and fought Indra on one to one basis. He tormented and put Indra to shame. He taunted Indra to say that he made the heinous crime of killing a Holy Brahmin, Viswarupa and got away from the sin in a surreptitious manner. He cursed Indra and told that he was a coward and culpable. Without the Thunderbolt he would have been reprehensible. Vritrasura further said ‘Almighty in His enormous Wisdom showed the way to kill me to stabilise order in the Universe and that the kind of death which has been awarded to me by Super Force Himself is my reward and not a punishment, as He is the Creator, Preserver and Destroyer and His decision is ultimate.’ By so saying Vritrasura invited the Thunderbolt to attain Salvation. Thus ended the memorable story of Vritrasura into the pages of the Great Puranas. When Vritrasura attained ‘Moksha’, all the Celestial Planets, Demi-Gods, Gandharvas and so on praised his valour, but Indra was the single being who was remorseful as he had the Guilt Complex to have killed two Brahmins, Visvarupa and Vritrasura. Indra’s sinful reaction was chased by a feeling that a Chandala woman of old age suffering from untouchable diseases, till Indra ran away to Manas Sarovar, the abode of Goddess Lakshmi. When

Demi-Gods, and Sages advised Indra to attain freedom from the sin to perform the Yagna of Asvamedha or Sacrifice of Horse in Vedic Method then only Indra got absolved of the sin.(Sources: Maha Bhagavata and Devi Bhagavata Puranas)

2: Vinata-Garuda-Amrita: Vinata and Kadru were among the two wives of Kashyapa Muni. Kadru hatched thousands of eggs creating snakes while Vinata hatched only two. Vinata broke one egg and found a child named Aruna but was deformed. Eventually Aruna became the charioteer of Surya Deva. In a mutual bet, Vinata and Kadru out of playfulness; the bet was as to which colour was of Uchchaishrava the celestial horse born during ksheera saagara mathana; Vinata replied that the horse was white but the bet was lost since the horse's tail was black. Vinata lost the bet and became Kadru's servant and served her as also the progeny of snakes. The second son of Vinata named Garuda too was born weak with a beak and wings like an eagle but with the features of a human. As Garuda grew up he noticed that his mother was a slave and did all the domestic work including looking after the snake children. The latter used to tauntingly address Garuda as the son of Vinata and order him to give him rides on the sky. One day, Garuda was ordered by Kadru to take all her snake children to a near by island while Vinata should carry herself. In anger and disgust Garuda carried the snake children too high on the sky and the latter were half burnt by the heat of Surya Deva. Then as the snake kids screamed and Kadru prayed to Indra who instantly saved them by rain showers. On landing back, Garuda told the serpent kids that he could keep on taking to many islands but on the condition that her mother be freed from the slavery. But Vinata disagreed and asked Garuda to strengthen his body by reaching Himalayas and lifting big tortoises and elephants to eat. Garuda did so and eventually made his body mighty and invincible. One day he found an elephant and tortoises and having lifted them, placed the preys on a strong branch of a huge tree to settle down and eat. But Vāṁśasthī Sages of miniature sizes hanging down the branch realised that the massive bird could fly them down to an island near by and befriended them by calling it as 'Garuda' or the one who could lift up massive loads. He helped them and they suggested to approach swarga on the high skies to secure amrit for longevity. As Garuda was nearing Swarga, Indra got concerned about the mighty sky and ran to Brihaspati. The latter, having realised the purpose of Garuda to lift amrita drops, alerted all the Devas including Vayu- Varuna- Agni-and so on and even the vajrayudha of Indra could not stop Garuda who finally did secure a pot of amrit and desired that his mother be freed from her slavery too. On way back, Vishnu appeared and smilingly offered that he could be his 'vaahana' for ever.!]

As Rama departed Kouslaya's 'Rani Vaasa' and moved on to the Raja Marga, the public was yet not perhaps fully aware of the impending eventuality; even Devi Sita was not aware but just having completed her puja was planning to complete the finishing touches ahead. As he was entering the 'antahpura' or the inner chamber, Rama was looking profound and ruminating with his chin down. On noticing his entry, Devi Sita stood up and offered a seat. She noticed that his behavior and conduct were not normal. She became a little restless and asked him as to what has the matter. Dharmatma Shri Rama was fighting to control his emotions. She asked as to what could have occurred to disturb his balance. She said that at the arrival of Pushya nakshatra, veda panditas had decided as the muhurta was nearing, and he should be happy and jovial, but why was he feeling abnormal. How is it that the select crowd of 'Vandi magadhas' or professional praisers of Rama's great qualities are yet not around even after his arrival. Why the Ministers, Senapatis, renowned co kings and top officials and prominent citizens have yet not arrived! Why has not the well decorated King of Elephants arrived yet, to carry Rama on the Raja Marga with pomp and show to attract the admiration and celebration of the crowds while the well dressed soldiers lead the procession! Why this situation of queit even worse than the normalcy, let alone a day or two just earlier! Itīva vilapantīm tām provāca raghunandanah, sīte tatrābhavāṁs tāta pravrajayati mām vanam/ As Sita was agitated likewise, Rama merely said: 'Sita! My revered father is banishing me to Dandakaranya. You belong to the family background of Dharma and as such could readily appreciate the ramifications and implications of Dharma. Rama then continued to explain briefly that his father has granted two boons to mother Kaikeyi long ago; as the preparations of his rajyabhisheka were in climatic swing, mother Kaikeyi reminded of the two boons and thus tied the King tight and could not be able to wriggle out. Rama then conveyed to Sita as follows: 'Caturdaśa hi varṣāṇi vastavyaṁ dandake mayā, pitrā me bharataś cāpi yauvarājye niyojitaḥ, so 'haṁ tvām āgato draṣṭuṁ prasthito vijanaṁ vanam/ As such, my father had to necessarily abide by the boons granted to Kaikeyi that I should immediately leave for dandakaranya for a stay of fourteen years and Bharata to be made the Yuva Raja. On my way to the forest life, I have come to convey this news. Please do not praise me before Bharata as he might not bear it. You may not even describe about my qualities even among your intimate friends even . Ahaṁ cāpi pratijñāṁ tām guroḥ samanupālayan, vanam adyaiva yāsyāmi sthirā bhava manasvini/ I am now prepared to proceed to dandakaranya to obey my father's instructions and you should be brave and resolute to bear my absence. Indeed you're an ideal wife and hence continue your routine of timely pujas and abstinences being ever devoted to my father and mother Kousalya. To my other mothers too be devoted equally with affection and intimacy. Bharat and Shatrughna are dear to me as of my own ‘praana’ and as such you should sustain continued consideration for them. Especially, you ought not to resort to any undesirable thought and action that might be undesirable to them. As I am leaving now, you should bear my absence for now and follow my instructions with faith and compliance dutifully.

As Rama had conveyed the news of his decision of his imminent departure to dandakaranya, Devi Sita reacted stating that she was rather amused with his decision of leaving her behind and counselling her about the ‘do’s and dont’s’ in his absence. She said: ‘Arya putra! Each and every father, mother, brother, son, and daughter-in-law would have to reap and experience one’s own fate of joy or otherwise. But, it is only the wife that her husband’s destiny decides her destiny too. For every married woman it is only the husband that her life gets anchored to either in the ongoing life or there after too, but not her father, mother, son, friends or associates of the family and not even her own body.

[In this context, Manu Smṛiti is quoted: Pitaarakshati Kaumare Bhartaa rakshati youvane, Putrastu sthaavire bhaave na stree swaatantrya marhati/ Sookshmebhyopi prasangebhyah striyo rakshyaa visheshatah, Dvayorhikulayoh shokamaavahed arakshitaah/ Imam hi sarva varnaanaam pashyanto dharmamuttamam/ (During the ‘Kaumara dasa’ before wedding, the father takes the responsibility, whereafter the husband and in old age the sons, thus a female is always protected though not independent! Even minute expressions might not offend a female and be safeguarded lest there might be unhappiness in either of the families of father and husband, and indeed a female plays a significant yet sensitive role of both the families and hence the need for her balancing act! Manu Smṛiti also explains further: Naasti streenaam pridhagyanona vratam naapyuposhanam, Patim shushrushate yattutena svarge maheeyate/ Kamavrittevaa gunairvaa parivarnitah, Nastriyah parivarjasyaat satatam daiva vatpatih/ Sadaa prahvaashtayaa bhavyam grihakaaryech dakshayaa, Susamskrutopaskarayaa vyayechaamuktahastayaa/ (As women have no yagnas, vratas and such other acts of virtue, they are happy to share such acts along with their husbands. Notwithstanding the shortcomings of their husbands the wives would do well to with faith to them and concentrate more on their domestic chores with expertise and run the family with wisdom and dedication and be the major force of maintaining peace and happiness home). Further is stated in general: Karyeshu dasi, Karaneshu manthri; Bhojeshu mata, Shayaneshu rambha; Kshamayeshu dharithri, Roopeshu lakshmi; Satkarma yukta, Kuladharmata patni/ An ideal wife should be like a loyal maid for service; an intelligent adviser; a mother like with affection while feeding food; a romantic-proactive and comforting woman like a damsel; a woman of beauty, charm and richness like Goddess Lakshmi Herself with dedication and humility; and above all be ever forgiving with compassion and ready understanding like Bhudevi Herself!]

Devi Sita continued: yadi tvam prasthito durgam vanam adyaiva rāghava, agratas te gamiṣyāmi mṛdnantī kuśakaṇṭakān/ īrṣyā roṣau bahiṣkṛtya bhuktaśeṣam ivodakam, naya mām vīra viśrabdhah pāpam mayi na vidyate/ Raghu nandana! As you would be now passing through dense forests by hopping and jumping sharp thorns and rocks, then I too would be prepared to do so, in fact, by leading you the path. Therefore, never think jealous of my courage, nor of doubt, nor of 'tyaga' or sacrifice, resignation, desperation and of generosity but as my duty. Therefore, Maha Veera! I am too your Veera Patni! How can you abandon me and for which kind of my grievous blunder that you seek to abandon me! Whether the husband enjoys the fruitful pleasures of living in sky high residences, or travelling in pushpaka vimaanas, or the experiences of 'Ashta Siddhis', a Pati vrata ought to equally take part and share.

[Vishlesana of Ashta Siddhis: or Supernatural Powers are Anima or the ability of miniaturising oneself; Mahima is turning one self giant like; Laghima is the capacity to get oneself unusually light; Garima is to make the Self too gross and heavy; Prapti is to achieve any kind of mental desire; Prakamya or providing fulfillment of other's wishes; Vashitwa or capacity to control any other Party; Ishitwa or fully dominating over others as wished. Among many other Siddhis include Para Kaaya Pravesha or totally entering other's body and even Soul; Doora Shravana or distant hearing, Doora Darshana or Distant Vision or ability to see things or actions any where from other places; Manojavam or reaching a place as fast as a thought as also thought reading; Kamarupa or assuming the physical form of another Being-be it a moving species or an immobile like a mountain etc; Swacchanda Maranam or the gift to die at one's own wish; Deva Saha Kreedā Anudarshanam or the gift to view Deva Devis playing among themselves; Yatha Sankalpa Siddhi or accomplishing any thing by a mere thought; and so on.]

Devi Sita continues: ' My parents had thoroughly trained me about the do's and don'ts and none else to teach me in connection with the present exigency. Aham durgam gamishyaami vanam purushavarjitam, naanaa mriganaakeernam shardulaganasevitam/ Even if several cruel animals like tigers and lions I have determined to enter along with you! I would feel comfortable as though I would reside in my parents house. I would in fact spend my times as if I am experiencing the pleasures of three lokas in your company as which pativrata dharma exists but to reside with you! [Vyasa Maharshi states succinctly: Pativrataatu naaree bhartru shushrushanotsukaa, Natasya vidyate paapam ihaloke paratracha, Pativrataadharmarataa Rudraanyeva na samshayah, Tasyaah paraabhavam kartum shaknoti najanah kashchit/ A pativrata who sincerely serves her husband shall qualify with attainment of her current and ensuing lives and eventually attain the status of a Rudrani or Devi Parvati.]

She continues further: 'Veera! I should be able to practice celibacy and keep constant company with sweet conversation. tvam hi kartum vane śakto rāma saṁparipālanam, anyasya pai janasyeha kiṁ punar mama mānada/ phalamūlāsanā nityam bhaviṣyāmi na saṁśayah, na te duḥkham kariṣyāmi nivasantī saha tvayā/ Rama! You have the unique capability to save and safeguard any or all the persons while why can you not able to protect me! It is my firm decision to follow you, come what may! I am fully prepared and none could stop me. I will give you no trouble whatever; but on the other hand will be of sweet company while sharing the remnant food of roots and fruits. How I wish to fulfill my life long wish of freely visiting water streams and enjoy bathing in them in the company of white and lovely swans, while flying birds sing away and move about right above me! Arya Putra! My great desire is to bathe at your feet in a ‘sarovara’ and swim joyfully. May such tranquil lives be spent for thousands of years of heavenly times! Believe me if that type of celestial living in your company is available what else is the purport of bliss! Ananyabhāvām anuraktacetasaṃ; tvayā viyuktām maraṇāya niścītām, nayasva mām sādhu kuruṣva yācanām; na te mayāto gurutā bhaviṣyati/ Swami! My heart is so much surfeit with your personality that without you , I would most certainly die of separation and hence my prostrations to you to let me accompany you most certainly’. As Devi Sita kept on insisting by invoking ‘pativrata dharma’- fulfillment of her life’s desires and offers of mutual adjustment, and finally the threat of her very life, Rama continued his utmost reluctance and disapproval to let Devi Sita to accompany him to the dandakaranya. Then he described the enormous tortures, sufferings, and critical predicaments even to strong willed men of heroism, let alone women even with rough and sturdy nature in one’s daily life for an unimaginable fourteen arduous years!

Even being fully aware of the multi-faceted Dharma, Shri Rama had still not been convinced of Devi Sita following him to the dandakaranya, fully weighing carefully the pros and cons. Devi Sita was agitated with tears overflowing from her eyes. He addressed her saying that he having been born of an excellent family background firmly embedded to the principles of dharma should realise the mind of her husband and follow it in the spirit and context of the situation. She was an ‘abala’ and could never be able to yield to the pressures of the multiple complexities of men and situations. He reiterated that in her own interest she should please abandon the idea. Facing jungle men and equally terrorising cruel animals would pose minute to minute trepidation even to brave warriors in the battles. The walking paths are awfully muddy, hard and forest elephants in groups are prone to splash mud sideways and all over blinding the men and co animals like bears, monkeys and forest donkeys. The entire jungle, which has no path to tread and to follow on prescribed walkways, is full of creepers, bushy grass, and piercing thorns while wild animals keep squeaking heart rending sounds far and just near one’s ears. One has to sustain eating fruits fallen on the ground besides roots, seeds and leaves many of which could be poisonous resulting in instant deaths. Mithilesa Raja Kumari! Keeping upavaasaas as per one's capacity, besides wearing 'jataabhara' hair-do, course 'valkala vastra' or deer skin dress would be your ornaments. Forest dweller humans of cities as normally required to take bath thrice a day would turn each day a nightmare. One needs to be contented by eating what comes a day as per luck. The forests are prone to frightening sweeps of heavy winds, severe cold and shattering rain pours, besides land slides and earthquakes. Most poisonous cobras with raised hoods, fearful hisses and fast swerling coils are of normal tree hanging eventuality, especially in dead nights of utter darkness, while mountainous reptiles normally crawl and hiss on crooked pathways if visible. Abala Sita! Bats, scorpions, swarms of bees and honey bees are but a component of a jungle. Moreover, one has to cut and pierce into thick and endless thorny bushes for entry to make the crooked lanes and byelanes. A few of forest dwellers who survive somehow are ever faced with death before-beside-behind and ahead of them, ever counting their minutes-hours and days ready for all types of eventualities and exigencies with sturdy bodies eating raw meat of animals, fishes, and of even passers by if need be. Dear Sita! You have to toughen your body and more so on total control of desires, anger, passion, irritability; most essentially the ability of overcoming situations of fright, terror and sudden horror. Tad alam te vanam gatvā kṣamam na hi vanam tava, vimṛśann iha paśyāmi bahudoṣataram vanam/ That precisely why Sita! I have thoroughly visualized any possibility of accompanying with me and you shall never be able to withstand the enormity of the untold travails of doing so. But the ever insistent and never relenting Devi Sita stated as follows.

Prananadha! What all the risks and sufferings that you have vividly described to me could be withstood by me in your company. In your magnificent company of nearness and dearness, what all difficulties are required to be faced would be melted away. When none could dare to look at you straight in your eyes, then of which significance are animals and reptiles. Tvayā ca saha gantavyam mayā gurujanāññayā, tvadvijogena me rāma tyaktavyam iha jīvitam/Shri Rama! Carrying the blessings of my Gurus as I do, I have decided to accompany you as otherwise, I have decided finally to end up my very existence. Being along with you, even Devas and even Lord Indra would not be able to change my decisiveness. Shri Rama! No Pativrata could ever bear and suffer the ‘vijoga’ or prolonged separation from her husband and would rather end up her life. When I was not married earlier and was extremely mischievous, some of the Brahmanas who were fed up with my naughtiness used to say: ‘You will surely live in forests; indeed those casual and flippant remarks have now turned true!’ Veera! I am indeed aware that ‘vana vaasa’ entails all types of problems and endless ordeals and tortures, but that should not be so for those who lack decisiveness of body and mind. In fact, having arrived here after wedding I expressed my fanciful desire for forest life and you had conceded to my desire too, if you please recall. Now, this is the time that I am able to fulfill my desire to accompany you for your service. Shuddhamaana! You are my overlord and here is by opportunity to accompany you to purify all my lifelong blemishes and sins as womanhood after wedding is a boon to serve husband and the singular master and ‘pratyaksha devata’ or God in ready reality. To follow you even to ‘paraloka’ bestows auspiciousness and fulfillment. At the time of our wedding, my father took vows by leaving ‘pavitra jajaas’ or sacred waters on earth that I would belong to you for ever in this life and ever thereafter! Pretyabhāve ‘pi kalyāṇaḥ saṁgamo me saha tvayā, śrutir hi śrūyate punyā brāhmaṇānām yaśasvinām/ Famed Brahmana Vedic Panditas had quoted from Vedas that an auspicious wedding performed with affection and belief assures unity of the husband and wife on earth and in swarga too. Devi Sita continues further: ‘I am your ‘Dharmapatni’, ‘Vrata paalaka’ and ‘Pativrata’ and assuredly, I will most certainly follow your footsteps. Kakutsa kula bhushana Rama! I am your staunch devotee, the most ideal ‘Pativrata’, the forlorn-dejected and desperate Life Partner, the Equal Collaborator of Joys and Difficulties; do very kindly let me accompany you! Yadi mām duḥkhitām evaṁ vanaṁ netuṁ na cecchasi, viṣam agniṁ jalaṁ vāham āsthāsyē mṛtyukāraṇāt/ This indeed is my ultimate determination that in case I would not be allowed to accompany you, I will commit suicide by drinking poison, or jump into flames or drown in deep waters. Thus despite innumerable warnings of impending dangers of forest life, Devi Sita kept on crying incessantly and kept on insisting Rama to allow her to accompany him.

Just as Maha Pativrata Devi Savitri followed Dyumtsena Kumara Satyavaan's shadow as held by Yama Dharmaraja, I too would most certainly follow you Rama!

[Vishleshana on Devi Savitri- Satyavan- Yama Raja- and Satyavan's Lasting relief:

Sati Savitri an outstanding Pativrata who defied Yama Dharma Raja into conviction!

Matsya Purana describes that in the days of yore, there was a King named Ashwapati of Shaakala Vamsa in Madra Desha (the present Sialkot Territory) who did not secure a son. Being highly devoted to Devi Savitri (Gayatri), he intensified his worship to her and performed a daily 'havan'/ oblation to Agni with white 'Tilas' (Sesame seeds) in the presence of thousand Brahmanas for ten months and finally Devi Savitri appeared to Ashwapati on a Chaturthi day and granted an illustrious daughter to him and queen Malati; the baby was named as Savitri since she was born by the grace of Devi Savitri. The daughter grew into a charming and highly virtuous girl; a chance visit of Brahmarshi Narada to the King and the daughter indicated that her husband would die on a specified day after her wedding. They both indeed were terribly worried about Narada's prophesy but she was married in due course to the son of King Jhumnatsen called Satyavan who was a charismatic prince. But unfortunately the King lost his kingdom as also the eye sight of his and of the wife. Savitri emboldened herself and faced the situation with confidence and performed unreserved and steadfast service to the parents-in-law. At the sametime, she served her husband so much that Narada's prophesy was always ringing in her ears constantly and never allowed the husband even for a while. She also worshipped her Guru and followed each and every advice of his as a word of law. Thus she was worshipping her husband, her parents-in-law and her Guru as much as never in history had performed in the past. As the specific Chaturthi that Narada warned about her husband's death within a year, she took permission of her blind parents-in-law and her Guru and entered a jungle along with Satyavan and decided to keep her husband the happiest man and spent every moment with him by showing and sharing with him the most memorable beauties of Nature, the waterfalls, the cool waters, the fragrant and colourful flowers and so on. She described that couples of hares, crows, lions, monkeys, and deers were all in a state of maddening infatuation and such wonderful experiences tended to extend lives forever! Meanwhile, Satyavan felt like cutting wood from some dry trees but Savitri cautioned that he should not be away from her. In great fun, he said that he would never ever dare to be away from her. Suddenly, Satyavan felt excruciating pain in his head and fell flat. Even while realising as to what was happening, she sensed that some thumb-long figures tied to Satyavan's soul and were ready to draw it towards the Southern direction and visioned that Yama Dharma Raja himself was present there. She screamed with astonishment and closely following Yamaraja sobbed away and said: Sacred Scriptures assured that sincere devotion to mother provided this loka, devotion to father would secure Swarga and devotion to Guru would fetch Brahma loka but of what avail was her sincerity if Scriptures made false promises? Dharma Raja replied: Do not interfere with my duty; indeed the Scriptures were right, the dead soul was a virtuous person and that she too was a real Pativrata, but there was a fixed procedure of terminating a human being as per one's life span which was pre-determined and judgment was given as per norms. Savitri counter argued that for a woman, husband was a Deity and the provider of safety; a father, brother or a son were no doubt the safeguarders but the husband was above all and if he were to be forcibly taken away then she had no other alternative but to immolate her life. Dharma Raja was indeed taken back at her firmness and smilingly said that such an incidence as this was rare and that he would be pleased to bestow any boon excepting her husband's life. As Savitri took up the opportunity, she requested him to restore the eyesight as also the Kingdom to her in-laws and Dharma Raja readily granted these boons and asked her to go back so that he could perform his duty. He also asked her not to follow further and tire out herself without any aim or useful purpose. Devi Savitri replied that she would never feel tired following great celebrities of the stature of Dharma Raja, even if they were annoyed because only such emblems of Dharma could sift persons of genuineness or other-wise; it was stated in the Scriptures that one should never be afraid of even Agni, poison, and snakes compared to evil persons where as 'Satpurushas' had an inner conscience and even if they were apparently rude and hurtlingly outspoken, their basic quality would be outstanding and subject to change of stance since such 'Mahatmas' test the authenticity of other persons being faced. Even normal and impartial Kings and Administrators would tend to examine the realities of those who make requests and a Deity par excellence like Dharma Raja would like to make sure whether her supplications were pure and straight from the heart or not. That was the reason why Savitri felt untired of following Dharma Raja! Apparently, Dharma Raja was pleased with the logic of Savitri and replied that without insisting on the life of Satyavaan, she might ask for another boon. She grabbed the opportunity and requested that her parents were not blessed with a son; despite performing countless Sacred deeds and their daily homas in favour of Gayatri / Savitri they succeeded on giving birth to a daughter but not a 'Vamsoddhaaraka'. Dharma Raja conceded the second boon too and firmly admonished Savitri to pester further but should return home at once to organise the obsequies of her departed husband. Having secured the second boon from Dharmaraja, Savitri still followed the former and stated that any human being would like to fulfil three essential steps of Dharma, Artha and Kama as the corner-stones of an ideal life. She affirmed: Dharmaanjanam tathaa kaaryam purushena vijaanataa, Tallaabham Sarva laabhebhyo yadaa Daiva viseshatey/ Dharmascha arthascha kaamascha trivargo janmanah phalam, Dharma heenasya kaamaarthey vandhyaa sutasamou Prabho/ Dharmadarthastathaa kaamo Dharmallokadwayam tathaa, Dharma ekonuyaatyenam yatra kwachanagaaminam/ Shareerena samam naasham sarvamanya -ddhi gacchati, Ekohi jaayatey jantureka eva vipadyatey/ (Deva! Any Enlightened person seeks to earn Dharma since that secures the best of gains; the objective of life is to fulfil the means of Dharma viz. Artha and Kaama; conversely, wealth and fulfilment of desires alone without Dharma would be wasting one's life. Dharma would certainly fulfil the means to achieve it and could at the same time lead to Salvation too. In the final analysis, a dying person leaves every thing behind except Dharma and a person born does not bring any possessions nor takes anything at death). Dharma Raja was pleased with what Savitri said and asked her a third boon to that outstanding Pativrata who had been fighting for her husband's life. In turn, Savitri asked the boon: Varayaami twayaa dattam putraanaam shatamourasam, Anapatyasya lokeshu gatih kila na vidyatey/ (Deva! I request you to give me the boon of securing hundred sons of my own, since without obtaining sons, there would be no 'Sadgati' to her and husband as parents). Yama Raja then granted this boon also and Savitri commended Dharma as follows: Dharmaadharma vidhaanajna Sarva Dharma Pravartaka, Twameva Jagato naathaha Prajaa samyamaney Yamah/ Karmanaaman -rupena Yasmaad Yamayasey Prajaah, Tasmaad vai proachyasey Deva Yama ityeva naamatah/ Dharmaneymaah Prajaah Sarvaa yasmaad ranjayasey Prabho, Tasmaat tey Dharma raageti naama Sadbhirnigadyatey/ Sukrutam dushkrutam chobhey Purodhaaya yadaa janaah/ Tatsavakaasham mrutaa yaanti tasmaat twam Mrutyu ruchyatey/ (Dharmaadharma Vidhaata! You are the highest Administrator of Dharma; since you are the Chief Regulator of Dharma, you are called Yama. As you ensure that human beings do not indulge in Adharma and make them follow the Path of Truth, you are known as Dharma Raja. Since when human beings die, you confront them with a full account of their good and bad deeds, and hence you are known as Mrityu. As the dead persons are approached by you with the details of each action of theirs by each Kshana/ second, and measure of Kaala or Time, you are called as Kaala. Since you are the designated Authority to terminate the life of each and every 'charaachara' or mobile and immobile being, you are titled Antak. As you are the eldest son of Surya Deva who has the name of Viwasvaan, you carry the name of Vaiwasvata. As and when the life of any being is over, you catch him suddenly and that is why you have another name viz. Sara praanahara. Devesha! Thanks to you the Ruk-Yajur- Sama Vedas continue to popularise the Principles of Virtue and Justice eternally; you are the upkeeper of nobility and discipline the world over and I have come to the shield of safety from you; kindly give back my husband at once as my in-laws too are frantic now for his life. As Savitri concluded her desperate prayers, Dharma Raja asserted that he was giving away Satyavan's life back, that he would secure her hundred sons who would all become famous Kings, that her parents too would be blessed with hundred sons of virtue and that her brother would be popular as Malava, the King of Malva. Thus concludes the Sacred Legend of Maha Saadhvi Savitri: Tasmaad Saadhwyaha Striyah Pujaah Satatam, Taasaamtu vakyam bhavateeha midhya na jaatu lokeshu charachareshu/ Tasmaat sadaa taah pari pujaneeyaah, Kaamaan Samagraanabhi kaamayaanaih/ (Hence women of High Virtue ought to be worshipped since the Three Lokas are preserved due to their grace. The voices of Pativratas should never be ignored as they are worthy of veneration and fulfill their desires].

Devi Sita continued to address Rama: 'Raghunandana! I am certainly not like a fallen woman of shame as I have never ever thought of any other male with even a trace of desire. I have not seen or felt likewise. I was married even as a teen aged Kumari and would wish to live in your exclusive company like a Pativrata for very very long like a 'Sati Saadhvi'. You cannot discard me like a cheap dancing girl who earns livelihood for herself and husband! Shri Rama! You seem to be advising me to stay back and be polite and get controlled by that younger brother of yours viz. Bharata; you might do so yourself but certainly not me, as he was the culprit to thwart your being the legitimate yuva raja! This is another strong reason for accompanying you Rama! Sa mām anādāya vanam na tvam prasthātum arhasi, tapo vā yadi vāraṇyam svargo vā syāt saha tvayā/ Hence my decisiveness to go along with you hand in hand, even if I were to perform tapasya like a yogini, or to enter the darkest forests or to attain swarga but together! As a feel luxurious golden swing mattresses under garden umbrellas or rest on your comfortable lap give me the same feeling as striding hard on the worst possible slush or rocks in you blissful company. As and when the gruelling and backbreaking ordeal of walking on thorny bushes and trees is encountered, your comforting company gets me the feeling of walking on cotton and smooth deerskin! If I am banged and even lifted up by sandstorms then I might feel experienced with sandalwood paste in your company. With your comfort again, as I would have sleep in huts under trees, then would feel that in I am rolling in bird- feather like soft cushions. I assure you that I shall not be a burden for you. But being with you I feel I am in heaven and without you, it would be a hell. I am not afraid of vana vaasa but without you it surely be so and then would die sooner than later. Without you I cannot spend even two hours, but how do you expect me to live for fourteen years!' By so saying, Devi broke down into loud and severe weeping by tightly embracing Rama. She then got up and moved about in circles crying away like a she - elephant attacked by poisonous arrows and seeking to jump into severe flames. Then Rama too got terribly agitated with the magnitude and severity of her action and with her both hands pressed her on his chest and said firmly: Na devi tava duḥkkena svargam apy abhirocaye, na hi me 'sti bhayam kim cit svayambhor iva sarvataḥ/ tava sarvam abhiprāyam avijñāya śubhānane, vāsam na rocaye 'raṇye śaktimān api rakṣaṇe/ Devi! If you do so strongly feel that you would attain 'swarga sukha', that type of happiness too could be discarded by me, but trust me I am afraid of nothing like swayambhu Brahma himself. I am most certainly capable of defending you, but only advised you not to put yourself to difficulties. yat sṛṣṭāsi mayā sārddham vanavāsāya maithili, na vihātum mayā śakyā kīrtir ātmavatā yathā/ dharma tu gajanāśoru sadbhir ācaritaḥ purā, taṁ cāham anuvarte 'dya yathā sūryam suvarcalā/ In case you are born and destined to suffer and stay with me, but do realise that 'atmajnani purushas' or self awakened men would not hesitate to discard their natural instincts and hence my warnings of impending perils. Several instances could be cited that even Celestials of high standards of virtue had allowed their spouses to follow them as their shadows. Did not Surya Deva allow Suvarchala - Sangina Devi follow as her shadow! You too may perhaps follow me, even being the great hazards involved!

[Vishleshana on Surya Deva and Sangina Devi:

Bhavishya Purana: It was on 'Saptami' Tithi that Bhagavan Surya made his initial manifestation to the Universe. His original Appearance inside a Holy Egg continued and from there itself, he grew and hence was called 'Martaanda'. He was wedded to the daughter of Daksha Prajapati, called Sanjna, and begot Dharma Raja, Vaivasvata and Yamuna Devi. But since Sanjna was unable to bear the heat and dazzle of Surya Deva, created from her shadow a similar substitute, called Chhaya Devi to proxy her and left for Uttarakuru Desha to perform Tapasya in the form of as a horse. Meanwhile, Chhaya Devi gave birth to Shaneswara and Devi Tapati, but aftersome time, Chhaya Devi's partial attitude to her own children and those of Sanjna came to be noticed; Yama Dharma pointed out to Chhaya Devi about the differential treatment and in course of the argument, Yama raised his right leg's ankle which was objected to by Chhaya and she gave a curse to Yama that if his feet ankles were placed on Earth they would be eaten by worms! As Dharma Raja complained to Surya Deva, the father assuaged the feelings of his son, who was in fact a specimen of virtue, saying that the 'shaap' of Sandhya Devi was not to be too harmful since, after all, worms might take away the flesh and blood of his ankle to Bhuloka but feet would be in tact any way. Sandhya was frightened and blurted the truth to Surya Deva that Sanjna materialised her to deputise her and the latter left to her father's place; Daksha told Surya Deva that Sanjna could not withstand his heat and had been performing Tapasya in the form of a horse at Uttarakuru. Surya requested Vishwakarma to reduce his heat and radiance and after assuming the forms of a horse approached Sanjna and by the mutual contact of the noses of Surya and Sanjana in horse forms were born Ashvini Kumars and Raivata. Since the Episode of Sanjna and Surya occurred on Sapta Tithi of Magha Shukla Paksha as above, the day is considered as most auspicious to signify the union the Couple.]

Rama continued to soften Devi Sita from her agitation and extreme anguish: He explained once again that he was having to go to dandakaranya only and exclusively due to the decision of the father and ‘the’ mother and indeed it was his bounden duty having to do so; only his ‘puja and aaradhana’ was compelling to do so as service to the father-mother-and guru would be the only means of fulfillment of the paramarthas of dharma-artha-kaama-mokshas evidently and that sanatana dharma was the inevitable path of mortal life for salvation. Yet when you are giving me the untimate warning : ‘ Mama sannaa matih Site netum tvaam dandakaavanam, vaasishyaameeti saa tvam maamanuyaantum sunischitaa/ Saa hidrishtaavadyaangi vanaaya madirekshane, anugacchasva maam bheeru sahadharmachaaree bhava/ Keeping in view your such decisiveness as being even desperate with the threat of your sacrificing the life, my earlier decision appears to be getting diluted! There fore I am now perforce having to relent myself to reluctantly agree to accompany me.’ Then Rama asked Sita to initiate earliest action to get ready, by way of discarding her jewellery as donations to ‘brahmana strees’ and change the dress suitably for the ‘yatra’. Then finally having fought her way to make Rama agree as her desire was fulfilled, Devi Sita gave away ‘dhana’ of Brahmanas and ‘daana’ to Brahmanis, with joy and excitement!

As Devi Sita and Shri Rama had been seeking to mutually convince each other, finally the adamant Sita perforce made Rama to agree to let Sita to accompany him to dandakaranya. Even as they were arguing each other, Lakshmana had almost arrived. Then the latter bent down and pressed Rama’s tight and addressed Devi Sita that even if thousands of elephants and cruel animals of dandakaranya might chase Sita-Ramas, he would most certainly lead them ahead of the couple ever ready and vigilant up with his ‘dhanush’. Along with me, do both of you keep on enjoying the chirrupings of multi coloured birds and the continous buzzing sounds of honey bees. As Rama kept on listening to Lakshmana’s assurances, Rama negated the proposal of Lakshmana. The latter stated to Rama: Dear brother! Anugjnaata tastu bhavataa purvameva yadasyaham, kimidaaneem punarapi kriyate me nivaaranam/ You had already consented to my proposal to accompany you, but why are changing your mind now! Rama explained:

Dear Lakshmana! You are my true friend, dharma paraayana or the follower- cum - enforcer of dharma, true follower of moral values, and my very 'praana' or the life force undoubtedly. But in my absence, who would look after your mother Devi Sumitra and my mother Devi Kousalya! Maha Raja Dasharatha who had been fulfilling the wishes of each and every body like the rains of the sky on earth so far, but now unfortunately is caught badly in the mesmerising net of Devi Kaikeyi now. He might also be highly disturbed and perhaps guilty in his mind due to my absence. Bharata would in any case be under the total control of his mother Kaikeyi. This is why I am having to have second thoughts of you accompanying me. I am overwhelmed with your faith and devotion to me, no doubt. But once you too are absent, it would be too difficult to imagine the condition of your mother and of mine and neither; they will most certainly be disappointed, discouraged and become psychological wrecks in the course of months and years'. Lakshmana stated: My eldest brother Rama! Why are you presuming that Bharata could turn out as so mean and degraded; would he be so disrespectful and vengeful to the mothers. Rama replied: Most essentially, Bharata would be in the tight grip of Kaikeyi even so as she keeps King Dasharadha as the main force. Lakshmana retorts: Maha Veera Rama! Suppose once having become the King, if Bharata were to take to ill justified paths being self opinionated and arrogant and does not look after the mothers, then I should undoubtedly destroy sarva lokas without doubt. Further Devi Kousalya is capable of safeguarding herself and my mother Devi Sumitra too. They both have the solid backing of thousands of villages as their residents are indebted to them for the well being and ready support to them. Therefore, Kurushva maamanucharam vaidharyam neha vidyate, kritaayoham bhavishyaami tava chaarthah prakalpyate/ Therefore, Shri Rama! Let me kindly accompany you. I shall keep holding the dhanush day in and out keep vigil and as you would move forward should be the forward mover ever ensuring that the principles of virtue would never be tampered with. Each and every day, it should be responsibility to bring fruits, vegetables and roots besides 'havan samagri' for your agni karyas. Further, bhavāms tu saha vaidehyā girisānuṣu raṁsyate, ahaṁ sarvaṁ kariṣyāmi jāgrataḥ svapataś ca te/ Even as you and Devi Vaidehi gleefully seek to ascend the mountain tops, I should provide impregnable security cover and perform errands dutifully.' As Lakshmana thus asserted most earnestly and dutifully, Rama was pleased and finally said: ' Sumitranandana! Go now to mother Sumitra and wife besides close admirers and meet them of your decision to accompany Rama Sitas for vana vaasa. Lakshmana! Remember that at the maha yajna performed by King Janaka at Mithila, Varuna Deva himself appeared and gifted to you a fierce looking omni potent dhanush along a 'tuneera' with 'akshya baanaas' and an unbreakable 'kavacha' besides a sun like bright long sword as were kpt at the residence of 'acharya'. Do please collect all these and after obtaining acharya's blessings bring them too'. Shri Rama further instructed Lakshmana to request 'Suyagjna' the son of Maharshi Vasishtha to meet Rama and return back to him at the earliest.

As Lakshmana was thus instructed my Rama, Guruputra Suyagjna accompanied Lakshmana and while Rama seated with Sita made several 'daanas' to Suyagjna. He donated for Suyagjna's wife several golden earrings, necklaces, finger rings, bangles and shoulder ornaments. To Suyagjna he donated an elephant named Shatrujaya well decorated, as King Janaka gifted to Rama. The mightily pleased Suyagjna blessed Sita Ramas and Lakshmana profusely. Then Lakshmana asked the most revered Agastya and Vishvamitra Maharshis to be welcomed and offered thousand cows, swarna mudras, silverware, and invaluable Nava Ratnas of handful diamonds, pearls, sapphires, corals, rubies, gomedha and vaidurya . Later, Lakshmana directed all possible 'yajur veda taittireeya shakha panditaas' to be donated with horse carts, servants and service maids, silk clothes, thousands of cows, and cash from the royal treasury to their heart's contentment. Rama further said that some of the katha shakha and kalaapa shakha brahmacharis who had been in constant touch with him as he admired them for their constant 'swaadhyaya' or recitation of vedas be invited and gifted with eighty camels, handfuls of precious stones from the treasury, thousand bullock carts and several varieties of 'dhanyas'. Likewise, there are groups of 'mekhala dhari brahmacharis' from select 'guru kulaas' who were gifted by me at the instance of my mother as she was extraordinarily contented be also be invited for distribution of appropriate donations.' As per Rama's directives, the 'daanaas' of dhana-dhanya-vastu-vahanaas' were carried out by Lakshmana like Kubera himself from the treasury. Then Rama called his personal attendant servants and distributed their wages for fourteen years in advance while stating to them, that they should never feel the absence of Rama Lakshmanas but be contented till their return. Then he commenced distributing ample cash to long winded queues of 'anaadhas' or helpless men-women-and children. Further there were some 'garga gotriya brahmanas' named 'trijatas' at the outskirts of Ayodhya who were truly helpless very elderly and decrepits, just barged into the five boundary 'praakaaraas' of Rama's palace despite the resisting soldiers for some succor and livelihood. These were like Bhrigu and Angeera Maharshis and shouted with shaky voices: Nirdhano bahuputrosmi Rajaputra Mahabala, kshatavrittirvane nityam pratyavekshasva maamiti/ 'Maha bali Raja Kumara, I am hopelessly stricken by abject poverty with a number of children to support, roaming around the nearby forests for some kind of food. My prostrations to you to mercifully provide some food and clothing'. Rama replied: 'I possess countless herds of cows; you may please accept as many cows as my stick once thrown by me'; so saying Rama with his extended 'aajaanu baahu' or long hands upto his ankles threw away the stick ! He further said: I am stating this a remark of humor and do not be please get offended; what I am stating is that you would be very happy and contented from hereon! Then Rama readily donated in ample measure for the vidvans to be ever contented!' Dvijah sahrud bhrityajenothavaa tadaa daridra bhikshaacharanascha yo bhavet, na tra kaschit babhuva tarpito yathaarha sammaanana daana sambhramaih/ This was how, Rama at that time made sure that none whosoever like brahmana-sahrida-sevaka-daridra- bhikshkas were left unattended!

Shri Rama along with Devi Sita besides Lakshmana had given away considerable charities and proceeded for King Dasharath's 'darshan'; before doing so, they witnessed the puja preparations made earlier by Sita like the variety of fresh and sweet odoured flowers , and climbed up the seven storied palace with a sense of disappointment and witnessed a sea of surging crowd waiting for Rama, while looking at each other with silence. On descending and entering the foreyard of the palace they encountered innumerable cryings and shouts : Padātim varjitacchatram rāmaḥ dṛṣṭvā tadā janāḥ, ūcur bahuvidhā vācaḥ śokopahatacetasah/ yaṁ yāntam anuyāti sma caturaṅgabalaṁ mahat, tam ekaṁ sītayā sārddham anuyāti sma lakṣmaṇaḥ/ aiśvaryaśya rasajñāḥ san kāmīnām caiva kāmadaḥ, necchaty evāṇṛtaṁ kartum pitaram dharmagauravāt/ As Rama-Sita-Lakshmanas commenced walking on the high road, the crowds got surging with heart rending and reverberating sobbings aloud remarking: 'what strange is the sudden twist of destiny that instead of heralding chaturana sena ahead, Rama is leading along with Sita as followed by Lakshmanas walking barefooted on the road! Even as the symbol of 'aishwarya' or opulence, Rama is being humiliated by fate just because he desires to vindicate the fulfillment of his father's prestige and promise! Alas, the celestials flying high on the skies are brought down to roads and bylanes: it is a shame that we are noticing the born princess Devi Sita at street corners. As damsel like Sita who is normally worshipped with luxurious lavishness with the service of sandal paste and such sweet fragrances is going to be exposed to mid day severity of Sun- ever pouring rains- lashing sand storms- and the severity of icy cold and soon enough an angel would dry up with patchy and dried up grimace! Surely, King Darsaratha of glory and magnanimity must have become a victim of a 'pishaacha' with an unstable mind; otherwise, how could he have banished a symbol of high virtue, especially as he was head over heels infatuated with Rama! Moreover, even if a son be a worthless and characterless person, how could a father accord such a punishment to a son, and more surprisingly the son would faithfully accept the cruel father's instruction! Aanṛśamsyam anukrośaḥ śrutam śīlam damaḥ śamaḥ, rāghavam śobhayanty ete śaḍguṇāḥ puruṣottamam/ Indeed Narashreshtha Shri Rama is an outstanding 'puruṣottama' or a human being par excellence being an emblem of the six precepts of Dharma viz. soft nature- mercifulness-knowledge-character- and self control. It was bad enough to negate Rama Pattabhisheka but far worse to banish him forest life that too for fourteen life! This situation is akin to torture persons who are already out of a dried up water body! This context is reminiscent of the orderly nature of the respectable society that we live in, in the same manner that a huge tree with blooming flowers and well ripend fruits gets most suddenly downed and severed! Mulam hyesha manushyaanaam dharmasaaro mahaadyutih, pushpam phalam cha patram cha shakhaaschaaryetare janaah/ This exemplary Shri Rama is the cornerstone of 'Jagat vyavstha' or the very order of the Society, and is like to severe the order is like demolishing a tree with branches, leaves, flowers and fruits. May we all not follow Rama to the forests, just as Sita and Lakshmana are doing! Let us leave behind our agricultural fields, gardens, houses and follow Rama the exemplary! I should accompany him to share his troubles and tribulations. Let us atonce, dig up what ever 'nidhis' or treasures and belongings that we possess, dhana-dhanyas as stored by us, discard even our pujas, bali vaishnavas, mantra pathanas, yajna karyas, mantra pathanas and so on, and follow Rama with joy. May Kaikeyi reign that type of deserted kingdom with freedom and joy! By so doing, the forests would be converted as cities and vice versa. The cruel animals, poisonous serpents and hordes of elephants and several other wild animals and birds would then move away. Then the deserted houses with broken household vessels and discarded furniture by comfortably occupied with the well wishers of Devi Kaikeyi with glee. As several agitated voices from the public were heard, Rama was reactionless and proceeded to Kaikeyi's palace and at the entrance, he found Sumantra who was standing crying away. But Rama was as undisturbed as always and asked Sumantra to please inform King Dasharatha of his arrival at his door step.

As Shri Rama asked Sumantra to intimate of his arrival, the latter had done so and found King Dasharatha was crestfallen on the ground as Surya Deva was subdued by Rahu Graha bit by bit only ruminating about Rama with deep intensity and anguish. The King was addressed by Sumantra: ‘ Prithvi naadha! Shri Rama had just concluded the distribution of all his wealth by donating it to Brahmanas, servants, and various persons as the poor, vulnerable and the old. Now, before departure for dandakaranya; if you do kindly consent, may I ask him to meet you. You may like to see him without any prejudice or inhibition. Dasharatha replied: Please ask my queens too to get together at once. As the queens were at attendance, then he asked his sons too. Then entered Rama-Lakshmanas besides Devi Sita. sa rājā putram āyāntam dṛṣṭvā dūrāt kṛtāñjalim, utpapātāsanāt tūrṇam ārtāḥ strījanasaṁvṛtaḥ/ so 'bhidudrāva vegena rāmaṁ dṛṣṭvā viśām patiḥ, tam asaṁprāpya duḥkhārtāḥ papāta bhuvi mūrchitaḥ/ As Rama-Sita-Lakshmanas entered with greetingful folded hands with unease and nervousness, Dasharatha who was surrounded by his queens, stood up totteringly and cried loudly his heart out. Even as he was so desperately crying away, Rama ran up to him to console his father the latter fell down on the floor unconscious. Sita and Lakshmana too ran to the spot with their senses benumbed. As this sudden succession of events took place, there were thousands of maids along with the queens cried out loudly shouting ‘ Hey Rama! Hey Rama’. Rama -Sita-Lakshmanas together lifted the father on their shoulders and took him and placed on the mattress cot. While Dashratha gained semi consciousness, Rama uttered with low tone with folded hands: āpṛcche tvām mahārāja sarveṣām īśvaro 'si naḥ prasthitaṁ daṇḍakāraṇyam paśya tvam kuśalena mām/ lakṣmaṇam cānujānīhi sītā cānveti mām vanam, kāraṇair bahubhis tathayair vāryamāṇau na cecchataḥ/ anujānīhi sarvān naḥ śokam utsṛjya mānada, lakṣmaṇam mām ca sītām ca prajāpatir iva prajāḥ/ Maha Raja! You are our Deva! I am now leaving for dandakaranya and soliciting you command to do so; do kindly allow us to do so now as Sita and Lakshmana too are accompanying me. I tried my very best to stop for accompanying me but are extremely adamant; just as Sanaka-Sanandana- Sanatana- Sanatkumaras were blessed by his sons by Brahma for their executing rigorous tapsya, do kindly allow us to depart now. King Dasharatha replied: ahaṁ rāghava kaikeyyā varadānena mohitaḥ, ayodhyāyās tvam evādyā bhava rājā nigṛhya mām/ Raghunandana! It was due to the blunderous boon that I gave to Kaikeyi once upon a time that this most unfortunate exigency has occurred; do kindly kill me and become the King of Ayodhya . Rama replied: Maha Raja! you should most certainly reign the kingdom for thousand years, as I have the least desire to become the King and wish to live in the forests. On the completion of the destined fourteen years of forest life, I should most certainly return and fall at your feet. Then the King stated crying loudly: ‘Most unfortunately, I am tied of tightly to the shackles of Truthfulness and simultaneously Kaikeyi has been pressing me to hurry up for your leaving soon. Hence, my best wishes and blessings to you till you return safe with auspiciousness . May not any kind of hurdles or difficulties be faced on way and everthafter. But I have only one request to you to atleast for a day and night so that I could enjoy your company for a little more time till the morning next! But most unfortunately, my wife Kaikeyi happens to be a covered up ash around fire. Then Dasharatha then stared at Rama Lakshmanas crying in fits and starts as Rama interrupted the weepings and stated: ‘ Maha Raja! I have by now given away my ‘dhana dhanyas’ already and even discarded the residents of the Kingdom and now this belongs to Bharata. Vanavaasa kritaa buddhir na cha medya chalishyati, yastu yuddhai varo dattah Kaikeyyai varadatvaya, deeyataam nikhilenaiva satyastvam bhava paarthiva/ Aham nidesham bhavato yadhouttanu paalayan, chaturdasha samaa vatsye vane vanacharai saha, maa vimarsho vasumate Bharataaya pradeeyataam/ Rama continued affirming: ‘ My decision to leave for ‘vana vaasa’ stands firmly. What ever promise that you gifted to mother Kaikeyi be never negated and vindicated your ‘pratigjna’ most certainly. I will truthfully obey to proceed for fourteen years of rigorous vana vaasa. Give away the kingdom to Bharata; this is the ultimate and resolute decision. Kindly be brave, wipe off your tears and never cry; you are like the deep ocean and should never get perturbed by the flows of lakes and streams! naivāhaṁ rājyam icchāmi na sukhaṁ na ca maithilīm, tvāṁ ahaṁ satyam icchāmi nāṇṛtaṁ puruṣarṣabha/ puram ca rāṣṭraṁ ca mahī ca kevalā; mayā niṣṛṣṭā bharatāya dīyatām, ahaṁ nideśam bhavato ’nupālayan; vanaṁ gamiṣyāmi cirāya sevitum/ I would not be ever enamored of Kingdoms, pleasures, married life and any such rejoicements including of swarga sukhka and least of all my very life. My singular objective of is Pitru seva and the vindication of my dearest father’s ‘pratigjna’ only.’ As Shri Rama asserted, King Dasharatha embraced Rama tightly and fell down to the ground and Devis Koushalya and Sumitra cried out in high pitch and fell in unconsciousness, even as Devi Kaikeyi stood in a stoic manner. The entire Rana Vaasa got alarmed with unprecedented commotion with the loudest reverberations reaching to the high ceilings of the palace.

On recovery from his stupor, Sumantra stood up with extreme agitation and anger , took long and heavy breathing , displaying raised wrists, gnashing his teeth on his lips, commenced his lashing angry and livid remarks attacking Kaikeyi. Having prefaced his remarks stating that King Dashratha was her betrayed husband, her King and the boon bestower, he said: ‘how dare you that you have insinuated, insulted, and abused with low and mean mindedness! You have brought the Ikshvaku vamsha from glorious heights to deep and murky drenches. The entire public of the Kingdom would most certainly follow Rama to the forests and desert this place to a ‘smashana’ and then you and your Bharata could reign over the desert. No brahmana, and not even a self respecting human could be held back even by force. I wonder that as you have most consciously and wantonly perpetrated this type of heinous and inhuman act, how is it that there should not be repetitive earth quakes at once. How indeed that Maha Brahmarshis have not yet reacted with irrecoverable curses subjecting a demoness like you to turn into flames and ashes as you have dared to uproot the ‘maha vriksha’ of the symbol of virtue like Dasharatha and the Emblem of Sacrifice like the singular practioner of Pitru vaakya paalana like Rama!’ As Sumantra kept on grilling with such unbearable insults and insinuations as also hurling abuses, the shameless Kaikeyi was least perturbed betraying neither restlessness nor sense of shame, muchless of remorse!

Maha Raja Dasharatha was a passive witness of the uncontrollable anger and anguish of Sumantra so strongly expressed against Kaikeyi, and having breathed heavily asked Sumantra to instruct the 'charuranga balas' of foot soldiers, cavalry, elephantry and military to follow the departing trio of Sita-Rama-Lakshmanas. He further instructed that he should like to organise yajna karyaas in the forests and there should not be any deficiency of treasury and 'anna bhandaar' or plentiful food material! He emphasised that Shri Rama be appropriately sent off without any feeling of discontentment. As the King gave such instructions of liberalism by way of Rama's comforting supplies to be sent, Kaiyeyi intervened saying that already a lot of liberalism was showered on the departing trio and on his return, Bharata might not like such undesirable charities to the 'departing heros'! As Kaikeyi made such unfortunate and heinous remarks, King Dasharatha shouted at Kaikeyi: 'Anarthe! Why are you persistently torturing me with your excruciating and ghastly remarks. Why did you not tell me even earlier that you get alarmed if I would like to send some sena to see off till the departure of the heros and some food and money for 'deva karyas' of yajnas there after! In reply to what the King said, Kaikeyi replied equally haughtily: Maha Raja! I wish to follow the example of your ancestor Sagara Chakravarti had shut the doors of his empire to his eldest son Asamanjasa and sent him off without consideration and any backing!

[Vishleshana on Sagara Chakravarti and his son Asamanjasa:

Sagara Chakravarti of Ayodhya in the remote past whose Dharmapatni was Keshini of Vidarbha Desha who too was a Satyavaadini. His second wife was named Sumati, the daughter of Arishtanemi Kashyapa and the sister of Garuda Deva. Sagara Chakravarti performed tapasya in the Himalaya Range along with his wives atop on the Bhrguprastavana Shikhara. After a century long tapsya, Maharshi Bhrgu blessed the Chakravarti that he would be famed in the entire universe till eternity and blessed him with several sons; he affirmed that one of the queens would beget a single son and another with sixty thousand sons. The King was overwhelmed with the boon of the Maharshi and politely enquired as to which of the Queens would beget only a single but famed 'vamshoddhaarak' son; in turn the Maharshi asked the spouses about their individual preferences..Then the highly enthusiastic younger wife Sumati the brother of Garuda replied that she would prefer strong sons of collective might and fame like Garuda himself, but Devi Keshini opted for a son like her Emporer husband, an outstanding example of virtue and justice with grit to sustain the Vamsha. Sagara and wives then prostrated and returned to the capital of the Empire. After a lapse of months, Devi Keshini gave birth to 'Asamanjasa' and Devi Sumati gave birth to a huge pot from which emerged sixty thousand sons of strength and brightness. Right from birth, this son turned out to be evil. The word Asamanjasa means imbalanced or improper. Since the son was full of evil nature, he came to be known as Asamanjasa. As years rolled on, the Charavarty became a renowned father of an army- like sons of supremacy and command. Asamanajasa used to collect youngsters of the empire to compete in swimming and enjoy himself vicariously and the parents kept on complaining to Sagara. At first, Sagara ignored the misdeeds of his sons. He tended to dismiss them as juvenile exuberance. But Asamanjasa and his brothers continued to do as they pleased. They disrupted the performances of yajnas and oppressed religious people. They appropriated for themselves the offerings that were made to gods at sacrifices. Apsaras were abducted by these evil princes. They also stole flower from the divine parijata tree. Drinking was their favourite pastime, together with robbery and theft. Finally Sagara Chakravarti banished Asamanjasa from the Empire. The forlorn Sagara decided to perform Ashvamedha Yajna. But Indra and Devas began to plot so as to devise ways for bringing about the destruction of the evil sons of Sagara. There was a Sage named Kapila who was devoted to Vishnu and was so powerful that he was like the great Vishnu himself. Kapila had an ashrama in the Patala Lokas

Indra and Devas prayed to Kapila to deliver the world from Sagara's evil sons. The Sacrifice Horse was launched and released under the supervision of Maharathi Amshuman the renowned 'dhanurdhara' and the famed son of Asamanjasa. But the Sacrifice Horse disappeared suddenly as was robbed away by Mahendra Himself. Since the launched Horse was missing, the Ritviks felt that it was not a good omen and that somebody appeared to have stolen and the robber be chased fast to recover it. Then presiding over the Yajna, the Chakravarti commanded the sixty thousand mighty Sagara Putras to chase the thief at once. He further ordered that even if they would have to go round the earth, they ought not return empty handed without the Sacrificial Horse. The Chakravarti declared that he would stay put firmly along with the Ritviks and Amshuman. The mighty sixty thousand strong Sagara Putras divided the territories of earth and left in grand groups and pierced earth with their swords and trishulas so fiercely that bhudevi looked to have wept with excruciating pain. In the process, the entire earth all over 'jambu dwipa' was dug up deep upside down as there were alarms of humans, animals and birds attracting the attention of celestials too as though there were repetitive and alarming earthquakes. The rattled celestials like Gandharvas, as also Asuras, and Maha Sarpas from the earth down under being alarmed approached Brahma Deva and complained: Bhagavan pṛthivī sarvā khanyate sagarātmajaiḥ, bahavaś ca mahātmāno vadhyante jalacārīṇaḥ/ ayaṁ yajñahano 'smākam anenāśvo 'panīyate, iti te sarvabhūtāni nighnanti sagarātmajāḥ/ Brahma Deva! Sagara Chakravarti's sixty thousand strong sons of extraordinary physical prowess have broken down hells on earth and are digging earth deep under on the plea of searching for 'Yagnaashva' of Sagara's 'maha yajnya' and as a result earth had been dug up deep and entered the 'paatala lokas' too in a manner that the natives of earth and the nether lokas too are being decimated mercilessly and hence we are frightened being on the fringes of death! As the Sagara Kumaras continued the digging of Rasaatala for the missing Sacrificial Horse, Bhagavan Vishnu in the form of Kapila Maharshi reddened his eyes while the mighty Sagara Putras were engrossed in the unilateral task of digging again and again. They finally found the Sagara Chakravarti's Yagnaashva just near around the Maharshi. asmākaṁ tvaṁ hi turagaṁ yajñīyaṁ hṛtavān asi, durmedhas tvaṁ hi samprāptān viddhi naḥ sagarātmajān/ śrutvā tad vacanaṁ teṣāṁ kapilo raghunandana, roṣeṇa mahatāviṣṭo humkāram akarot tadā/ tatas tenāprameyena kapilena mahātmanā, bhasmarāśīkṛtāḥ sarve kākutstha sagarātmajāḥ/ As soon as hardworking Sagara Putras cited the 'Yagnaashva' grazing in the vicinity of a Maharshi, they started shouting with anger with pent up emotions of frustrations for several days and nights stating 'you the wicked Maharshi! how dare you had hidden the Sacrificial Horse here as it had been grazing grass coolly here; now we the mighty have arrived; be it well realised that we are the mighty sons of the almighty Chakravarti Sagara himself! The Maharshi on hearing the braggings of Sagara Kumaras made a 'humkaara' in raging fury and the totality of the sixty thousand valiant force were burnt to ashes. Meanwhile Sagara wondered as to what might have happened to the Sagara Putras and the Sacrificial Horse as it was a long time that they departed. Then Amshuman volunteered to depart and find out about the position of his uncles. Chakravarti alerted the grandson to be very vigilant as he might encounter potent and enemy elements all the way and hence should be well armed with swords and archery. He further alerted that some persons of cunningness and misleadings might also be faced and such persons would need to be killed mercilessly. Thus having accorded an auspicious farewell Amshuman entered Rasatala came across Diggaja Virupaksha and the former prostrated and the diggaja who blessingly indicated that he would return soon with the Yagnaashva. Amshuman no doubt secured the Yagnaashva but was horrified to see the huge heaps of human ashes laid on the long stretches on land. Amshuman realised that the entire Sagara sena was no more and started crying away for long. Then he found the 'Yagnaashva' moving nearby. Amshuman then desired to greet the ashes and looked for any water reserves nearby and searched a lot. Looking up at the high skies, he being equipped with the ability to vision far and high, spotted the Pakshi Raja Garuda who was the uncle of Sagara Putras as Devi Vinata the wife of Kashyapa begot Garuda the Vishnu vahana and Aruna the charioteer of the eka chakra of Surya Deva. Garuda Deva flew down and consoled Amshuman not to cry much as what all had happened was all for Loka Kalyana in the times ahead. Garuda Deva further stated that Maharshi Kapila being Vishnu himself had turned Sagara Putras for a purpose and hence it was not proper to perform 'jalaanjali' for the departed ones. He further stated that 'tarpanas' to the departed ones might as well be performed with the sacred waters of Ganga; Garuda asserted to Amshuman: Gaṅgā himavato jyeṣṭhā duhitā puruṣarṣabha, bhasmarāśīkṛtān etān pāvayel lokapāvanī/ tayā klinnam idaṁ bhasma gaṅgayā lokakāntayā, śaṣṭīm putrasahasrāṇi svargalokaṁ nayiṣyati/ Narashreshtha! Himavan's elder daughter Devi Ganga be brought down to bhuloka from her celestial abode. Garuda further advised to return back to the Kingdom along with the Sacrificial Horse for the time being. On return King Sagara heard as to what all happened from Amshuman especially about the imperative of inviting the celestial lokas down to earth and relieve the Souls of the Sagara Kumaras. King Sagara then dutifully performed the Maha Ashva medha yajna and after ruling the kingdom for thirty thousand years passed away peacefully. Consequent upon the death of Sagara Chakravarti, the entire public of the Kingdom unanimously chose Amshuman as the King. Thereafter the illustrious Amshuman having ruled over the kingdom for ever thirty thousand years, departed for tapasya on the heights of Himalayas and thereafter reached swarja loka. Meanwhile King Amshuman's son Dilip who subsequently became the King recalled that that Chakravarti Sagara's famed sons who were his ancestors could not attain salvation yet due to the reason of Maha Garuda's directive that only the flows of Sacred Ganga could redeem. King Dilip kept on wondering through out his life as to how to bring down from the skies; meanwhile he was blessed with a son as named Bhagiratha who even from childhood outstanding traits of Dharma and what was more interesting was of grit and determination. The King Dilip who too proved himself as a King of virtuosity lived for thirty thousand years having well sustained the traditional values of Kingship established by the immemorial Sagara Chakravarti himself, even as planning ambitiously as to how best to bring Devi Ganga down to earth and at the end was welcomed into Imndra Loka. As Bhagiratha assumed Kingship, it looked that all the celestials came down and witnessed the royal ceremonies. He ruled the Kingdom strictly on the basis of the well established precepts of Dharma and Nyaya for good number of years but as there was no further progeny forthcoming for long, the divine duty of bringing Ganga down to earth became intense day after day and having determined so entrusted the responsibility of Kingship to his Ministers and retired to severe tapasya at the Punya kshetra Gokarna. His life's mission was to bring Ganges down to Earth from Heavens. Bhagiradha's prayers were indeed granted by Mother Ganges to the devotee but warned him that the force of the flow from the Heavens to Earth could be withstood by no less than Lord Siva Himself! Bhagiradha never stopped his grand endeavour and worshipped Lord Siva with austerities and purity who agreed, not only because of the sincerity with which the devotee desired to fulfill the long-standing family wish but also owing to the reason of Universal advantage. The Lord assumed a massive body and controlled the force of the River flowing from Lord Vishnu's feet and bore the brunt of the impact on His head in His 'Jatajut' or twisted hairs and released but a portion of the Holy River. Bhagiradha directed the fiery flow by riding a fast Chariot and brought it to the place where the ashes of his forefathers were purified and their souls liberated to Heavens. Till date, humanity continues to be grateful to him for the ever lasting memory of his gigantic efforts in our reaping the fruits of his labour in the huge land-mass covering entire 'Aryavarta' (Northern India)!.]

Thus having most unfortunately comparing Shri Rama's punishment to a fourteen year long living in 'dandakaranya' with Sagara Chakravarti's banishing the evil son Asamanjasa, the blatantly unashamed Kaikeyi confronted King Dasharatha who got shocked and bewildered with this comparison as the on lookers in the Inner Palace were upset and dazed too. Dasharatha's Prime Minister Siddhartha at once reacted agitatedly and explained the damaging comparison of Shri Rama and Asamanjasa! Asamañjo gṛhītvā tu krīḍitaḥ pathi dārakān, sarayvāḥ prakṣipann apsu ramate tena durmatih/ tam dṛṣṭvā nāgarah sarve kruddhā rājānam abruvan, asamañjam vṛṣṭivāikam asmān vā rāṣṭravardhana/ tām uvāca tato rājā kinīmīttam idam bhayam, tās cāpi rājñā saṁprṛṣṭā vākyaṁ prakṛtayo 'bruvan/ krīḍitas tv eṣa naḥ putrān bālān udbhrāntacetanaḥ, sarayvām prakṣipan maurkhyād atulām prītim aśnute/ sa tāsām vacanam śrutvā prakṛtīnām narādhipa, tam tatyājāhitam putram tāsām priyacikīrṣayā/ ity evam atyajād rājā sagaro vai sudhārmikaḥ, rāmaḥ kim akarot pāpam yenaivam uparudhyate/ He expained in detail to Kaikeyi : 'Devi! Asamanja was an evil minded Raja Kumara who used to collect playful boys on streets and threw in to the Sayayu River for vicarious glee! The highly agitated heads of the public in the city were repeatedly requesting the Chakravarti to save them from the mischievous deeds and escapades of the Prince and his menacing followers. Then Sagara finally decided to get rid of the evil minded Asamanjasa and asked his soldiers to provide him adequate food and sustenance of money and pack him and followers banishing further entry into the empire. Then Asamanjasa and a few followers had to save themselves staying in mountain caves and sustain by eating roots, leaves and wild tree fruits. But, which evil path indeed that Rama had taken to and for which unimaginable deeds of mischief that he should deserve to be banned out of the Kingdom! Nahi kinchana pashyaamo Raghavasyaagunam vayam, durlabho hyaasya nirayah Shassaankasyeva kalamasham! One indeed could ever see critically even a spot of blemish in Rama like what one could see as of Shukla paksha dwiteeya chandra!' The Prime Minister then challenged Kaikeyi and warned her from 'Loka Ninda' or Public Hatred!' As Siddhardha thus reprimanded Kaikeyi, King Dashartha addressed her: 'Paapini the worst ever sinner! Do'nt you have that much of commonsense of comparing Asamanjasa and Shri Rama! You are surely on the way of stupidity and insanity! Now, I cannot tolerate any further and am leaving along with Rama the icon of perfection.

Reacting what the Priminister of the Kingdom had explained to Kaikeyi, King Dasharatha stated that hereby he would be discarding the Kingship as he too should get readied to accompany Rama to the forest life. He remarked: 'Of which avail to me of the army and its headship as now onward I too should sustain myself with roots and forest fruits. As an elephant king gets tied with iron shackles, I too would now be freed from them to move about freely now onward. Then the Prime Minister too sounded likewise and asked the servant maids of Kaikeyi to bring for him too ‘valkala vastras’. Then, surprisingly Kaikeyi herself brought several the deer skins to Shri Rama most insultingly and said with raised tone: alright! Wear them! Then the obedient Rama had accepted by stretching both of his hands and having changed his princely attire to that of hermit’s dress of deer skins in public gaze! Similarly, Lakshmana too discarded his princely dress and did what Rama did. Then Devi Sita readied herself to accept with shivering hands the ‘cheera vastras’ from Kaikeyi and having broken into unstoppable tears in her lotus eyes and with wet nose, looked at them staringly with sense of shame and timidity. With intermittent pauses, she extended both her hands even as Kaikeyi shoved the skins into Sita’s palms with a forceful push. Sita then discarded her soft and scented silk robes and asked Rama: Nadha! Do you know as to how do the forest women wear the deer skins! As Rama helped her, she made efforts to change over with shame, helplessness and frustration and stood beside her husband obediently. As she was doing so the servant maids cried away loudly wondering at the twists of fate from born princess to a jungle woman! Some of the elder servant maids who knew Rama as a boy, addressed him cryingly : Rama! How come the princess could transform as a forest lass! Maharshi Vasishtha too witnessed the ugliest scene with overflowing tears in his eyes especially as Devi Sita was proving herself as Maha Pativrata and shouted on Kaikeyi: Na gantavyam vanam Devyaa Seetayaa sheela varjite, anushthaasyati Raamasya Sitaam prakritamaasanam/ Atmaa hi daaraah sarveshaam daara angrahavartinaam, aatmeyamiti Raamasya paalayishyati medineem/ ‘Durbuddhi Kaikeyi! Are you not the unique blunder of the Universe! Devi Sita should never be destined to experience forest life and instead be seated on a high throne of queenship. The entirety of womanhood is half of her physique and consciousness and as such the very Soul of Rama as the singular queen of the universe!’ The Maharshi further shouted on Kaikeyi: Ekasya Raamasya vane nivaasastvayaa vrittah kaikeya raaja putri! Vibhushitayam prati karmanitvayaa vasatvaranye saha Raghavena/ ‘Kaikeyi! you demanded Rama’s ‘vana vaasa’ only, but not for Sita. But Sita has to be the queen and that of course possible with Rama as the King!’

Dasharatha too rejects Sita wearing Valka vastras even as Kaikeyi was unhappy, but Rama approves

Maharshi Vasishtha had then very angrily shouted on King Dasharatha that Devi Sita had come to the state of assuming the ‘Cheera Vastras’ as an ‘anaadha’ or a desolate or rejected woman even being a Queen; He howled and wept stating : Shame on you as a King of Glory! You have sacrificed your entire life as a valiant , brave and proud Maha Raja, upholding the supreme principles of Dharma and Fame. Then the angry Maharshi shouted on Kaikeyi: ‘ Is it appropriate that Devi Sita is forced to dress up as a forest woman’! Iyam hi kasyaapi karoti kinchit tapasvini Raja vasasya putree,yaa cheeramaasadya

As Vasishtha scolded the King, the latter in turn further addressed Kaikeyi: ‘In which unkindly manner that you handed over and forced this Dharma patni Sita to dare and to wear the ‘mriga charmas’!; which kind of vengeance is that which is justified by any stretch of imagination! Cheeraanyapaasvaajjanakasya kanyaa neyam pratigjnaa mama dattapurvaa, yathaa sukham gacchhatu Rajaputree vanam samagraa saha sarvatratraih/ Kaikeyi! You seemed to have forced to remove her royal dress and commanded her to go to forests only this specific manner as you had taken a vow to do so! In case Rama had done any harm to you or your interest to you, then it might have behaved like as you had, but in which manner are you justified to have done what all you have had!’ As the King was blasting away Devi Kaikeyi, Shri Rama intervened: ‘Dharmatma! Dear father! My mother Devi Kousalya has too come of age; her mind set is quite virtuous and broad visioned and all through her life and she had never negated your instructions. Even as she is unable to withstand my absence for long, you ought to be sensitive enough to take care of your good health and longevity too. That is precisely why you should maintain calmness without excessive anger and frustration. This is my earnest request, before our departure for ‘dandakaranya’.

As Rama thus requested his father to take very special care of his mother and of his own health with least possible mental tension of his own too, Dasharatha could not even speak nor even see properly due to excessive tears flowing blurring his vision. For a while he looked lost of his memory but quickly enough recovered and mumbled: ‘ perhaps, in by previous life I might have killed countless ‘praanis’ and forcibly resorted to separation of cows from their calves. As my time of death had not taken place yet, I am having to suffer at the hands of Kaikeyi. Alas, even as my dear sons of Fire like purity are before me clad with deer skins instead of silk garments of dazzling brightness, my vital energy is still ticking.’ Then Dasharatha with his stilled senses could barely utter : ‘hey Ram’ and relapsed into a heavy swoon lost consciousness and could not utter a word. After a while however he was able to accost Sumantra instructing in a kind of sign-language to take Rama upto the boundaries of Ayodhya. In his mind however, Dasharatha was able to think on the memory screen: Evaṁ manye guṇavatām guṇānām phalam ucyate, pitrā mātṛā ca yat sādhuḥ vīro nirvāsyate vanam/ As one’s own eldest son of outstanding virtue and character is forcibly sent away from one’s own house by the parents, then the same type of retribution of justice gets awarded, as per Shastras. Meanwhile, Sarathi Sumantra announced to the King that a prize chariot with top ranking white horses was readied up. Then the King called for the ‘Koshaadhaari’, or the Chief Treasurer and instructed that Devi Sita’s body wise precious jewellery be got ready in the chariot. Meanwhile Devi Kousalya hugged her daughter-in-law tightly and was hardly able to say in feeble tone: asatyāḥ sarvaloke 'smīn satatam satkṛtāḥ priyaiḥ bhartāraṁ nānumanyante vinipātagataṁ striyaḥ/ My dearest daughter! Those women who having secured respect and pleasure from her husbands but discard them in difficult times are termed as ‘Asatis’ or of tainted family environment. Such women are multi faced and of multiple moods. Saadhveenaam tu sthitaanaam tu sheele satye shrute sthite , streenaam pavitram paramam patireko visheshyate/ Sa tvayaa naavamantavyah purah pravraajito vanam, tava deva samastvesha nirdhanah sadhanopivaa/ But, women of high family background of upbringing, truthfulness, virtue, and the directives of Shastra tend to turn them as ‘pativratas’. Devi Sita readily absorbed the intent and connotation of what her mother-in-law counselled and replied: Mother! I will most certainly practise what you have counselled especially about the pattern of behavior towards my husband, as this indeed had been a counselling of the yore. Just as the ‘Prabha’ or the Shine and Coolness would never be away from Chandra, a Pativrata could never be distinct from her husband and that precisely is the essence of loyal wife in the timings of cool rains or thunders. nātantrī vādyate vīṇā nācakro vartate rathaḥ, nāpatih sukham edhate yā syād api śatātmajā/ The musical instrument of Veena would not be sounded without ‘tantri’ nor a chariot could move without a charioteer; a woman might produce hundred children but might not yield true contentment to her husband. Mitam dadāti hi pitā mitam mātā mitam sutāḥ, amitasya hi dātāraṁ bhartāraṁ kā na pūjayet/ A woman might reap happiness and solace from her father, brother, or children but no other male could gift her unlimited joy! Would there be woman whose sincere service with devotion and faith to her husband reap pleasure in ‘iha loka’ and ‘para loka’. As Devi Sita expressed her sentiments, Kousalya was overwhelmed with joy with bursting tears. In turn, Sita folded her hands and asked her that this passing instance of a fourteen year forest life be considered as only a passing phase and as such neither she herself should not take to heart nor nag the old King. Then Shri Rama folded his hands and bid farewell to all the three mothers.

Rama Lakshmanas and Devi Sita touched the feet of King Dasharatha and performed 'pradakshina' to King Dasharatha. Rama Sita's once again prostrated to Koushalya and so did Lakshmana to Devi Sumitra. Sumitra said endearingly that while performing dutiful devotion to Sita-Ramas, he should be ever vigilant as his bounden duty to the elder brother would be obligatory; she stressed that Lakshmana ought to consider that Rama should be considered on par with King Dasaratha himself and Devi Sita as his own mother. She then wished auspicious farewell while emphasising the ancient precepts of dharma: Idam hi vṛttam ucitam kulasyāśya sanātanam, dānam dīkṣā ca yajñeṣu tanutyāgo mṛdheṣu ca/ Daana-deeksha- and tyaga or liberal charity- determined resolution- and sacrifice are the ancient precepts of dharma. Then Sumantra the ever dutiful charioteer with folded hands, like Matali to Indra, requested Sita-Rama-Lakshmanas to enter the chariot with auspiciousness and remarked that their eventful entry would mark the clicking of the clock of fourteen years as prescribed by Devi Kaikeyi! This remark of Sumantra would indeed smack of a jibe at the villian of Ramayana! Then Devi Sita was seated foremost along with Rama, while Lakshmana was standing behind, while Sumantra initiated the forward movement. tataḥ sabālavṛddhā sā purī paramapīḍitā, rāmam evābhīdudrāva gharmārtāḥ salilam yathā/ pārśvataḥ prṣṭhataś cāpi lambamānās tadunmukhāḥ, bāṣpāpūrṇamukhāḥ sarve tam ūcur bhṛśaduhkhitāḥ/ samyaccha vājinām raśmīn sūta yāhi śanaiḥ śanaiḥ, mukham drakṣyāmi rāmasya durdarśam no bhaviṣyati/The crowds of Ayodhya then started running behind the chariot from a child to the old aged as though they were terribly thirsty running for drops of water on mid days. They started shouting at the charioteer to slow down the run stating that henceforth visualisation of Rama in person might occur for several years now! There were remarks from the crowd: kṛtakṛtyā hi vaidehī chāyevānugatā patim, na jahāti ratā dharme merum arkaprabhā yathā/Devi Sita has proved now as a true Pativrata being ever present with Rama like Surya Deva is ever anchored to Meru Mountain.

Vishleshana on Meru Mountain and Surya Deva:

Meru Parvata: Meroh praachayaam dishaayaam tu Manasottara murdhani, vasvoka saaraa Mahendra puri hema parishkritaa/ Dakshinena punar meror Maanasasvaiva prishthatah, Vaivasvatonivasati Yamaasamyam -ana pure/ Prateechyaam cha punrmero manassyaiva murdhani, Sukhaa naama puri ramyaa Varunasyaapi dheematah/ Disyuttarasyaam Merestu Manassyaiva murdhani, tulyaa Mahendra puraastu Somasyaapi Vibhaapuri/ Maanasassyottare prishthe Lokapaalaas -chaturdisham, sthithaa dharma vyavastaardham Dharma samrakshanaaya cha/ Loka paalo parishtha -atthu sarvato dakshinaayane, kaashthaa gatasya Suryasya gatim tasyanibodhata/Dakshinopa- krame Suryah kshipteshuriva gacchati, jyotishaam chakramaadaaya satatam parigacchati/ Madhyata chamaraavatyaaam yadaa bhavati Bhaskarah, Vaivasvate Samyamane udyamstatra pradrishyate/ Sukhaayaa mardharaatryaaam tu Vibhaayaa mastameticha, Vaivasvate Samyamane madhyaahne tu Raviryadaa/ Sukhaayaa matha vaarunyaamuttishtthantu drishyate, vibhyaayaamardharaatram tu maahendryaa mastameticha/ Sukhaayaamatha vaarunyaam madyaahne cha aryamaa yadaa, vibhaayaam Somapuryaaam tu uttishthati Vibhaavasuh/ Raatyardhamamaraavartyaaam astameti Yamasya cha, Somapuryaaam Vibhaayaam tu maddhaahnechaaryamaa yadaa/ Maahendryaa mamaraavartyaaam mudgacchati ivaakarah, Ardha raatram Samyamane Vaarunyaamastameticha/ (To the east of Meru Parvata, atop the Manasarovara mountain, there exists Vasvaikasaara named Mahendra Nagara made of gold. Again to the south of Meru Parvata's back side, there is Manasapurvata and the Samyamani Pura where Lord Yama the illustrious son of Surya Deva resides. To the west of Meru parvata, on the west of Manasapurvata atop Sukha Purawhere Varuna Deva resides. To the north of Meru Parvata atop the Mahendra parvata, Vibhavari Pura where Chandra Deva resides. Behind the Manasotara on the four sides, the Ashta Dik Loka Paalakas are placed to protect Dharma and in the dakshinaayana period, Surya Deva oversees the activities of the Ashta Palakas during his period. Now, about the dakshinayana the travel of Surya ; in the jyotishchakra in his pradakshina, He reaches Amaravati the capital of Indra Deva by the midday on earth; that would be when it coincides with Yama Raja's rising time, in Chandra's mid night time and so on. As Surya performs pradakshina or self-circumambulation, he also does the same to nakshatras too do likewise. Precisely at the 'udaya' and 'astama' timings he does exactly the same year in and year out. At the Sun Rise he gradually increases his radiance till the afternoon and gradually reduces his tejas till the dusk time. In this way, Surya Deva performs pradakshina or circubambulation of self and so do the nakshatra mandali too. These all travel southward and at the rise and setting timings are defined as also at the poorvaahna and aparaahna or pre noon and afternoon they pass through two each of Deva puris and at the noon time, one Devapuri. Thus Surya from the rise gains momentum of radiance till afternoon and gradually lessens the severity of the kiranas thereafter till Sun set. Surya has the constant awareness of he 'udaya' and 'astamaya' at the east and west directions; while radiating the eastern side, spreading the heat and illumination on the sidewise north and south and decreasing the severity till disappearance. Meru Parvata is stated to be situated in the north of the highest of all the mountains; Lokaaloka is situated in the southern direction and since Prithvi's shadows are spread over, those Beings situated on the other side of the hemisphere are unable to see Surya in the nights. Thus Surya Deva with a lakh of kiranas reaches the mid portion of 'Pushkaradwipa' by that time, despite his speed of one 'muhurta' or two ghadis at the rate of one thirty lakh and fifty thousand yojanas plus! Thus Surya Deva as he traverses southward for six months turns to uttarayana or northbound. At the time of Dakshinayana, Surya would have reached the travel to the mid portion of Pushkara dwipa. This dwipa is as thrice as distant from Mru to Manasarovara! Now the distance on the southern course or Dakshinayana is of nine crore fifty lakh yojanas. After the dakshinayana, Surya reaches the Vishuva sthaana or the 'khagoleeya vishuvadvritta bindu' at the north of Ksheera sagara. Vishvan mandala parinama is three cores twenty one lakh yojanas. As Surya's course gets north bound or uttarayana entering 'shravana nakshatra', then his course would be towards gomoda dwipa in between the south and north parts and in between are located jaradrava - Iravata to the north and Vaishvanara to the south. Towards north is named Naaga veedhi and to the south is the Ajaveedhi.]

The surging crowds were also making remarks on Lakshmana: aho lakṣmaṇa siddhārthaḥ satatām priyavādinam, bhrātaram devasamkāśam yas tvam paricariṣyasi/ They appeared to have stated that when Maha Vishnu descended to earth as Rama, Adishesha accompanied him as Lakshmana, his services to Rama were exemplary; he had no thoughts of his own comfort but other than of Rama's as he would not sleep a wink, as a guard over his brother with ever lasting vigil. The public of Ayodhya was surging on the main high roads and the street corners connecting the Raja Marga for Rama darshana beating their chests and crying aloud; the women folk were particularly agitated with hoarse and shrill throats as though the maha pralaya submerged the earth. Meanwhile, King Dasharadha too along with the queens and maids moved out of his palace with tottering steps and shaky physique wondering whether he could ever vision Rama once again in his life time. That particular scene was like Chandra Deva having been bitten off by Rahu at the 'grahana kaala'! Then Rama instructed Sumantra to speed up the chariot but the latter was just not able to do so as the rushing flow of men, women and children looked alarming. As the chariot was nearly approaching the terminal of the Raja Marga, the crowds, their gusty flows, and the high pitched sounds were alarming like of earth quakes. Meanwhile King Dasharatha was unable to stand and lost his balance while Rama having realised the extreme seriousness of the situation desperately shouted to let the chariot move faster and faster, even as there were to be the blatant hazards of casualty of a crushes of men-women-and children.

As the Shri Rama- Sita- Lakshmana's chariot as conducted by Sumantra had literally penetrated forcibly through the thronging crowds crying away with agony from their hearts and souls, the 'Ranivasa Streets' too were agitated shouting with agony: 'Alas indeed: Rama is leaving all of us away! He is the source of our strength to defend us whenever we were blamed by the superiors, he would readily be available to mediate and defend us and vindicate justice and thus share our genuine sorrows! He had always been helpful to us and pro-active in our domestic problems and in our discharge of official duties. Rama had been always treating us the servant maids respectfully as in the case of his mothers! Where is Rama to have left us in the depths of distress like this, for no fault or sinful deed of his, just because of the personal ambition and sinful desire of Kaikeyi and the helplessness of the forlorn King! Alas indeed, this is our fate too as the King has lost his balance of mind, even despite his glory and popularity for his heroic and 'dharmaic' deeds, had despatched Rama to the deep forests, even he is a symbol of 'dharma parayana, satyavrata, and nyaaya sheela!' Are not we and so do the rest of the Queens like the aging cows having lost their unique calf, desperate with anguish and helplessness!' Having heard such high pitch distressed shoutings with heart beatings, King Dasharatha who had cried and cried was lost in blankness of thinking. Naagnihotraani ahuyanta naapachan grihamedhinah, akruvan na prajaah kaaryam Sryas- chaantara dheeyata/ Vyasrujan kavalaan naagaagaavo vatsaan na paayayan, putram prathamajam lahbdhwaa jananee naabhya nadata/ Through out that fateful day, fireplaces and the kitchens were shut down, the householders never ate any food, the public was unable to perform their routine chores and was a complete standstill; eventually there was Sunset, elephants discarded their food, cows did not feed their calves and most strangely enough no pregnant mother was delighted at the offspring delivered on that fateful day! All the planets like Trishanku, Mangala, Guru, Budha as also Shukra, Shani and so on followed 'vakra gati' or the distorted routes and got cruel around Chandra is the night time. The brightness and the twinkle of 'Nakshatra Mandalas' was blank and blackened and the night was dismal and unusual. In fact, as Rama's chariot wheels gained momentum, there were tremors and quakes of earth. The 'ashta diks' or the eight directions got twisted disfigured and there was directionless gloom all around. tatas tv ayodhyā rahitā mahātmanā; purāṇdareṇeva mahī saparvatā, cacāla ghoram bhayaabhārapīḍitā; sanāgayodhāśvagaṇā nanāda ca/ Thus entire Ahodhyapuri fell silent, crestfallen, gloomy and forlorn but for frightening and pitched up shouts and cryings without Rama the epic hero!

Even as the horse cart carrying Rama Lashmana Sitas disappeared far away from human vision and the dust raised and the sounds of horses got distant, King Dasharatha fell down unconscious once again, when Devi Kousalya was standing right to him and Kaikeyi to his left. As Kousalya lifted up Dasharatha slowly and sought to comfort him with care and concern, he saw the pretentious Kaikeyi as if she too shared the anxiety touched his body, the King who was even at the verge of relapse again pulled up his throat and yelled: kaikeyi mā mamāṅgāni sprākṣīs tvam duṣṭacārīnī, na hi tvām draṣṭum icchāmi na bhāryā na ca bāndhavi/ 'Paapapurni Kaikeyi! Don't you dare and touch my body as I hate to look at your face! You are neither my wife nor relative! You are merely interested in your welfare and wealth and hence I am discarding you as my wife. No doubt I had wedded you by 'agnipramana', but am hereby divorcing you in this life and next life too. bharataś cet pratītaḥ syād rājyam prāpyedam avyayam, yan me sa dadyāt pītarthaṁ mā mā tad dattam āgamat/ In case Bharata too gets overjoyed on assuming the kingship without any qualms of his conscience, if he cares to perform my 'shraaddha' after by death and offered 'pinda daana and jala tarpanaas', may those obsequies be invalidated by Pitru Devatas.' Thus King Dasharatha was spewing venomous and malicious fire addressing Kaikeyi, Devi Kausalya was concerned of the King's frenzy and having pacified him somewhat took him away to his mansion. By realising his own mistake of giving away the boons to Kaikeyi from which he could not wriggle out by the tight mess that he had jumped in and the most unfortunate consequences, he had to ruminate for life-taking consequences of disaster and irrecoverable agony. He kept on gazing behind for the chariot like Surya Deva devoured by Rahu. He commenced imagining that the footprints of the horses tied to the chariot were visible but Rama had disappeared! He got immersed in the thoughts of Rama as always enjoyed lying on cushioned beds with aromatic smells all around but now would have to perforce lie sleepless on bare and piercing mountain rocks! Then he would have to breathe heavily and wake up and stand by dusting his body with bare hands like an elephant king would use his trunk and seek to clean. He should clearly be like an 'anaadha' and with no help anywhere in the sight should take to his duties for himself and his wife too. Thus imagining the fateful days ahead of Rama then, involuntarily, Dasharatha flared up suddenly and shouted at Kaikeyi : oh wretched woman! Be a widow soon and reign the Kingdom without worries, as in the absence of Shri Rama my life is not worth prolonging. Having thus declared, he sought to enter his mansion; he noticed the roads were empty, the market places were closed and the city of Ayodhya looked lonely and blank, as though Surya Deva hid himself with dark clouds and as if Garuda lifted the ever bustling Ayodhya up to blank clouds. Then he asked the doormen to carry him away to Kousalya and having reached there stated in sinking tone: 'take me to Rama'. Then she broke into loud cryings and could not control herself.

A highly agitated Pattamahishi Kousalya then addressed her husband that now that Rama had finally left Ayodhya for ‘aranya vaasa’, Kaikeyi ought to be like a ‘sarpini’ or a female cobra having now acquired fresh skin with pioson emitting from her throat and with unlimited freedom. As the hidrance of Rama having been crossed, she would now indulge in find faulting opportunities against me. If only Rama were to be a beggar on streets or be a slave to Kaikeyi, even then in such situations might be preferred by me as at least then I could have his daily darshan; perhaps I should have begged Kaikeyi for such alternatives, but now I could not even see him or be contented with his presence! But now, Kaikeyi has had the last and form resolve in despatching Rama to the dense jungles for a long duration of fourteen years and this would smack of a situation of Devatas being denied of the taste of the ‘havishaanna’ by way of offerings to Agnihotra and instead of offering that to Rakshasaas! By now, Rama like an elephant king would have entered the deep forests along with his dear ‘saadhvi’ and trusted younger brother. Maha Raja! is this not a cruel twist of destiny that an exemplary human like Shri Rama has been instructed by his own father and was banished to unknown forests as accompanied by his faithful wife and ever trusted brother! Indeed, was this absolutely inevitable to have accorded approval to a vicious and extremely selfish woman! Such youthful persons especially in the wake of their auspicious weddings should have been granted by their parents of memorable wedded life instead of cruelly ordering them to suffer miseries of the dimension of this magnitude! When and whether in my life time might arrive a fortuitous time as I could see Rama in person but not in imagination ever and when could I meet Devi Sita and Lakshmanas the ever loyalists of ages! When again the citizens of Ayodhya could hear even hints of their return and get intoxicated in raptures with unending celebrations of houses, markets, temples, and Raja Margas let alone the sreet corners besides each and every house holds! Indeed the city of Ayodhya and the entire kingdom would be awaiting the most auspicious time as though of the great oceans wait on for the Purnima the Full Moon Day with faith and devotion. Like the cows are inevitably followed by bulls, the arrival of Rama Sita Lakshmanas should be a truly historic occasion that the citizens of Ayodhya should be patiently awaiting so that, that would be a cause for agitation of the internal and external enemies and outstanding relief for the Kingdom. When again the pretty brahmana kanyas of Ayodhya with shining dresses and sparkling looks queue up for the memorable welcome of Rama Sita Lakshmanas at the entrance gates of Ayodhya with scented flower shovers, musical dances and trays of delightful ‘aarties’!

Maha Raja! It appears that in my previous life, I might have been a low class female who forced to feed a toddler with milk denied of calves as her mother's breasts were mutilated! Indeed, Kaikeyi denied me of forcefully thrusting such milk instead of the joy of my breast milk! Indeed, how could I bear the sufferance of the absence of my dearest Rama. How the mother earth continue the oppressive heat of scorching mid day Sun as I have to bear the separation of Rama for long! Putra shoka is like the tyrannical fire burning me with hopelessness and desperation!

As Sumitra Devi the mother of Lakshmana then addressed Kousalya emphasising the futility of crying and heart renderings. She stated that Rama being a genuine 'Satyavaadi' would most certainly obey the instructions of his father, come what might! śiṣṭair ācarite samyak śāśvat pretya phalodaye, rāmo dharme sthitāḥ śreṣṭho na sa śocyāḥ kadā cana/ Dear sister! Lakshmana is replete with helpfulness to each and every being on earth; most certainly for Rama especially. This is an assetful and most dependable trust of optimism. Now, Devi Sita of Maha Lakshmi swarupa as the incarnation of opulence and fortune has followed Rama like Lakshmi follows Maha Vishnu. By realising the purity and brilliance, could even mid-day Surya Rays scorch Rama's body ever! [Vishleshama on Rama's killing Subahu Rakshasa: Refer Essence of Valmiki Baala Ramayana Sarga Thirty:

'Having rested in the Tataka vana itself overnight, Vishvamitra addressed Shri Rama smilingly and expressed his great satisfaction at the Tataki samhara and initiated his teachings of applied astra vidya/ He stated that initially he would teach the celestial missiles of danda chakra, dharma chakra, kaala chakra, vishnu chakra, and the most powerful Aindra chakra. Then the Sage instructed the arts of application and throwing away of Indra's Vajrastra, Shiva Deva's trishula praharana, and Brahma's granted Aishikastra and Shira -chedana astra. Then the Maharshi taught the boys of the magnificent vidya of 'gadaa praharana' or the art of battling with maces like 'modaki' - 'prahari' - shikhari of forcible applications of mace strokings, throwings and mace head rubbings. Then Vishvamitra taught the astras of 'dharma paasha-kaala paasha-and varuna paasha'. Subsequently they were taught two kinds of dry and wet rounded applications of astras viz. 'ashani- pinaka-narayanaastras'. Then Rama Lakshmanas were taught Agneyastra fond of Agni Deva resulting in fierce flames of fire renowned as Shikharaastra- Vayavyastra which sweeps away the opponent with virulent sweeps away. Then the Maharshi teaches the Kakutsa nandanaas of 'Hayashira Astra' - 'Krounchana Astra' and 'Shakti Dvayaastra' or of high potent twin astras attacking the opponent with doubled up potency. The Maharshi was pleased to instruct Rama Lakshmanas the astras named 'kankala' -the devastating 'musala' - and the destructive 'Kapaala' and 'Kinkini' and such astras which could lift up and throw the opponents forcefully. Then in the series were taught the famed 'Nandana Astra' of Vidyadharas as well as the associated mace of fame. The 'Gandharva Priya' astras of 'Sammohana' for relapsing into senselessness like 'Prastaavana- Prashamana-and Soumya' were taught too, besides the 'Mohanaastras' such as for varshana-shoshana-santaapana-vilaapana-maadana which was the beloved of Kama Deva Manmadha himself, and the Gandharvapriya 'Maanava astra', besides the Pishacha priya 'Mohanastra'. Brahmarshi Vishvamitra then instructed the Astras named 'Taamasa-Soumana-Samvarta-Durjaya- Mousala-Satya-and Mayamayaastras too. Then the Maharshi imparted to Rama Lakshmanas the glorious 'Surya prabha Astra' which when once released as an arrow would destroy the enemies to ashes. Simultaneously, the Maharshi conferred 'Shishira naamaka Chandraastra', 'Tvashta (Vishvakarma) naamaka 'Daarunaastra', Bhaga Deva namaka 'Bhayankaraashtra' and 'Sheetoshna' naamaka Astra of Manu Deva. Thus with facing the able disciples of Rama Lakshmanas, the Maharshi Vishvamitra was pleased to bestow the 'astra vidya' of his entire learning.]

Brahmarshi Vishvamitra was then approached by Rama Lakshmanas to explain them vividly as to how and when the Rakshasas were in the habit of destroying the yagjñi karyas of the tapasvees in the ashrama. Then the ashramavaasi rishis near Vishvamitra replied that Maharshi Vishvamitra had already assumed 'mouna vrata' for six days, and thus Rama Lakshmanas would need to be extremely vigilant for six nights long and safeguard from the attacks of the 'nishaacharas'. Accordingly Rama Lakshmanas being alert 'dhanurdharaas' had been vigilant standing just by the side of the Maharshi. As 'agni jvalaas' came up initiated by 'Upaadhyaya' or of the role of Brahma- 'Purohita' of the role of Upadrashta, the flames went up too high as a forewarning indicators of the entry of the rakshasas. Then Vishvamitra along with the Ritvijās initiated the 'aahananeeyaagni' [Panchaagnis being described as Garhapatya- Aahavaneeya- Dakshinaagni-Sabya and Avasatya representing Heaven-Clouds-Earth- Man and Woman vide Kathopa -nishad]. Mantravac ca yathānyāyaṃ yajño 'sau sampravartate, ākāśe ca mahān śabdaḥ prādūr āsīd bhayānakah/ āvārya gaganam megho yathā prāvṛṣi nirgataḥ, tathā māyām vikurvāṇau rākṣasāv abhyadhāvatām/ mārīcaś ca subāhuś ca tayor anucarās tathā, āgamyā bhīmasamkāśā rudhiraughān avāsyjan/ As the resonance of the mantras recited in a pitch increased, there came up the high sounds on the sky with reverberations and dark clouds reflected the massive figures of rakshasas named Maareecha and Subaahu and initiated pourings of blood from the high skies, even as groups of other rakshasas started yelling and joined the task of pouring blood. Rama then addressed Lakshmana and stated that the rakshasas had now arrived and both the Kumaras pitched up their arrows reciting the relevant mantras of 'Maanavaastra'. The arrow from Shri Rama was shot at and pierced Maricha's chest and the latter was farflung by hundred yojanas into the depths of the Sea. Smilingly, Rama told

Lakshmana that this Mantra of ‘Manavasatra’ had only helped to faint and farflung Maricha but now let ‘agneyastra’ be released so that the other mighty Subaahu be killed for good! So saying as Subahu was killed, the rest of the rakshasas fled away for good never ever to return. This was how Raghunandana Shri Rama got rid of all the rakshasa elements of evil energies wantonly spoiling the dharmic duties of yajna karyas by Munis for a very long time. The grateful indwellers of the Ashram praised Rama Lakshmanas under the supreme leadership of Brahmarshi Vishvamitra himself.]

Sarga Forty Four continued: Devi Sumitra further addressed Devi Kousalya that Rama the Purusha Simha was thus a hero of might by body, mind and enormous experience in withstanding the enemies of Rakshasas, let alone humans of evil and of fierce animals and reptiles. Further: Suryasyapi bhavet Suryo hyaagneragnih Pabhoh Prabhuḥ, Shriyaah shreescha bhavedagrayaa, keertyaah keertih, kshame kshamaah, Devatam Devataanaam cha bhutanaam bhutasattamah, tasya ke hyaagunaa Devi vaney vyaapyathavaa pure! Devi! Rama in terms of radiance Surya Deva pales into insignificance while he excels Agni Deva in generating heat just as he is Lakshmi among Lakshmis, ‘kshama’ or forbearances excels kshamaas; not only this, He is ‘the’ Deva among Devas, and the Bhuta among Pancha bhutas. Be it in forests, cities or whereso ever, could there be a Supreme Being among the Beings in the entirety of Creation! Now, the Maha Purusha Shri Rama is atonce the Supreme Mix of Prithvi-Sita-and Lakshmi and thus be in worshipped all together!’ Thus having appeased Devi Kousalya’s excessive agitation, Devi Sumitra assured that he should emphatically assert that the ‘Kaala maana’ or the passage of time would pass sooner or later and Shri Rama accompanied by Devi Sita and brother Lakshmana should return and as such she should await their return with patience and trust; putras te varadaḥ kṣipram ayodhyāṁ punar āgataḥ, karābhyāṁ mṛdupīnābhyāṁ carāṇau pīḍayiṣyati/ Soon enough your auspicious son should arrive back and by uttering sweet bits of conversation should press your feet with their mighty hands with extreme softness; that situation should soon enough return as you should rain your hot tears of joy and excitement, like the present clouds of dejection should shower mountain tops of the present state of your dejection. Devi Kousalya thus got assuaged her dense feelings of agony and dejection.

As the Maha Satya Vrata Shri Rama left Ayodhya and proceeded for assuming long stay in the forests, a large crowd of followers too joined in even as discarding their belongings behind out of agony and desperation. Then Rama addressed the crowds not to get agitated and disheartened for the time being and should meanwhile extend their hearty wishes to the new King Bharata and to his mother Devi Kaikeyi too. Then he complemented Bharata as an extremely learned and mature 'jnaani' and assuredly would extend his helpfulness, charitable disposition, fraternity and protective nature with sincerity and confidence. Rama further declared that King Dasharatha with outstanding wisdom and lifelong experience had thus preferred Bharata as the new King and as such the public must abide by the directives of King Dasharatha as he was longing for retired and peaceful life for now. As such, Rama appealed for refraining their mood of agitation to settlement to a new Kingship with innovative and initiative full of modern style of administration. Rama further stated that the followers had indeed displayed their loyalty to him no doubt for which he should express his gratitude but ought not to transgress the limits as after all even oceans were aware of their boundaries and never cross beyond. Having thus prevented the followers, especially the older generation of Brahmanas, Rama stopped the chariot and descended down to walk. The old Brahmanas affirmed: 'Raghu nandana! You are the unique well wisher of Brahmanas and as such the entirety of 'brahmana samaaja' had decided to follow as we take Agni on our shoulders and follow you as we seek to always perform 'vaaja peya yajña' or the horse sacrifices. They continued stating: hṛdayeṣv avatiṣṭhante vedā ye naḥ paraṁ dhanam, vatsyanty api grheṣv eva dārāś cāritrarakṣitāḥ/ na punar niścayaḥ kāryas tvadgatau sukṛtā matiḥ, tvayi dharmavyapekṣe tu kiṁ syād dharmam avekṣitum/Shri Rama! Our greatest gift and prosperity is our Veda Jnaana embedded in our hearts and that is why we have left behind our wives and children safe at our homes. Now we have dedicated to the cause of Dharma and hence there could not be any reconsideration to uphold the principles. Rama the epitome of 'Sadaachaara'! We are like the swans with our head hairs totally white and even by falling on earth with our devotion to you, we do humbly entreat you either let us follow you or better still return to Ayodhya! Fortunately for Rama, the Vriddha Brahmanas had to halt since the powerful flows of Tamasa River were encountered. The River was of forceful return flows even as the horses of the chariot of Sumanta were bathed and refreshed for the return journey to take place.

Having crossed Tamasa River, Rama then looked at Sita and addressed Lakshmana that since they had the uproarious scenes of public agitations behind, that would be the very first evening and night of their forest life. Before settling down, let us enjoy the scenery of chirruping birds and the movements of forest animals. Then in retrospection, Rama continued: indeed all through the day, the public of Ayodhya should have been terribly agitated, especially King Dashradha had been taking care of them like his own sons and the latter too had been of outstanding virtues. Now as far as our parents they should have been crying away so bitterly that they could even turn blind. Bharataḥ khalu dharmātmā pitaraṁ mātaraṁ ca me, dharmārthakāmasahitair vākyair āśvāsayiṣyati/ bharatasyānṛṣaṁ -satvaṁ saṁcintyāhaṁ punaḥ punaḥ, nānuśocāmi pitaraṁ mātaraṁ cāpi lakṣmaṇa/ Bharata is a 'dharmatma' in his core and on his return to Aydyodhya, he ought to be assuaging the King and the mothers, by way of dharma-artha-and kaama. As I keep recalling about the soft and unadulterated nature of Bharata, I feel quite confident of the parents and their agitative tendency. Having thus feeling confident about Bharata, Rama addressed Lakshmana: tvayā kāryaṁ naravyāghra māṁ anuvrajatā kṛtam, anveṣṭavyā hi vaidehyā rakṣaṇārthe sahāyatā/ 'Nara shrestha Lakshmana! As you have strongly affirmed to have accompanied me and Sita, I feel immensely relieved as the best possible protector to Devi Sita'. Then Rama informed Lakshmana to merely fetch some water as he was not feeling like eating fruits and roots, as no doubt were available in the forest aplenty. Then Rama in a somewhat relaxed mood addressed Sumantra and requested him to look after the horses with care and attention. There after, Lakshmana made appropriate arrangements of grass beds for Sita Ramas for resting through the night, and there away after entered into conversation with Sumantra about the ourstanding qualities of Shri Rama the Yuga Purusha all through the night. As the next dawn arrived, there were crowds of cows assembling on the banks of Tamasa river. Rama and Sita too woke up and found big crowds of Ayodhya citizens on the other side of the bank; most of them were resting having wept long into the early hours and many were determined to witness the further movement of Rama-Sita-Lakshmanas. Lakshmana suggested to let the chariot move ahead very soon - perhaps unnoticed by the crowds, and proceed further to the extent possible. Soon enough they got into the chariot and sought to move forward and commence their journey into the dense forests as far as the horses could carry the chariot. Thereafter Sumantra having waited for the arrival of the auspicious timing kept the horses toward the northern side and wished Rama-Sita-Lakshmanas for a successeful journey onward till their victorious return to Ayodhya.

As the citizens who could not witness the departure of the chariot or Rama-Sita-Lakshmanas with Sumantra, they felt anguished as there was no sign of the departure. They got agitated by themselves: Dhirastu khalu nidraam taam yayaapahata chetasah, naadya pashyaamahe Raamam prithuraskam maha bhujam/ Alas! It was a shame that we had slept off instead of keeping awaken in the night and we were unfortunate to have missed the scene of the departure of Rama-Sita-Lakshmanas. How has Rama departed away to forests without even a trace! Of which avail is our being still alive without the confidence of his personal presence now! Shall we not dare to walk on thorns and hard rocks which they too are going to encounter step after step. How can we live without Rama in Ayodhya as the 'living- dead' beings with no urge for life and its worth. We are now onward missing his sweet face, comforting tongue, and fortuitous personality. We had planned to leave Ayodhya for good along with Rama, but we curse our own fates ! In this way, the entirety of the crowds of Ayodhya were distressed, like groups of crying and braying away calves without their cows. This was how the crowds dispersed in groups of heart rendering cryings and slowly walked back with despair and self-disgust at their misfortune. Aalokya nagareem taam cha kshayavyakula maanasaah, aavartyant teshruuni nayanaih shoka peeditaih/ On return to the city of Ayodhya, the returning crowds were full of heart rending cryings with dismay that neither followed Rama to the forests nor could even see him departing; on return to their houses, they were self defeated of their disgusting misfortune.

On return to their houses like fugitives from the warfront, they got surrounded by their wives and sons who too broke out with heart rending shoutings and cryings from their eyes to the ground. The trading community had not opened their shops and establishments for days. Markets were empty and respective citizens made no efforts to cook their food as their kitchens remained shut. The births in some homes were resented and no celebrations were observed. The returning husbands who entered their houses were resented as if they ran back from the warfront; in fact the wives at their homes made taunts as the piercing 'trishula' like hits to elephants. They jibed saying as to their inability even to see the final departure of Rama to the forests and that all the bravado that they left was a mere wasteful effort! ekah satpuruṣo loke lakṣmaṇaḥ saha sītayā, yo 'nugacchati kākutstham rāmaṁ paricaran vane/ There is only one person of truthfulness like Lakshmana who is accompanying Rama Sita and it is he and he alone who is worthy of uniqueness and the rest of the humanity was worthy of condemnation. He is our safety, path of comfort and final destination! The woman folk of Ayodhya then cried hoarse raspingly: may we even get an opportunity of serving Devi Sita while the menfolk secure a chance to serve Rama ever! Then the women of public diverted their attention: kaikeyyā yadi ced rājyaṁ syād adharmyam anāthavat, na hi no jīvitenaṛthaḥ kutaḥ putraiḥ kuto dhanaiḥ/ yayā putras ca bhartā ca tyaktā aiśvaryaakāraṇāt, kaṁ sā parihared anyam kaikeyī kulapāmsanī/ As Kaikeyi takes over the kingdom in her control, we swear that we continue to be 'anaadhaas' or helpless and forlorn, since the very concept of dharma gets deranged and distorted! If we have to live through our lives, then of what avail would be of existence, our family and of children! Alas, Kaikeyi is such a detestable woman who could sacrifice a son and her own husband out of her lust for power with least consideration of age old established principles to torned pieces. !kaikeyyā na vyaṁ rājye bhṛtakā nivasemahi, jīvantiyā jātu jīvantiyaḥ putrair api śapāmahe/ Then the womanhood of Ayodhya unanimously declared that they would all wish to swear by their sons that as long as Kaikeyi were to be alive, then would discord the Kingdom, even if we survive some how! It should all be due to Kaikeyi that this kingdom of glory should be doomed with neither yajna karyas nor of safety and progress but slip down as the center of 'upadravaas' or of 'Tapatrayas'.

[Vishleshana on Tapatrayas:

Adhi Bhoudika or Ailments of Physical Nature; Adhyatmika or of Mental-Psychological Nature; and Adhi Daivika or of Natural Calamities like Earth quakes, floods, lightnings etc. beyond human control. In Vishnu Purana: Maharshi Parashara described about Tapatrayas or the Three Kinds of Difficulties that all human beings are subjected to as also the means of realising the Paramartha Swarupa. The Tapatrayas originate due to Adhyatmika, Aadhi Daavika and Adhi Bhoutika reasons. Adhyatmika based Tapaas are either due to 'Shaaririka' (physical) ailments or 'Manasika' (psychological) imbalances. Shaaririka Tapaas include diseases related to head, digestive, heart, breathing, vision, limbs, skin, fevers and so on; related are the various physiological problems of blood-urinary-pelvic nature. Manasika Tapaas are related to Kama, Krodha, Bhaya, Dwesha, lobha, Moha, Vishada, Shoka, Asuya, Apamana, Irshya, Matsara etc. Adhi Bhoutika Tapaas are due to the difficulties attributed to animals, birds, Pishachaas, Serpents, Rakshasaas and poisonous related creatures like scorpions. The troubles on account of Adhidaivika nature are due to cold, heat, air, rains, drought, water, earthquakes, cyclones and so on. Additionally, the troubles are related to birth, childhood, youth, old age, ignorance, Avidya, loneliness, smell, lack of resources, poverty, immaturity, inexperience, lack of opportunity, fear of death, death itself and multiple kinds of experiences of Naraka. Maharshi Parashara emphasized that there are problems of excessive of opulence, excellent health, excessive youth, and such other excesses and some times ignorance is bliss. More so there could be Tapaas due to discriminations of sex, age, social status, experience, opportunity, family background; origin of birth viz. religion, Varnashrama and age. Disappoint -ments in life, more specifically relating to money and fame, including their earnings, perservation and its vinasha or destruction happen to be yet source of Tapatriya.]

‘ na hi pravrajite rāme jīviṣyati mahīpatiḥ, mṛte daśarathe vyaktam vilopas tadanantaram/ te viṣaṁ pibatāloḍya kṣīṇapūṇyāḥ sudurgatāḥ, rāghavam vānugacchadhvam āsrutiṁ vāpi gacchata/ The Public Voice affirms: ‘As Rama had since left for ‘vana vaasa’, King Dashartha would die soon and simultaneously the Kingdom would get shattered. Thus may this be clear that the days of virtue and justice get terminated eventually. In such a dire situation, it would be preferable to gulp down poison, or follow Rama or leave this Kingdom to another and never take the name of Kaikeyi once again! mithyā pravrājito rāmaḥ sabhāryaḥ sahalakṣmaṇaḥ, bharate samniṣṛṣṭāḥ smaḥ saunike paśavo yathā/ The womanfolk of Ayodhya got agitated further that they were convinced of the villainess Kaikeyi trapping the King by strings of lies and threats in the name of ‘dharma and nyaaya’ managed to banish Rama and along with him Devi Sita and the ever faithful Lakshmana for as many years as fourteen tortuous years of life in dandakaranya so that they might not survive or get blurred on the mental screen of the public any way! We of the public thus get tied to Bharata; indeed our situation is of a sacrificial animal in the name of yajna thus being faced by a devil or the deep sea!’ Thus the ‘Nagara Strees’ of Ayodhya were crying away highly agitated with ‘mrityu bhaya’ or of the fright of death soon! Meanwhile, the day was closed as Sunset occurred, the gloom of dark night was ushered in, as the sanatana grihas did not initiate the Agni karyas nor the vedaadhyayan of shrotriyas were heard, while markets were not even opened. The ever buzzing city of Ayodhya descended into darkness and of gloom.

Rama during the night before kept on thinking about the happenings of the just concluded days and the state of affairs in Ayodhya especially about the welfare of his father. As the morning arrived, he performed his bathing-sandhya vandana, and so on get ready again to proceed further. As the chariot was moving forward through scatterings of petty villages and hamlets, comments from villagers were overheard such as : ‘alas! the King ought not to have given weightage to the loose talks and empty threats of Queen Kaikeyi. Unfortunately, he was enticed by her and took most ill justified decisions. It was a great tragedy to have sent Rama for ‘aranya vaasa’ for no fault of his yet, he obeyed his most heinous instructions of Kaikeyi. That woman named Kaikeyi is a contemptible and despicable specimen of womanhood of cruelty and ingratitude who should never cross one’s memory screen as she forced the magnanimous King of virtue and maturity to banish and hound Rama the epic hero with long and unheard hardship of forest life! Devi Sita the born princess who was only a giver but never a taker but was thrust with untold miseries that even a poor and below-ordinary female could ever imagine. Alas, a King of Dasharatha’s stature had to perforce sacrifice a symbol of valour and virtue the unparalleled Shri Rama who was innocent of any misdeed in his lifetime even by slip of tongue, let alone of action.’ Rama was truly shaken up by the kind of comments made by the village folk as per their own spontaneous reactions. Then having crossed the Kosala village, the chariot moved forward towards the river named ‘Veda shruti’ and having crossed it proceeded towards the southern direction for many hours and reached the banks of river Gomati with several ups and downs, besides drenches out of which the chariot encountered countless tortoises crossing the zig zag by lanes. After crossing River Gomati, the chariot reached the banks of River Skandika and there beyond were small hamlets known for huge agricultural fields as in ancient ages King Manu donated to the Ikshvaku King.

[Padma Purana is quoted: By dint of relentless Tapasya, Vaivasvata secured the boon from Brahma of becoming the Supreme Administrator of Prithvi of high virtue and Fortune and thus he became the First Manu Ever! Vaisvasvata Manu had ten sons, viz. Ila, Ikshvaku, Kushanaabha, Arishta, Dhrushta, Arishyant, Karusha, Mahabali Sharyati, Purushaghna, Naabhaga and Ambarisha.]

Then Shri Rama exclaimed to Saradhi Sumanta: Alas! when indeed could I return and joyfully meet my dear parents and experience a picnic to the flowered and green gardens on the banks of River Sarayu ever!

Thus taking leave of crossing the border of Koshala Desha's border, Shri Rama exclaimed to Lakshmana and bid good-bye to Ayodhya; he stated that it was that glorious city which has had the distinction of being administered by Kakuthsa Kings and would return to it one day and repay his indebtedness to it as he should long to meet his dear parents. Then with tears flowing from his eyes, he addressed the residents of 'janapada' and said that it was rather late that they had been waiting for us to reach here and thanked them profusely for their patient waiting. He then got down from the chariot accompanied by Sita Lakshmanas and greeted the 'janapadas' after pradakshinas, just as at the 'pradosha kaala' the devotees perform the self-circumambulations around Surya Deva. There after Rama Sita Lakshmanas witnessed the picturesque view of 'Pavitra Ganga' and the cool breezes flowing across and noticed that groups of Sages were busy with their services. The Holy Ganga could be imagined that Apsaras were bathing in the far depths of the flows while Deva- Danava-Gandharva- Kinnaras were enhancing the purity of their innerselves what with the uniqueness of Parama Shiva and his 'jataajutaas' with standing the force of its descent from the high skies thanks to Bhagiratha the grand forefather of Rama's ancestry. The earthshaking thuds and reverberations down the unimaginable mountain tops, the flows of Ganga appear to form a 'Shiva jataajuta' - or 'Veni samudaya', the 'warp and woof' or the weavings of yarn threads across and straight! The 'jataajuta' as was thus frmed was like an immortal string of honey bees!

[Vishleshana on Parama Shiva's 'Jataajuta' vide Sarga Forty Three of Valmiki Baala Ramayana is quoted: Maharshi Vishvamitra addressed Shri Rama that after Brahma Deva gave the boon to Bhagiratha who was literally standing with heightened foot fingers, the latter got busy as immersed in invoking Maha Deva. Subsequently Pashupati Shiva too appeared and confirmed: Prītas te 'haṁ naraśreṣṭha kariṣyāmi tava priyam, śirasā dhārayiṣyāmi śailarājasutām aham/ tato haimavatī jyeṣṭhā sarvalokanamaskṛtā, tadā sātimahad rūpaṁ kṛtvā vegam ca duḥsaham, ākāśād apatad rāma śive śivaśirasy uta/

Narashreshtha! I am pleased with your inhuman determination and selfless dedication to some how usher Devi Ganga down to earth and provide salvation to your ancestors; indeed I shall be delighted to fulfil your ambition and help to hold the mighty flows of Ganga into my 'jataajuta' the twisted and coarse head hairs from 'akaasha'. Then Shri Rama! As Paramashiva sanctioned Bhagirath's life time ambition, Himalaya Deva's elder daughter and Devi Parvati's elder sister Devi Ganga readily consented but had only one reservation that as she jumps down to Shiva's jataajuta the flows might further flow down to Patala instead of being held on earth itself! Shiva realised Devi Gangas impertinent remark and decided that he would hide her flows right into his jataajutas. Then Devi Ganga jumped down on Shiva mastaka and he held the flows which got instantly absorbed in the jataajutas. The flows of Ganga lost their way in the labyrinthins of Shiva's jataajuta and the forceful flows could not even reach earth, let alone down to Patala as Ganga wondered. Bhagiratha who had wondered as to where the flows disappeared and once again resorted to deep meditation to Maha Shiva. The latter released one of the forceful flows of Ganga to fall down to Bindu Sarovara as they assumed seven flows of which Hladini-Paavani and Nalini turned east; while Suchakshu-Seeta-and Mahanadi Sindhu flowed westward. Saptamichanvgaat taasaam Bhageeradham tadaa, Bageerayopi Raajarshi divyam syandanamaasthitah/ Praayadagne mahatejaa gangaatam chaapyanuvrajat, gaganaacchankara shirastato dharanimaagataa/ The seventh flow of Ganga followed the chariot of Bhagiratha, he had thus accomplished the unique task of bringing Ganga from Shiva's head down to the his following! As the flows of Ganga followed thus, the speed and ferocity of the waves attracted fishes, tortoises and various water borne species joined as earth appeared to have become far richer thereafter. This superb attraction happening on earth instantly raised the curiosity of the celestial beings as though thousand more Suryas got presented by themselves. As the flows of Ganga got stabilised with speed and thrust gradually near normalcy reached and got widened from bank to bank pushing houses and crop fields too. Gandharvas and several Devas gradually gathered themselves as the flows of Ganga rolled down from Shiva's head and his unimaginable hairs themselves and eventually crowds of angels took to heartily taking in the pure sweetness of the waters, bathing in them and swimming too thoroughly revelling in the irresistible flows. And so do humans and innumerable other species especially due to their firm and proven belief of the sacred flows and even drops of 'Ganjajala'. In this context, Brahmarshi Vishvamitra addressing Shri Rama affirmed that Deva-Rishi-Daitya-Danava, Rakshasa, Gandharva, Yaksha, Kinnara, Naaga, Sarpa, Apsaras, all the entirety of water species, besides men, women, and animals made fast inroads into the ever purifying flows of Sacred Ganga. Ta to hi yajamaanasya Jahnordbhutakarmanah, gangaa saplaavayaamaasa yagjnavaatam mahatmanah/ Tasyaavalepanam jnaatvaa kruddhho Jahnuscha Ragahva, apibat tu jalam sarvam Gangaayaah paramadbhutam/ As the flows of Ganga are fierce and roaring with nasty sounds, Rajarshi Jahnu was performing a maha yajna, and the furious flows of Ganga entered right into the yajna vedika; the Rajarshi got terribly furious at the alleged arrogance of Ganga and thus drank up the River waters totally in a manner that not even a drop of the River remained on earth. Deva Gandharva Rishis were shocked and stunned at the crisis and prayed collectively to very kindly revive Ganga once again stating that he was a father figure and Devi Ganga his daughter. The Rajarshi was pleased with the prayers and finally released Ganga through his ears and the father daughter relationship got universal recognition ever since.^[1]

Further Stanzas continued: As the high sounds of swan groups are reverberating, swarms of chakravaaka birds too were enhancing the exquisiteness of the scenery. The buzz of honey bees on the cool waves of Ganga and was clearly audible to the ears further adding to the striking charm, Rama was tempted and instructed Sumanta that they would all spend the night there on the banks of Ganga itself. He further stated that not far away he was informed that there should be a huge 'Ingudeeka Vriksha' with heavy and high branches with ripe and sweet fruits with mangificent setting of scenery of Ganga and that they would like to carry them upto that point for leaving the chariot. As they got down and were refreshing themselves with great contentment, the horses were freed too for the night. Tatra rājā guho nāma rāmasyātmasamaḥ sakhā, niṣādajātyo balavān sthapatīś ceti viśrutaḥ/ sa śrutvā puruṣavyāghraṁ rāmaṁ viṣayam āgatam, vṛddhaiḥ parivṛto 'mātyair jñātibhiś cāpy upāgataḥ/ In the principality of Shringa - verapura on the banks of Ganga, there was a Chieftain of Fishermen and Boatmen named 'Guha', whose birth was a 'nishada' a hunter in forests, who was sturdy and hefty in physique but buttery of mind and of virtue. Guha was informed by the villagers on his way that great hero of Ayodhya Shri Rama was on his way to the banks of Ganga. He came to realise the outlines of the background of Rama as recognisable not in royal dresses but in deer skins. Guha on reaching the presence of Rama, he had instantly recognised and embraced Rama the 'purushottama'. He broke into crying and begged Rama that he was totally at the command of what all service that could be extended. Guha declared that his entire local authority was at his disposal and offered the bhakshya-bhojya-lehya-choshya-paaneeyas, comfortable beds and seats to the outstanding guests. Rama was truly overwhelmed with the hospitality arrangements and assured that he was extremely grateful for the services. He however stated: kuśacīrājīnadharam phalamūlāśanam ca mām, viddhi praṇihitam dharma tāpasam vanagocaram/ As our requirements are to abide and to follow the dress codes and food regulations that necessitate our ways of living ahead, hence the varieties of eats and drinks are forbidden and hence be returned with gratitude. We are to be dressed by mriga charmas and sustain by consuming kanda-moola-phalas. All the same, we would be happy by taking care of the horses of the chariot and what all you could do for them should be welcomed most. King Dasharatha was particularly concerned of the proper care of these horses of divine like attachment. Then having performed sandhya vandana and frugal eating, Rama and Sita rested on the well arranged ‘kusha graasa’ beds. But Lakshmana and Guha continued their conversation particularly about the recent developments at Ayodhya.

I would ever keep vigilant to ensure the security of Sita Ramas even as they rest peacefully by keeping my ‘dhanur banaas’ ready. As I have the natural instinct of knowing each and every movement of the forests, even the ‘chaturanga sena’ of the enemies could be put to frustration and crumbling disappearance by total extinction. Lakshmana continued: ‘ Dharmapara Nishada King! Persons upholding the values of virtue are never defeated and are fearless. Rama along with Sita therefore experiences the same ease and comfort as on plush beds of luxury while lying on drygrass natural beds; similarly a ‘mahaanubhaava’ like Rama gets similar taste of ‘kanda moola phalaas’ and pancha bhakshyaas alike. Even all such other comforts and luxuries of human life are of no consequence to the outstanding human in the garb of a top celestial like Rama! Indeed, King Dasharatha who had been all through his life practised the tenets of Dharma like upasana of Gayatri,’ krucchha chandraayana vrataas', yagjnaanushtaana and so on and that was how, Rama was born as his son! Now, as Rama was uprooted to forest life 'willy nilly' under the shadow of dharma, King Dasharadha's life time has to get terminated sooner or latter and Devi Koushalya like Mother Earth herself would get widowhood. The womanhood of the 'Rani vaasa' would soon scream and seek to break their hearts but would eventually reconcile to realities of existence. It might be an exclamatory mark whether the queen mothers of Kousalya and Sumitra might or might not absorb the shock of father's absence. Then Lakshmana poses the questions: *Api jeevedDasharatho vanavaasaat punarvayam, pratyagagamy mahaatma-

Whether Rama as accompanied by us would re-enter Ayodhya happily and successfully!.' Thus Lakshmana kept on discussing the various issues raised by him to Guha the Nishada King through out the night!

Rama addressed Lakshmana that as the dawn had arrived and the birds had begun their chirrupings, it should be time for departure and to gradually start crossing the vast and holy Ganga! Lakshmana alerted Sumantra and Nishada Raja Guha alike. The latter commanded to get a suitable boat ready and got the indication of its readiness too. Meanwhile Rama Lakshmanas too got ready with their respective body sheaths, arrows, swords etc. along with Devi Sita and arrived at the banks of the river. Sumantra was then instructed to return to King Dasharatha and seek his blessings even as the ‘sarathi’ broke into uninterrupted sobbings. He said: Raghunandana! This manner of your having to leave for ‘aranya vaasa’ along with your ‘paativratya sahadharmacharini’ wife and the ever obedient Lakshmana is not only unprecedented but also historic for all times to come. That this maha purusha who has been exemplary with Vedadhyayana-brahmacharyapalana- and phala siddhi standing unique in human form is being subjected to this cruelty is beyond comprehension. Shri Rama! This is truthfully fateful that along with the citizens of the kingdom we are having to bear this misfortune on one side and the further days of cruelty and disaster having to bear future times of hardship at the misfortune at the hands of the villionous Kaikeyi too.’ As Sumantra kept on pouring his heart out for long, Rama replied: My dear Sumantra! As per my reckoning there might not be any other loyal human to Ikshvaku vamsha like you. Now on return to Ayodhya, your prime responsibility to convince King Dasharatha to nomalcy as soon as possible. On the one hand King Dasharatha has since turned old and weak physically and additionally he is terribly agitated at the tragic and disastrous scenes mentanly too. This is precisely why whatever instructions that the King commands especially those which would please Devi Kaikeyi be assiduously followed at once. My personal request to you dear Sumantra by your swearing on me! Never ever utter one word that might not hurt the sentiment of the great King Dasharatha and possibly seek to assuage his agitated feelings to light hearted expressions of relief and hope. Sumantra! naivāham anuśocāmi lakṣmaṇo na ca maithilī, ayodhyāyās cyutās ceti vane vatsyāmaheti vā/ caturdaśasu varṣeṣu nivṛtteṣu punaḥ punaḥ, lakṣmaṇam mām ca sītām ca drakṣyasi kṣipram āgatān/ May we viz. Rama-Sita-Lakshmanas are neither stating nor feeling bad about; this assurance be kindly conveyed to Maha Raja. On the other hand , we should surely return to Ayodhya and meet me, Sita and Lakshmana. Sumatra! You should also convey the pleasant news of our welfare to our mothers, especially to Devi Kaikeyi too. Further to mother Koushalya, may this be intimated that we especially from Devi Sita and Lakshmanas too are seeking to prostrate before her. Sumantra! Kindly do on our behalf request Maha Raja to forthwith ask Bharata to return soon and take over the responsibilities awaiting him so that the ‘yuvarajatva’ be bestowed on him at the earliest. On the arrival of Bharata do please convey to him as from me that he should treat all the mothers as his own. He may also conveyed that he should straight away take obey the instruction of the father to assume the yuvarajatva and that would be indeed the gateway to contentment of ‘iha’ and ‘paralokas’ As Shri Rama devoted considerable time to Sumantra conveying the do’s and don’t’s on his return to Ayodhya, Sumantra too made a few submissions to Shri Rama: ‘ Shri Rama! What ever is going to be submitted to you as your faithful devotee be kindly excused; how could I return to Ayodhya as though nothing amiss had ever happened. As soon as the public should become aware that I would return without Rama-Sita-Lalkshmanas, they should at once react agitatedly. They should feel that the chariot would be returning having been defeated and merely the charioteer was returning dejectedly. dūre ’pi nivasantaṁ tvām mānasenāgrataḥ sthitam, cintayantyo ’dya nūnam tvām nirāhārāḥ kṛtāḥ prajāḥ/ ārtanādo hi yaḥ paurair muktas tadvipravāsane, rathasthaṁ mām niśāmyaiva kuryuḥ śataguṇam tataḥ/ ahaṁ kiṁ cāpi vakṣyāmi devīm tava suto mayā, nīto ’sau mātulakulaṁ saṁtāpaṁ mā kṛthā itī asatyam api naivāham brūyām vacanam īdṛśam, katham apriyam evāham brūyām satyam idaṁ vacaḥ/ Even as you are far away, the public should be feeling that you are very near to their hearts and most understandably worried awaiting my return without taking food and even water! Indeed, you had heard the agitated cryings and shoutings at high pitch of the public. Most certainly, on witnessing my return to the city would attract rebounding agitations once again. On meeting Devi Kousalya on my return to Ayodhya, should I inform her that you were safely despatched to his ‘sasuraal’ or your father in law’s residence and that should be why she might not worry at all! How could I hide this ugly untruth that I had to leave behind at the care of the unknown and unimaginable jungle living for very long time. Rama! How on earth you could wish me safe return to Ayodhya being fully aware that the recalcitrant and obstinate horses tied to the chariot would seek to return to Rama by the reverse route. Raghu nandana! That is the precise reason why he should not ask me to return to Ayodhya but instead instruct me to accompany you; other wise I would like to jump in to fire along with the chariot. If only you allow me to stay back, I would ensure that no cruel animal could disturb your peace of mind and chase away by the chariot; That would be on the analogy of even an outstanding ‘dharma parayana’ could enter into Indra Loka but not a human who could enter Ayodhya without you! Chaturdaśa hi varṣāṇi sahitasya tvayā vane, kṣaṇabhūtāni yāsyanti śataśas tu tato ’nyathā/My ambition is to return to Ayodhya along with you after the fourteen year ‘vana vaasa’; indeed, the fourteen year period should be over like within fourteen minutes if I were to be with you!’ In this manner, Sumantra had sincerely begged of Rama to allow him during the vana vaasa period. Then Rama replied to say: ‘Sumantra! I am totally aware of your intense devotion for me but when you would return to Ayodhya, then only Devi Kaikeyi would be actually convinced that we had been despatched for the ‘vana vaasa’. Without convincing in this manner, even Dharmatma King Dasharatha might wonder as to why Sumantra had not returned yet! In fact, without your non- return might raise a doubt in the mind of Devi Kaikeyi whether there might not be any concern for Bharat’s free Rajyabhisheka!’ Rama thus convincingly replied to Sumantra and finally succeeded to despatch him. Then Rama addressed Nishada Raja Guha that it would not be proper for him and Sita- Lakshmana to attract further attention of the passers by and proceed at once to cross the River. Then Rama-Sita-Lakshmanas hurried up to change the dress of deer skins as of Munis by finally assuming the ‘vanaprastha dharma’.

[Vishleshana on Vaanaprastha Dharma as quoted from Manu Smriti -Aachara Khanda:

Every snaataka Dwija pursuant to the Grihastaashrama into the Vaanaprastha stage of life should pursue the Vidhis or principles of dharma with determination and ‘indriya nigrāh’, while aging with wrinkles and white hair as per the practice of generations after generation. He might even discard cultivation entrusting him to sons and retire into forests with his wife but retaining his duty of the daily ‘agni karyas’ along with the required implements being prepared for eating fruits and roots, and wearing old yet clean clothes and unshaven beards or hairs yet with bathings in mornings and evenings ensuring ‘baahyaantara shuchi’. He should offer ‘bali’ to share his food with creatures and insects, give away charities and perform ‘atithi seva’ as per his ability, as also daily vedaadhyayana. Vaitaanikam cha juhuyaadagnihotram yathaavidhi, darshamaskandayan parva purnaa -maasam cha yogatah/Riksheshtyaagrayanaam chaiva chaaturmaa -syaani chaaharet, turaayanam cha kramasho dakshasyaayanameva cha/ Vaitaanikaagni is called the merger of Aahavaneeya and Dakshinaagi and thus performing the Vaitaagni as prescribed is what is expected of dwija during the vaanaprastaashrama stage of life. At the same time, he should not slip away from the duty of ‘ishti karyas’ of agni on darsha pourami and amavasyas. The prescribed shrota karmas of Nakshatreshti and Aagraayaneshti be neglected nor those during Chaaturmasyas and at Uttaraayana-Dakshinaayana transition days of Surya Deva’s directional changes. The Vaanaprastha Prajas are also required to perform homa karyas with the purodasa cakes and boiled karus prepared by their own hands of fresh grains of Vasanta or Sharad ritu crops and the remains after the homa kriyas be eaten by themselves as tempered with salt. They should otherwise eat the vegetables, roots and fruits as also the dried fruits and oil extracts but avoiding madya-maamsas and banned fruits like bhurina-shighruka-sleshmaankas as also honey. During the month of Ashviyuja, one should discard stored food items or old clothes. The Vaanaprasthaa should only consume food cooked by fire or ripened as fruits duly emaciated by teeth or pulped or digestible or of grinding tools. Naktam chaannam samashneeyaadhivaa vaaahritya shaktitah, chaturthakaaliko vaa syaat syaad vaapyashtamakaalikah/ Chaandraayanavidhaanairvaa shuklakrisnecha vartayet, pakshaantayorvaapyashneeyaad yavaagum kvathitaam sakrit/ or food be consumed as nakta bhojana that is to refrain from eating as per one’s ability or take food either in the day or night, keep ‘upavaasa’ or fasting till the next night or the day there after till the fourth day.

Chaandraayana bhojana involves reducing the fistful food intakes from prathama to amaavasya and in the reverse way from prathama to purnima during krishna paksha and shukla paksha respectively. As an alternative, the Vaanaprasthas might always subsist on flowers, fruits and roots fallen on earth. Besides performing ‘trikaala snaanas’ or mornings-middays and evenings, a Vaanaprastha should practise ‘Panchaagni saadhana’ or maintaining four fires around, besides Surya on the sky during greeshma months; the rainy season under the open skies and in the hemanta ritu or of winter season wearing wet clothes to always sustain the rigours of austerities. At the time of ‘trikaala snaanas’ in mornings-middays and evenings, tarpanas to Devas and Pitru Devas be executed and possibly achieve higher levels of asceticism. In the quest for harshness and severity of one's own body and psyche, the vaanaprastha might be seated in the midst of sacred fires around and within under open skies sans shelter, maintain silence and bare subsistence on meagre intakes of roots and fruits. Etaashchaanyaashcha seveta deeksha viprovane vasan, vividhaashchau panishadeer aatmasansiddhaye shruteeh/ Rishibhirbraahmanaishchaiva grihasthaireva sevitaah, vidyaatapo vivridhdyartham shareerasya cha shuddhaye/ or even the afore-mentioned vannaprastha dharmas apart, Brahmanas who even otherwise practise accomplishment of 'tadaatmya' or union of Antaratma and Paramatma as was explained in the various Sacred Scriptures like Upanishads do constantly strive for and so do great Maharshis. Thus such exemplary Brahmanas are straight to walk in north easterly direction and always on the singular path of virtue, live on water and air, being totally self-controlled until the final body collapse but with total fulfillment with neither fear nor grief nor even attachment but of 'sat plus nyaasa' or of Interaction with Sanyasa literally at the final destination of bliss]

Sarga Fifty Two continued: Tato vaikhaanasam margamaasthitah sahalakshmanah, vratamaadish - tavaan Raamah sahaayam gohamabraveet/ Then Rama along with Sita-Lakshmanaas assumed 'Vaanaprastha maarga' and addressed Guha the Nishada King as the latter had meanwhile confirmed that the boat was ready right on the adjacent banks of the holy Ganga and that Rama along with Devi Sita and Lakshmana be ready for decent. Guha said: Purushasimha Rama! Do please hold the hand of Devi Sita and after her being seated then you could be seated comfortably. Rama then did so and asked Lakshmana to follow suit. Then Rama performed formal 'Ganga Vandana' and signalled that the boat be moved out.

[An interesting version about the boatsman as nominated by Nishada King Guha states he desired to be he be allowed to wash Rama's feet as his limited income as a boatman he would not afford any more boats nor many wives to support. Rama smiled looking at Sita devi and remained silent. The boatsman continued: Sir! I have heard that the dust from your feet touched a stone and turned into a woman. My boat is made of several pieces of wood and if the dust of your feet fell on my boat, then the boat might not turn into several women. It would not be possible for me to maintain a huge family. That is why I am requesting to wash the feet and make it dust free before you step into the boat. Rama smiled at his pure and innocent faith recalling the incident of Ahalya having been cursed as a stone by Gautama Maharshi. After washing the feet the boatman placed his hands on earth and asked Rama to place the first step on his hand before stepping into the boat. As soon as they alighted from the boat, Devi Sita immediately withdrew a ring from her finger and handed it over to Rama, signaling to him to pass it on to the boatman. The latter refused as people of the same profession should not charge each other for their services; like a barber or washerman. A barber never takes payment, when he gives a haircut to another barber. Even a washer-man never charges a fellow washer-man. Similarly I ferry Ganges and you ferry 'Bhava Sagara'!]

Sarga's stanza 83 continued: As the boat had caught on momentum and speed, then Devi Sita made an appeal to Devi Ganga: putro dasarathasyāyam mahārājasya dhīmataḥ, nideśam pālayatv enam gaṅge tvadabhirakṣitaḥ/ caturdaśa hi varṣāṇi samagrāṇy uṣya kānane, bhrātrā saha mayā caiva punaḥ pratyāgamiṣyati/ tatas tvām devi subhage kṣemeṇa punar āgatā, yakṣye pramuditā gaṅge sarvakāmasamṛddhaye/ Mother Ganga! Rama the son of King Dasharatha of Ikshvaku lineage is passing through your sacred river by obeying the instruction of his father for 'vana vaasa' for fourteen long years along with his younger brother. May we seek your blessings for our safe return. Mother! You have the distinctive glory of your forceful flows in Akasha-Bhu-Patalas as three loka gaamini, from Brahma Loka to finally merge into the Samudra Raja. As and when we conclude our 'yatra', we will once again invoke your blessings, with heads and hands down with our prostrations. We seek your kindness for our safe return and as a gesture of our gratitude, we would like to perform 'daana karyas' at the famed temples at the tirthas on way back in praise of your glory!'. As Devi Sita had been making appeals to and promises for their safe return, the boat travel concluded successfully and she along with Rama Lakshmanas came out of the boat in the safe company of Rama Maha bhakta Guha the King of Nishadaas. Then Shri Rama addressed Lakshmana to be ready with alertness as they would have to enter the density of the forest ahead and that the safety of Sita should be paramount; he said that as Lakshmana would lead the way, he as accompanied by Sita be followed. He said: Na hi taavadatikraantaasukaaraa kaachana kriyaa, adya duhkham tu vaidehee vanavaasasya pravekshyati/ We are now going to enter such a real forest where no human being could ever dare; this is such a dense forest with steep ups and downs requiring attention step by step. Then as they had carefully crossed that stretch of danger with steep ups and falls with vicious thorns and crawling poisonous reptiles with no sign of a pathway, reached 'Vatsa desha' and of 'Prayaga' its capital. This place was rich in crops and of well fed persons of strong physique and Rama Sita Lakshmanas reached a huge tree under which Rama duly performed his evening austerities even as Devi Sita was playing with deers, wild pigs and the like; Lakshmana got busy with the dinner arrangement of 'kandamoola phalas' for their dinner followed by night's rest.

[Vishleshana on Prayaga: Prayaga (Allhabad): Maha Padma Purana eulogises Prayaga in Uttara Khanda as follows: Jahnvi Ravisutaa Parameshthiputri Sinndhutrayaabharana Tirthavara Prayaga, Sarvesha maamanugrahaana nayaswa chordhwamantastamo dashavidham dalaya swadhaamnaa/ (Prayaga Tirtha Raja which wears the ornament of three Unique Rivers of Ganga from Vishnu paada-Yamuna the daughter of Surya-Saraswati the daughter of Brahma! Victory to you Prayaga Tirtha Raja! Those persons who dive and bathe in this Sangama of three illustrious Rivers viz. 'Brahminaputri Tripatha-striveni' would reap the 'Akshata Yaga Phala' and make way to Brahma Loka! Lokaanaam akshamanaa -naam Makhakritushu Kalou Swargakaamair japastutyaadi shtotrairvachobhih kathamamarapada prapti chintaaturaanaam/ Agnishtomaashwamedha pramukhamara phalam samyagaalocchhya saanga Brahmaadyaisteertha rajobhimatada upadishtoyameva Prayagah/ (In Kaliyuga, human beings no doubt are desirous of attaining Swarga but are unable to execute Yajna-Yaagaas but could resort to Japa-Stuti-Stotra-Paatha and the like; at same time they are desirous of achieving Ashwamedhaadi Yajna phala too; so Brahma and Devatas thought over and materialised Prayaga Tirtha Raja to achieve the similar phala by merely but sincerely observe the bathing regulations and secure Salvation). Grahaanancha yathaa Suryo Nakshatraanaa yathaa Shashi, Tirthaanaamuttamam tirtham Prayagaasyamanuttamam/ (Just as among the Grahas Surya is the outstanding and among the Stars the Moon, Prayaga indeed the the Unique among the Tirthas) Prayage tu Naro yastu Maagha snaanam karoti cha, Na tasya phala samkhyasti shrunu Devarshi sattama/ (Those who perform Maagha Snaana at Prayaga, they have no measure of Phala sampatti!) To know about the further ‘mahima’ or Unique significance of Prayaga, one might refer to Matsya, Kurma, Agni Maha Puranas also! The very fact that there is a Sangam of three Maha Nadis lends the credential of Prayaga to be the King of Tirthas in Bharat. As there are three distinct river flows have their confluence, this Tirtha rightly designated as Triveni distinguishes itself as Agni Swarupa or of Yagjna VEDI; the intermediate region of Ganga-Yamuna is of ‘Garhapatyagni’; whereas the region beyond Ganga viz. Pratishthanpur-Jhansi is of ‘Ahavaniyaagni’ and the Region beyond Yamuna ie. Alarkapura and Aarila is to be considered as ‘Dakshinaagni’. Hence those who decide to stay at Prayaga for three nights representing the Three Rivers signified as three types of Agni, would derive the benefit of three Sacred Rivers and three forms of Agni! There is a Magha month celebration at Prayaga and those visiting the Maha Tirtha are in this month are designated as Kalpa Vasis! Several such Kalpavasi Yatis residing at the Triveni Sangama make it a point to reside here during Soura Maasa Makara Samkranti upto Kumbha Sankranti and as per Chandramaana stay right up to the end of Maagha Month. Now every twelve years there is a Maha Kumbha at Prayaga when Brihaspati is in Vrishabha Raasi and Surya is in Makara Raasi; every such six years, Ardha Kumbha is observed and then again there is a srting arrival of yatis and a big Mela is organised at Prayaga. Duties at Prayaga: Yatis to Prayaga Tirtha are expected to observe Upavasa or fasting, Japa, Daana, and worship. ‘Mundan’ is a normal duty for males and widows whereas for married women, ‘Veni daana’ or cutting of long head hair edges duly tied together smeared with Mangala Dravyas like turmeric powder and scented sindura powder are to be slashed with scissors and the hair pieces so cut along with recitation of Mantras blessing long marital life with longevity of husbands; there after ‘Mangala Snanas’ or Sacred and auspicious bathings are performed again with Mantra recitals while leaving the discarded pieces of their hair edges so slashed formally to the flows of Holy Triveni Sangam. The concerned husbands who would have already bathed earlier should once again perform three dips in the flow by holding the shoulders of their wives. There after at the designated Sangama Sthala where the confluence of Ganga and Yamuna waters of brightness and blueish hues and distinct temperatures of coldness and mild warmth-with Saraswati as the under current, puja is to be performed with three dips again possibly or if travelling by boat, by sprinkling of the Sacred Sangam flows on heads. Pinda Puja/ Tarpana and Pinda daana in favour of Pitru Devas would be the next duty to be observed on banks of Prayaga Sangam. Main Devasthaanas at Prayaga: Trivenim Madhavam Somam Bharadwajaam cha Vaasukim, Vandekshaya vatam Shesham Prayagam Tirtha naamakam/ (Triveni, Bindumadhava, Someshwara, Vaasuki naaga, Akshaya Vata, and Sesha Naaga or Baladeva are the principal Tirthas worthy of including in the Prayaga Yatra itinerary. Veni Madhava is a renowned Vaishnava Peetha nearby Triveni Sangama adjacent to Akshaya Vata. This Bindu Madha in water form comprises twelve Madhavas viz. Shankha Madhava, Chakra Madghava, Gada Madhava, Padma Madhava, Ananta Madhava, Bindu Madhava, Manohara Madhava, Asi Madhava, Sankashtahara Madhava, Adi Venu Mahava, Adi Madhava, Shri Veni Madhava; these Madhavas are either Murtis, or Sacred Rocks or of Jala Swarupa Sthanas. Akshaya Vata is near Patalapura Cave as a dry tree bush on Yamuna River bank where several Murtis are on display like Annapurna, Maha Lakshmi, Gauri Ganesha, Bala Mukund, Maha Deva, Saraswati, Vishnu, Nrisimha, Rama Sita Lakshmana Hanuman etc. Besides these, the other Mandirs are Mankemeshwar Mandir of Shiva and Somanatha reachable by boat, Bindu Madhava already mentioned, Naga Vasuki and Bala Deva or Shesha Mandir, Shiva Kuti or Koti Tirtha, Bharadwaja Ashrama, all on Ganga Banks. Lalitha Devi Mandira as mentioned in ‘Tantra Chudamani’ is one of the Shakti Peethas at Prayaga where Devi Sati’s right hand finger fell following her mortal body parts slicing off by Vishnu Chakra and Devi’s name is called Alopī Devi. Prayag’s Antarvedi Parikrama is stated to take a couple of days commencing from Triveni sangama Snaana and Bindu Madhava worship followed by Yamuna bank’s Paapa vimochana Tirtha, Parashurama Tirtha, Govardhana Tirtha, Pischacha mochana Tirtha, Manah Kameshwara Tirtha, Kapila Tirtha, Indreshwara Shiva, Takshaka Kunda, Takshakeshwara Shiva, Kaaliya hrada, Chakra Tirtha, Sindhu Sagara Tirtha near Kakaraghaat, and on the road to Pandava Kupa, Varuna Kupa in Gadhayi Sarai, Kashyapa Tirtha, Dravyeshwara nadha Shiva, Surya Kunda and so on. There after, Hanumam darshana and Triveni Snaana would terminate the Antarvedi Parikrama. Bahir Vedi Parikrama is stated to be taken up about ten days but after this one has to undertake Antar vedi parikrama too. Kurma Purana details an account of Prayaga Mahatmya by narrating of Yudhishtara’s remorse and anguish on the conclusion of the Kurukshetra Battle where not only Kaurava cousins but even Bhishma, Karna his own elder brother, several uncles, Gurus and associates were killed; as he desired to perform ‘Prayaschitta’ or formal atonement/ expiation the Vedic way, Maharshi Markandeya suggested Prayaga Titha darshana and penance., since this Kshetra was protected against Evils by some sixty thousand bows and arrows in favour of Ganga and Sabita Deva riding seven horses protected River Yamuna, while Devi Saraswati flowing under ground has the protection of Brahma himself; Indra and Devas kept constant vigil, Vishnu is ever protective and Maha Deva resides on the Vata Vriksha / banyan tree on the banks of the Sangama. The Purana is quoted: Prayaagaam smaranaamasya sarvamaayaati sankshamam, Darshanaat tasya Tirthasya mnaamasamkirtinaadapi, Mrityikaa labhanaad vaapi Narah paapaat pramuchyate/ (The very thought of Prayaga would suffice to destroy sins; Prayaga darshana and naama samkirtana or even the touch of Prayaga sand would evaporate all sins). Along with the banks of Yamuna and Ganga are countless Tirthas each of which has a description; Kurma Purana highlights Yamuna’s southern side two Maha Nagas Kambal and Ashwatara who were great devotees of Parama Shiva stayed at that Tirtha and Snaan there would ward off ‘sarpa badha’ forever. Another Tirtha named ‘Hamsa prapatana’ near Pratishtaanapura and the belief is that Apsara landed there by Hamsa/ Swan and bathing there enriches beauty of body and heart; Koti Tirtha bathing and possibly death is stated to ensure Swarga nivasa for crores of years. On Ganga’s eastern side is Sarva Samudra Gahvara or Cave and stay there for three days and nights observing fast and celibacy and mental control performing meditation would fetch Ashwamedha Yagna phala. Sangama snaana in Maagha month for three days ensures enormous material fulfillment and at the termination of life the assured passage to higher Lokas. Those who could perform ‘karishagni seva’ or tapasya within a circles of flames of dried cow dung on the banks of the Sangama Place would bestow and preserve diseaseless body and physical fitness. Yet another Tirtha on the northern side of River Yamuna ensures Runa Vimochana or freedom from indebtedness.]

As the night had fallen, Rama alerted Lakshmana that this night even being on the outskirts of a city, especially as Sumantra also not being present, we ought to be careful of safeguarding Devi Sita. Hence they should sleep on a line with Rama in between. Then Rama further commenced conversation: Lakshmana! By now our father should be sleeping with heavy heart and Kaikeyi should be feeling happy and contented. But would the arrival of Bharata at Ayodhya not dishearten the father! Unfortunately, the King is helpless without support, is truly lonely, and is under the full control of Devi Kaikeyi. I should therefore feel that more than of 'dharma' and 'artha', the King is more obsessed with 'kaama' only. Lakshmana! I keep pondering about the manner in which I had been sacrificed as had been readily carried out by me, just for obliging a woman, is all due to him! Bharata is doubly fortunate as the son of an assertive mother of this kingdom as well as the proxy queen of Koshala desha too. Father is too old for administration and I have been driven away too, and as such Bharata is most fortunate. Be there a King ever in the books of history that by ignoring the other 'purusharthas', only 'kaama' being the most dominant one in which the old King has become a victim! Lakshmana! I am now getting more and more convinced that Devi Kaikeyi was born and ushered into the queenship of Ayodhya only to drive me away with 'vana vaasa' and usher in Bharata into kingship. Lakshmana! Instead of getting into this vortex of vana vaasa by me, I would sincerely urge that you should return to Ayodhya at the morning tomorrow and look after the mothers even now for their safeguard. My great concern now is that Devi Kaikeyi might harm our mothers or atleast not proactively treat them well. I can and should be able to safeguard Sita surely myself. Lakshmana! I am getting more and more concerned about the certainty of Kaikeyi acting against the interests of our mothers; she might poison the mothers or eliminate them out of hatred and jealousy. I am unfortunately getting concerned that my mothers might have acted with impatience or even impertinence with other women in their earlier lives by forcing them to get deserted from their sons likewise. It is shameful that all along our mothers had looked after us this far yet we are unable to repay their trust when they need it most in their older ages. Sumitra nandana! May not hereafter any unlucky mother like of mine give birth to men of hard luck as I provide no solace but heartbreaking sorrow to her! Lakshmana! I do admit that my mother is head over wheels concerned of my welfare by each of my steps, but at the same time would also nag me a lot by even saying: ‘you fool! May you eat off the foot fingers of your enemies!’ Then I smile about her innocent and deep attachment for me!’ Lakshmana! It is my misfortune that I have given her deep sorrow and never of any solace; fie! On the uselessness of my life for her being my son! Imaginably now she should be lying down after endless and heart shattering cryings of helplessness for my sake! Lakshmana! Some times I feel that I should vindicate my right with assertion by taking over not only Ayodhya but the entire bhu loka even but then cool down my anger by realising that a human being’s physical might obviously water down by the celestial powers of ‘dharma’ and ‘praarabdha’! Adharma bhayabheetascha paralokasya chaanagha, tena Lakshmana naadyaahamaamaat-maanabhishechate/ Lakshmana! I am obviously controlled by the shackles of ‘dharma’ and hence disabled to assume the Rajyaabhisheka!’ Likewise, Shri Rama let all his internal and humanlike emotions erupt over suddenly as in the case of pentup and controlled ‘agni jwaalaas’ flaring up. Ther after, Rama sat through long hours of the night due to restlessness and extraordinary self-control. Lakshmana having sensed the seriousness of the situation, remarked that the night by Ayodhya should be moon less on the sky at that time! Then Lakshmana remarked: ‘This should not behove of a Purusha simha of Rama’s stature, especially by according resounds in the heart of Devi Sita! Further, without them I should be a fish out of water! Furthermore, I would feel shattered if Rama were not there, then I should wish to vision my father-mother-brothers-and all the rest only in Swarga Loka!’ Ther after, Rama Sitas lied down for the night on a grass bed made by Lakshmana.

Having thus spent under the huge tree through the night , Sita Rama Lakshmanas proceeded from the banks of Triveni Sangama into the wild forests. Having gradually passed through the areas which are seldom accessible by witnessing the Nature's multi faceted manifestations, stopping over at times out of fatigue or for eating the fruits and roots, Rama addressed Lakshmana by sensing smokes of fire on the lower skies as the tree trunks and dried up leaves were burnt whether Bharadvaja Maharshi ashram was nearby. As it indeed was the Ashram and in its vicinity the disciples of the Maharshi who noted the dhanurdhara heros clad in deer skins along with a young woman too. On informing of their arrival, the 'sishyas' informed the Maharshi who by his 'ashta siddhis' realised the background of Rama along with ita Lakshmanas.

[Brahmrshi Bharadvaja, the famed Pravara Rishi next only to Angeerasa-Barhaspatya-Bharadvaja as the initiators of Gotras. Born of Deva Brihaspati himself, his timeless Scriptures include Bharadvaja Samhita, Charaka Samhita]

Having been duly welcomed, Maharshi Bharadvaja blessed the 'atithis' who had prostrated to the Maharshi before being seated. Shri Rama explained that both of the were the sons of King Dasharatha and Devi Sita was his 'dharmapatni' being the daughter of King Janaka. Rama said further that as per his father's directive, the three some would enter the forests and on way had arrived at the ashram. Maharshi extended all possible 'atithi satkaraas' He then stated: *cirasya khalu kākutsṭha paśyāmi tvām ihāgatam, śrutam tava mayā cedam vivāsanam akāraṇam/ avakāśo vivikto 'yam mahānadyoḥ samāgame, puṇyaś ca ramaṇīyaś ca vasatv iha bhagān sukham/ 'Kakustha kula bhushana Shri Rama! This place is an ideal place as the 'sangama' of the most revered Rivers of Ganga and Yamuna. This ashram as an ideal place for your stay here most comfortably. I should heartily recommend for your peaceful stay'. Rama replied: Mahatma! This place is too near from the villages of this kingdom and there would be considerable flow of public to see and talk to us and as such would not be appropriate for our stay here. We request you to suggest another distant place which should not be easily accessible for visitors. *daśakrośa itas tāta girir yasmin nivatsyasi, maharṣisevitaḥ puṇyaḥ sarvataḥ sukha darśanaḥ/ golāṅgūlānucarito vānararkṣaṇiṣevitaḥ, citrakūṭa iti khyāto gandhamādanasaṁnibhaḥ/ yāvatā citra kūṭasya naraḥ śṛṅgāṇy avekṣate, kalyāṇāni samādhatte na pāpe kurute manaḥ/ ṛṣayas tatra bahavo vihr̥tya śaradām śatam, tapasā divam ārūḍhāḥ kapālaśirasā saha/ praviviktam ahaṁ manye taṁ vāsam bhavataḥ sukham, iha vā vanavāsāya vasa rāma mayā saha/Rama! Some distance away [about an estimated 80 miles away] from Prayaga to Chitrakuta should be an ideal place as several Rishis too reside having made their ashramas there. No doubt there would be countless 'langura-vanaraas' or big sized apes and monkeys in the vicinity of the 'muni-ashramaas' and like the picturesque 'Gandhamaadana Mountains'. On reaching there and witnessing the 'shikharas' and the picturesque valley views one should secure spontaneous inside motivation never to part with and even remote traces of sinfulness get extincted. That is the place for Rishis stay, congregate, and plactise yagjnas, swadhayas, and reverberations of veda pathanas in groups of Vidyarthi Muni Kumaras. Rama! I am most convinced that ought to be the most ideal place for your stay, lest you might stay back in my ashram itself! Thus the Maharshi having described the most ideal place for Rama-Sita-Lakshmanas, the Maharshi extended hospitality of the night and asserted: Naanaa naganopetah kinnarogara sevitaḥ, mayura naadaabhirato gaja raaja nishevitaḥ, gamyataam bhavataa shalschitrakutah sa vishrutah/ Rama! I should strongly recommend the well famed Chitrakuta mountain range wild with greenery, kinnara-sarpas, peacock sounds galore, replete with elephant groups and in all the most picturesque ever! Maharshi further asserted: This view of the range of mountains is not only readily enchanting but also replete with purity of place-heart-and soul as you should readily feel the grandeur of Nature as never before by all of you three, with the murmurings of river Mandakni, mountain tops, caves, endless water streams. The variety of visual paradise with the music birds in the background be such as Devi Sita should most certainly enjoy as a life time experience when years get shortened as days and nights! Rama! Therefore, go and enjoy in the sweet company of Sita Devi and the fool-proof protection of Mahaveera Lakshmana!

Vishleshana on Chitra koota: Most significant fact is that Lord Shri Ram along with Devi Sita and brother Lakshman spent years together at this 'Tapobhumi' or Meditation Land of Sanctity- where Maharshi Atri and his illustrious follower Munis stayed too- during his forest life as per his father Dasharatha's wish. Chitrakoot means the 'Hill of many wonders'. Chitrakoot falls in the northern Vindhya Mountain range. Chitrakoot Parvat Mala includes Kamad Giri, Hanumaan Dhara, Janki Kund, Lakshman pahari, and Devangana famous Religious mountains. It was in these deep forests that Shri Rama-Devi Sita and Lakshmana spent a few months of their fourteen years of exile. Renowned Sages like Atri-Anasuya- and Vaalmiki did their tapasyas. Shri Rama was stated to have performed his father's obsequies during his exile period. Valmiki speaks of Chitrakoot as an eminently holy place inhabited by the great sages, abounding in monkeys, bears and various other kinds of fauna and flora. Both the Maharshis Bharadwaja and Vaalmiki paid outstanding tributes to Chitrakoota as one of the most picturesque places of dharma and satkarma. And so did Kalidasa and Tulasi Das in later times. its this bewitching impact of this place. At Chitrakut, the parikrama or circumambulation of Kamadagiri /mountain and Shri Rama Darshan are the significant tasks. The parikrama is to take some five days of some 30 km. Starting from Raghava Prayaga 'snana' at Sitapur- Koti Tirtha, Sita Devi's Kichen, Hanuman Dhara-Keshavaghar, Pramodavana, Janaki kund, Sirasa vana, Spkatika shila, Anasuya- Gupta Godavari snana, Kailasa Parvata darshana- and from Chabepura to Bharat kupa and Rama Shayya or Rama's bed. On way in the Parikrama occur Mukharavinda where snana is of importance followed by temples of Hanuma, Saakshi Gopala, Lakshmi Narayana, Shri Ramas sthaana, Tulasidasa nivasa, Kaikeyi and Bharata Mandirs, Charana Paduka Mandir. There are three most hallowed 'Charana Chinha' or foot prints of Lord Shri Rama viz. Charana Paduka or His footwear prints, Janaki kunda and 'Sphatika shaala'. The specific Spot where Bharata met Rama for the first time and the molten stone of Rama's footprint is visible still. Among other hallowed Places nearby Charana Paduka are Lakshman Hill and Lakshman Mandir, Janaki Kund, Anasuya-Atri Ashram, Gupta Godavari and so on. Nearby Chitra kut are Ganesha Kund, Valmiki Ashram, Viradha Kunda, Sharabhanga Ashram, Sutikshan Ashram and Rama Vana.

Having rested night long, Rama Sita Lakshmanas got readied to leave for their journey onward for the Chitrakuta mountain range. Maharshi Bharadwaaja stated swasari vaachakaas r of auspicious statements and addressed Shri Rama: ‘You all should reach the ‘sangama’ or the merger point of the Sacred Rivers of Ganga and Yamuna and proceed westward. As the swift currents of Ganga get reversed and as the flows of Yamuna gain speed you should follow the route from where Yamuna flows from and thus take to the northern direction forests where big sized trees normally fall down hit by the fast flows and that specific banks of the sangama is popularly called as ‘Shyamavata’. In fact a number of Siddha Purushas are normally seated under the shades of trees on the banks. You either rest or proceed further for a distance of a few miles when you should find a place called Neela vana, with tall trees of Sallaki and Badari nomenclature. That precisely the way ahead to Chitrakuta mountains.’ Maharshi Bharadwaaja stated that he had gone by that very route several times and that was soft for the eyes and the vision which despite being dense with tall and huge trees which were free from the forest fires. Then having sought to understand the instructions of the Maharshi, Rama Sita Lakshmanas touched the feet of the Maharshi repeatedly. On the way ahead, Rama exclaimed that the Maharshi had been extremely kind to them and that they had reaped ample ‘punya’ or fruits of some past deeds of virtue. So exchanging their words of good fortune, reached the banks of the ‘sangama’ of the holy rivers. Then the wondered as how to cross over the flows. Lakshman noticed several tree trunks fallen and dried up and scattered on the banks and created a kind of a wooden plank which floats in the water flows with bent and erected safety sides; he had also improvised a bench type of seating facility for Devi Sita . Further Lakshmana discovered some goat skin hangings having been found dried up further improvised as a floor covering and a seat cover for Deevi Sita to sit on. They first pulled up Devi Sita onto the floating wooden plank, while she was extremely self conscious and shyful of the onlookers on the banks but slowly got settled on the raised seat. Then she made prayers to the flows of the Sacred Yamuna River: ‘Kaalimndiya madhyamaayataa Sita tvenaama vadati, swasti Devi taraani twaam paarayenme pativrataam/ Yakshye twaam gosahasrena suraaghatashatena cha, swasti pratyagagate raame pureemikshvaaku paalitaam/ Devi Kaalindi! I am crossing your river by wooden platforms and we beseech you to safeguard and let us pass without any problem as my revered husband and brother in law are on a mission of prolonged vana vaasa. On our safe return after the vana vaasa to Ayodhya, I take a vow hereby to give away charities of thousand cows and several pujas to you and related devataas.’ Meanwhile, the three some had safe journey across the Sacred Yamuna and were seated under the cool shadow of a ‘maha vriksha’. She then prayed to the Maha Vriksha too while performing ‘parikrama’ around the tree to bless them to successfully complete the entire duration of their forest life and be able to receive the affectionate blessings from the parents-in-law. As Rama got ready to proceed, he asked Lakshmana to keep his arrows and bow ready ahead of them. Having passed considerable distance, they halted again for another night under another maha vriksha on yet another banks of the Sacred River with cool and breezy winds blew along.

Having kept on guard till late hours well past midnight, Lakshmana was tired and as the early hours of the morning arrived, Rama woke up and softly told Lakshmana to wake up, take wash and pray as it was time to commence the journey. On the care free movement of the walk forwards, and with a view to fan out enthusiasm, Rama drew Devi Sita's attention to look at the palaasha vriksha and the fresh fruits of the ongoing Vasanta season. He said that since public could never reach these places, the trees were drooping with the heaviness of the fresh fruits. In his characteristic enthusiasm Rama addressed Lakshmana too to listen to the sweet singing of 'koels' and the hearty dances of peacocks with well spread wings of amazingly arresting uniformity of the colour patterns of brightness. All through the way, Rama was truly lost in the wilderness of nature, its colourful flowers, mind blowing singings of cuckoos, the hard collection of sweetness of flowers assiduously collected by the honey bees, and the repetitive sloganeerings of chataka birds. Tatastou paada chaarena gacchatou saha Seetayaa, ranmymaasedattuh shailam Chitra kutam manoramam/ Along with Devi Sita, the Rama Lakshmana brothers have had their extremely delightful 'pada yatra' and reached the chitrakoota. Rama was taken aback at scenic excellence of the surroundings and decided to stay back there itself. He asked Lakshmana to settle there itself as the mountains around were alluring with plenty of flowers and fruits and the persons settled there itself appear healthy and strong experiencing peaceful existence. Munayascha mahatmaano vasantyasmin shilaaschaye, ayam vaaso bhavet taat vayamatra vasemahi/ Rama addressed Lakshmana that they should be settling there itself as this was the 'ashrama' of several Munis too. Thus having decided, Rama-Sita-Lakshmanas approached Maharshi Vaalmiki ashram and prostrated at his feet. Then Shri Rama introduced himself, Devi Sita and brother Lakshmana and provided a brief on the past events so far. Then in the course of conversation, Maharshi advised Lakshmana to cut and fetch tree trunks so that he could teach the methodology of constructing 'kuteeraas' or hutments for human living as per 'vaastu shanti and vaastu shastra'. Maharshi Vaalmiki suggested to uproot and pull up a Gajakanda, burn it half way, perform puja to 'adhishtana vana devataas', then at the 'dhruva sangjna soumya muhurta' initiate the installation of the 'kuteera', perform vaastu devata yajna. Maharshi further advised Rama as follows: Ayam sarvah samastaangah shrutah krishnamrigo mayaa, Devataa Deva sankasha yajasva kushalo- *hyasi/ Rama! This semi burnt gajakanda tree trunk is such as to set right all the physical parts; now perform the homa kaaryas to Vaastu Devatas, as you Rama! Are an expert in the 'homa karyas'. Then Rama took his bath, followed the shoucha-santoshadi regulations, and after the mantra pathana -japas, then entered the 'Parna Kuteera' along with Devi Sita and brother Lakshmana formally right under the guidance of no less a Mahatma of Maharshi Valmiki's stature! Then he executed Bali Vaishva Deva Karma, Rudra Yaaga and Vaishnava yaaga followed by 'Vaastu Dosha Shanti'. Further, Shri Rama set up even in that miniature 'kuteera' the 'vedi sthalas' for 'Ashta Dikpalakas' viz: Indra, Agni, Yama, Nirruti, Varuna, Vayu, Kubera and Ishana; 'Chaitya' or Ganesha adi Devas in piled up form and 'Aayatana' or the resting places for eg. Vishnu-Shiva-Brahma. Thus this Sarga is concluded: suramyam āsādyā tu citrakūṭam; nadīm ca tām mālyavatīm sutīrthām, nananda hr̥ṣṭo mṛgapakṣijusṭām; jahau ca duḥkham puravipravāsāt/ Chitrakoota mountain is a memorable place of unusual glory, what with 'punya sthalas' of tirtha sthaanas, ups and downs, river ghats, and Venerable River Mandakini replete with pashu-pashis of unimaginable variety. It is at that hallowed place that Shri Rama-Devi Sita-Lakshmanas spent their joyous life time experiences ever!*

[Vishleshana on Vaastu Shastra from Matsya Purana:

Eighteen Rishis gave the Rules and Regulations of Vaastu Shastra to the posterity and these Rishis were: Bhṛigu, Arti, Vasishtha, Vishwakarma, Maya, Nagnajit, Bhagavan Shankara, Indra, Kumara, Nandeswara, Shounaka, Garga, Vasudeva, Aniruddha, Shukra and Brihaspati. As regards, the knowledge of Griha Nirmaana, the results of initiating construction activity in various MONTHS are as follows: in Chaitra Month 'Vyadhi' or diseases are caused; in Vaisakha the Constructors gain cows and Ratnas; in Jyeshtha Month, death is indicated in the family; in Ashadha month construction helps gain of servants, Ratnas and 'Pashus' or domestic animals; in Shraavana Month there would be gain of servants; dangers and risks in Bhadrapada Month; construction in Aswin Month might lead to risk to wife; in Kartik Month there would be gain of Dhana- Dhanya or Money and Crops; in Margasirsha month there would be surplus of Bhojyas or Food Items; commencement of construction in the month of Pausha might lead to thefts and loss of materials; Construction in Magha Month there would be benefits but some fear or possibility of Fire and finally, activities of construction during Phalguna Month should yield gold, progeny and prosperity.

Initiating the Construction of Grihas / houses is considered the best in respect of the following NAKSHATRAS OR STARS: Ashvini, Rohini, Mula, the three Uttaraas, Mrigashira, Swati, Hasta, and Anuradha. As regards the DAYS, all the days of a week are good, except Sundays and Tuesdays. In regard to YOGAS, construction should not start on the following yogas viz. Vyaaghat, Shula, Vyatipaata, Atiganda, Vishkambha, Ganda, Parigha and Vajra. Following MUHURTAS are stated to be ideal for construction viz. Sweta, Maitra, Maahendra, Gaandhawa, Abhijit, Rouhini, Vairaja, and Savitri. To decide on the SHUBHA LAGNA, the activity of construction should be commenced when the Chandra bala as also Suryabala would be equally positive. The most important activities apart, 'Stambharohana' or the hoisting of the Pillar should be taken up first; similarly the procedures should be the same as in respect of the construction of Praasaads, wells and such mini water bodies.

SOIL TEST would be the foremost activity before the actual construction is taken up. Sweta (White), Lal (Red), Peeta (yellowish) and kaala (black) may be the ideal soils for the Four 'Varnas' of Brahmana, Kshatriya, Vaishya and Shudra respectively. Taste-wise, the soil may be sweetish for Brahmanas, sour for Kshatriyas, 'tiktha' or bitter for Vaishyas and 'Kasaili' / Kashaya / Pungent for Shudras. As a part of the soil quality test, saplings are to be planted and the best soil quality would yield the growth over three nights; medium growth over five nights and minimal growth over a week. The best soil obviously would give out the quickest yield.

By way of a diagram, the area meant for construction is drawn as a big square which is divided into nine squares while each square is further sub-divided into nine smaller squares, thus making a total of eighty one square. Of these, thirty two Devatas are worshipped in as many sub-squares and thirteen Devatas from outside those sub squares, thus accounting for forty five squares. The names and the positioning of the respective Deities are: Shikhi, Parjanya, Jayant, Indra, Surya, Satya, Brusha, Antakisha, Vayu, Pusha, Vitatha, Brihatsakshatha, Yama, Gandharva, Bhiring raaja, Mriga, Pitrugana, Daivarika, Sugreeva, Pushpadanta, Jalaadhusha, Asura, Sesha, Paapa, Roga, Ahi, Mukhya, Bhallata, Soma, Sarpa, Aditi and Diti; these thirty two Deities are Baahya Devatas. These Deities are to be worshipped in the four Dik-konas like Ishaana. Now, outside the Vaastu Chakra the following four Deities are to be worshipped viz. Aapa, Savitra, Jaya, and Rudra. In the middle nine squares, on the four sides of Brahma, eight Sadyha Devatas are to be positioned and these are Aryama, Savita, Viviswaan, Vibhudha -adhipa, Mitra, Raajayakshma, Prithvidhara, and Apavatsa. Apa, Apavatsa, Parjanya, Agni and Diti-these are of five Devataa varga to be worshipped in Agneya-kona. Further, twenty Devataas are positioned in two rows: Aryama, Viwaswaan, Mitra and Pritvidhara-these four are stationed on three sides of Brahma in three, three positions each. This is the Procedure of worship to all the relevant Deities.

The methodology of construction varies from one building to another such as Chatuhshaala, Trishaala; Dwishala etc. The Chatuh shaala is open from all four sides with gates /doors on all the sides, known as Sarvatomukha and is normally ideal for a Palace or a Temple. A building which has no door to the west is called Nandyavarta; without a door on the Southern side is called Vardhamaana; without a door on the Eastern side is called Swastika; and without an opening on the Northern side is Ruchaka. A King's Palace is ideally measured the hundred and eight hand-lengths, while that of a Prince has sixty six measures; a General's abode with sixty four measures; forty eight measures to forty eight measures; and thirty two for an ordinary citizen. As regards the 'Stambhas' (Pillar) in an ordinary house, its circumference is multiplied by nine times and the result must be the depth of the pillar underground; a four angled pillar is called 'Ruchak'; eight angled pillar is 'Vajra'; sixteen angled pillar is 'Dwi Vajra', thirty two angled pillar is 'Praleenak' and a pillar whose mid-region is round is called 'Vritra'. All the residential homes should be entered from the right side 'Pravesha Dwar'. Entry from the eastern side where Indra and Jayanta exist is the best; in the southern side 'dwara', it is said that Yama and Vitatha are supposed to be ruling and is good too; on the western dwara, Varuna and Pushpadanta are prominent; Uttara dwar is governed by Bhallat and Sowmya and is quite propitious. But one should be careful of 'vedhas' or forced entries: for instance, such vedhas through side-lanes might result in 'Kulakshaya' or damage to the Vamsha; forced entry through trees might end up in mutual hatred of family members; vedha through mud would bring in sorrows; vedha through water ways would result in problems; vedha through pillars might end up through difficulties arising due to women. Entering from one house to another could end up in grief to the master of the house. A house which opens on its own might result in madness of a family member. Similarly, a house which gets closed on its own could end up in 'Kula naasha' / distress to the Kula. Entry through a very high door could lead to 'Raja bhaya' or difficulties on account of Authorities. If the door is too low, there could be 'Chora bhaya' or fear of thefts. A door just above another door could attract Yamaraja darshan. If a house with a main door of disproportionate size is built in the middle of a big road is made, the master of the house would not live for long. If the main door is smaller than the other doors of a house, that house might not have contentment and would be a constant abode of recurring predicaments. The rear portion of the house must be kept duly adorned with trees, foliage, pots and decoratives. The east of the house there should be 'Vata' vriksha; in the Southern side Udumbara tree and the western side Pippala Tree and Pluksha tree on the northern side. Nearby the house, trees with thorns and Ksheera Vrikshas or milk-yielding trees are not good. It would be propitious to grow trees like Pumnaga, Ashoka, Shami, Tilaka, Champa, Dadimi, Peepali, Draksha, Arjuna, Jambeera, Puga, Panasa, Ketaki, Malati, Kamala Chameli, Mallika, Coconut, Kela, Kadali and Patala as these Trees are signs of Lakshmi / prosperity. Houses are better not built in the extreme vicinity of temples, Dhurtas or mischievous elements, General Administration, Four-Lane Centers, since there might be causes for irritation, fear and problems. Leaving ample space before, rear and sides of the building is a must. It would be advisable to have the southern part of the house elevated and such an abode is called a 'Sampurna' or complete from the Vaastu point of view and would thus bestow the best of advantages.

To lay the ‘Adhara Shila’ (Foundation Stone) of a building, the Priest should determine the ‘Muhurat’, decorate the Stone with white cloth, lay ‘Nava Ratnas’ and Gold along with Nava Dhanyas or nine varieties of appropriate seeds and with the help of masons fix up the stone, and perform ‘puja’ to Ganapati, Vaastu Deva, Ishta Devata or the Family Deity with formal ‘Mantrocchaarana’, also perform ‘Havan’/ homa to Agni Deva with milk, ghee and honey: The relevant Havan Mantra is: Vaastoshpatey Pratiijaanee –hyasmaantswaavesho anameevo bhavaa nah, yat tvemahey prati tanno jupuswa sham no bhava dwipatdey sham chatushpadey/

VAASTU YAGNA comprises: Sutrapath, Stambhaaropana or hoisting of the main Pillar, Dwara vamshocchraya, Griha Pravesha and Vaastu Shanti. Sutrapath takes place in the Ishana Disha and Stambhaaropana in Agneya kona. Vaastu Deva’s ‘Pada Chinhas’ or foot prints should be set up and the ‘Karta’ should do ‘pradakshinas’ (circumambulation) around the foot-prints. It is stated that water with the powder of Munga, Ratna and Suvarna should be sprinkled while designing the ‘Pada-Chihnaas’. Incidentally, the signs of Vaastu should never be ash, lit up firesticks, nails, skins, horns, bones, and skull as some ill-informed persons tend to do so and such material would lead to distress, danger and difficulties. It is advisable that masons and other workers are present at the time of Griha Pravesha. Ishaaney Devataagaaram tathaa Shaanti gruham bhavet, Mahaanasam thathaagneye tatpaarswam chottarey jalam, Gruhasyopakaram sarvam Nairutye Sthaapaded Buddhah/ Bandhasthaanam bahih kuryaat snaana mandapameyvacha, Dhana Dhaanyam cha Vaayavye karmashaalaam tato bahih, Evam Vaastu viseshah syaad Ghruha bhatruh shubaavaham/ (To the Ishaana side of any house, the Devataagraha and Shantigriha must be set up; its kitchen must be in the Agneya kona; to the northern side the ‘Jala sthaan’ (Water reservoir); all the house materials be kept in the Nairuti kona; the place for keeping domestic animals like cows and buffalos as well as bathing rooms are better constructed outside the house; the storage place for Dhana-dhanya should be kept in the Vayavya kona; the ‘Karya shala’ or the Offices should be organised outside the residential place. This pattern of living would certainly assure excellent propitiousness and happiness to the entire family. At the ‘Griha Pravesha’ function (House Warming Time) approaches, Peace and Prosperity is ushered in as stated: Krutwaagrato Dwijavaraanatha Purnakumbham Dhadyakshataamala pushpa phalopa shobham/ Datwaa hiranyavasanaani tadaa Dwijebhyo, Maangalya Shaanti nilayaya gruham vishekthu/ Gruhoktahoma vidhaanaa Bali karma kuryat, Praasaada Vaastu shamaney cha vidharya uktah, Santarpayed vijavaraanatha bhakshya bhojyeh, Shuklaambarah Swabhavanam pravishet sa dhupam/

(As the house is fully ready, the Head of the family should initiate the action of conducting ‘Mangala Shanti’ with a group of Brahmanas ahead along with a ‘Kalasha’/Vessel, full of Sweet Water, Curd, Akshatas, tender mango leaves, flowers, fruits and coconuts as also scented sandal water, agarbattis/ incense sticks and oil-wick lamps nicely lit and decorated, as Brahmanas recite Veda hymns and musical instruments are played, while entering the house at the appointed ‘Muhurta’. There after Griha praasaadas/ doors and other household items are purified for Vaastu Shaanti and Homa and Balidaan are performed. Brahmanas are treated with Bhojan and gifts of gold, vastras and dakshinas, where after relatives and friends are treated too with bhojan and gifts.)]

As Sumantra who very much desired to stay back and accompany Rama-Sita- Lakshmanas too without returning to Ayodhya was some how reconciled as Rama had convincingly demanded him to return to Ayodhya. From Shringverapura on the second day evening on his return, he witnessd that the entire Ayodhya was lifeless and silent. He ruminated with melancholy and depression that no noise was heard, no activity on roads and markets, and along with men and women even cows, horses, and elephants were devoid of any presence; it appeared that right from the King to all the Beings in Ayodhya were apparently burnt off with silence as of a dead city! As Sumantra's chariot appeared at the outskirts, suddenly the news spread and thousands of the citizens ran towards the chariot shouting ' where is Rama now'?! As the chariot slowed down somewhat, Sumantra replied: teṣāṃ śaśaṃsa gaṅgāyām aham āpṛcchya rāghavam, anujñāto nivṛtto 'smi dhārmikeṇa mahātmanā te tīrṇā iti vijñāya bāṣpapurṇamukhā janāḥ, aho dhig iti niḥśvasya hā rāmeti ca cukruśuḥ/ 'Friends! I had gone upto the banks of Ganga along with Shri Raghunadha and the latter instructed me to return back to Ayodhya'. Then Sumantra broke out with loud cryings with gasping breathlessness shouting with his fists beating his chest: 'Ha Rama, Ha Rama' repeatedly.' Then having some what recovered, he murmured: 'Ha! We are all ruined and killed, we may not visualize him again! dānayaajñavivāheṣu samājeṣu mahatsu ca, na drakṣyāmaḥ punar jātu dhārmikam rāmam antarā/ kiṃ samartham janasyāsyā kiṃ priyam kiṃ sukhāvaham, iti rāmeṇa nagaram pītṛvat paripālitaṃ/ Have we to witness and perform all kinds of 'dhaarmic' and social activities without Rama's presence ever! What kind of things and activities that we could perfom hereafter without Rama's presence!' Thus Sumantra had haltingly let the horses move slowly having covered his face with dark cloth wrapped, drifted away towards the Raja Bhavan where King Dasharatha was lying like a 'living corpse'! Even as Sumantra descended the chariot, the womenfolk raised huge alarms and 'hahakaras' and chest beatings looking at each other; the noises became more and more thunderous with reverberations and King Dasharatha who had been thus far in semi-consciousness woke up agitatedly and having realised that Sumantra should have returned and thought as to which kind of explanation to offer to Devi Kousalya! At the same time, Kousalya too having sensed the arrival of Sumantra felt within herself, that Sumantra should be thinking as to how Kousalya was still alive despite Rama having been pushed off to forests on the morning of his rajyabhisheka! It was at that moment of self appraisals of the King and the Prime Queen that Sumantra stepped in. He reported to the King about the details of his travel in great detail. Dasharadha heard what all Sumantra conveyed and at the end of the reportings, looked blank and fell down unconscious on earth even as the surrounding men and women raised huge alarms. . Then with the help of the co queen Devi Sumitra, Koushalya lifted the King to bed. Then as the King got slightly recovered, she addressed the King and said: ‘Maha Raja! Sumantra has returned now and why don’t you please ask him about Rama’s welfare! Are you feeling ashamed of what had happened! Are you not a Satyavaadi! If you cry, then do you not feel that your near and dears too would follow your example of ‘yathaa Raja, tathaa praja’! Now , Devi Kaikeyi is not present; so you may fearlessly enquire about your son’s happenings.’ Having burst out with anguish, Devi Kousalya too fell unconscious and the entire womanhood screamed in high pitch and so did the totality of Ayodhya!

As King Dasharatha got fully recovered from his state of unconsciousness, he called for Sumantra and asked him as to what Rama gave as his parting message. At that time, the Suta Sumantra was full of dust and mud, with swollen eyes having cried all the way back and having prostrated to the King was unable to speak coherently. [Refer to Sarga Thirteen above] Subsequently, Sarathi Sumantra replied giving the parting messages of Rama to the King Dasharatha and his mother Devi Kousalya respectively. The message to the King first: ‘Maha Raja! My earnest prostrations to you; on my behalf I am requesting Sumantra to stoop down and touch your feet. I seek your indulgence to very kindly convey our welfare to my respected mothers and to seek their blessings to us’. Further Maha Raja! Shri Rama addressed his dear mother Devi Kousalya as follows: ‘ Respected Mother! My sincere prostrations to you. I am safe and so are Sita-Lakshmanas who are also seeking to convey their respective ‘paada abhivandanaas’ to you. I am always fully conscious of ‘dharma pari - paalana’. I request you to duly and dutifully perform agnihotra kaarya’ and devata puja every day and faithfully serve Maharaja as your ‘nitya devata’ by performing his ‘charana seva’. Further by discarding your sense of superiority and seniority, I solicit your indulgence to treat my co-mothers especially Mother Kaikeyi. Do provide due recognition to Yuva Raja Bharata on his arrival back. Please appreciate the Raja Dharma and treat him accordingly. vaktavyaś ca mahābāhur ikṣvākukulanandanāḥ, pitaraṁ yauvarājyastho rājyastham anupālaya/ Dear brother! I am sure that you would pay equal consideration for all the mothers. After your Yuva Rajaabhisheka, I am confident that you would uphold the outstanding reputation of Ikshvaku Vamsha as also take all precautions to ensure the good health of our dearest father. The King has become aged and of unsteady health and hence you may have to sincerely follow and abide by his administrative decisions without hurting his psyche. Yuva Raja Bharata! Kindly look after my dear mother well and accord proper treatment’. Having thus reported what all Shri Rama had stated, Sumantra stopped reporting. He said that at that time, Shri Rama who is well known for his self restraint broke down with tears rolling down his cheeks. Sumantra further continued the narration to the King: As Rama was crying away expressing Bharata’s possible maltreatment to Devi Kousalya, brother Lakshmana took the offensive and shouted: ‘ Sumantra! Tell me as to which unpardonable sin that Rama had perpetrated to deserve banishment to dandakaranya for an excruciating fourteen years!! Raja Dashratha had got the instruction of Kaikeyi and at once without thinking even for a while the respected father took a far reaching and irrevocable decision to banish Rama. Lakshmana in his characteristic anger and anguish raised his tone: yadi pravrajito rāmo lobhakāraṇakāritam, varadānanamittam vā sarvathā duṣkṛtam kṛtam, rāmasya tu parityāge na hetum upalakṣaye/ asamikṣya samārabdham viruddham buddhilāghavāt, janayisyati saṁkrośam rāghavasya vivāsanam/Whether this act of highhandedness originated from Kaikeyi’s avarice or the King’s indecisive incompetence, I strongly feel with assertion that the act was a glaring sin! Whether this act of banishing Rama for jungle life was due to the King's incapacity or an act of God, but surely this is abhorable and disgusting. This action is a blatant violation of the established principles and having been perpetrated by a father is no father! As far as I am concerned, I do not have the truthful feeling of the King as a father, but indeed Rama is my brother, father figure, closest friend and my master!' While reporting to King Dasharatha in the presence of Devis Kousalya and Sumitra, Charioteer Sumantra also conveyed the reaction of Devi Sita too; Tapasvini and Maha Pativrata Janaka nandini at the time of his departure, she took long and elongated breathing and stood still; she was obviously moved by the physical and mental tortures of her husband as shared by her too, kept on weeping with her head down and suffering her fate. As Sumantra's chatiot moved on, she kept on staring into wilderness; Sumantra then out of desperation stated: 'May not this misfortune befall even to enemies and Rakshasaas'!

Saardhi Sumantra continued about his return from Sita-Rama-Lakshmanas as his eyes were overflowing with tears and the heart was aching with heaviness while he was greeting them with folded hands.. His concentration on the return path was weak replete with cryings aloud. He wondered whether without returning to Ayodhya, he could stay back with Guha Raja who guided Ramas in crossing Sacred Ganga

by the boat. As perforce started the return journey, I witnessed that freshness of flowers was not noticed while the fruits on the trees were getting dried up. Waterbodies were looking dried up, animal groups were lying scattered without food and even snakes and other poisonous creatures were lying on way without hissings and rapid runs. As rivers were not sparkling with flying fishes, the water birds were seated on dried up tree branches on the banks. Maha Raja! The green gardens of Ayodhya were looking dried up, as the chirruping birds were in hideouts. On the ever buzzing high roads with traffic snarls were empty and a few groups of men and women noticing Sumantra's chariot empty were heaving long breathings with disappointment yet a few of them being inquisitive got surrounded. Even from distances, the load cryings and breast beatings of scattered groups of the public were audible. Sumantra continued his narration to King Dasharaatha: aprahṛṣṭamanuṣyā ca dīnanāgaturāṅgamā, ārtasvaraparimlānā viniḥśvasitanihṣvanā/ nirānandā mahārāja rāmapravṛjā- nātulā, kausalyā putra hīneva ayodhyā pratibhāti mā/ Maha Raja! The citizens of Ayodhya are totally listless and enervated. Even horses and elephants are inactive and lying in groups. They are just like Devi Kousalya looking blank and bleak.' As Suta Sumantra concluded his narration, King Dasharatha raised his voice! kaikeyā viniyuktena pāpābhijanabhāvayā, mayā na mantrakuśalair vṛddhaiḥ saha samarthitam/ na suhṛdbhir na cāmātyair mantrayitvā na naigamaiḥ, mayāyam arthaḥ saṁmohāt strīhetoh sahasā kṛtaḥ/ bhavitavyatayā nūnam idam vā vyasanam mahat, kulasyāsyā vināśāya prāptam sūta yadṛcchayā/ Suta Sumantra! I had myself brought about this tragedy at the evil advice of that evil woman Kaikeyi unilaterally, even without consulting the learned and experienced Gurus and well wishers. I am wholly responsible for this cruel act due to my infatuation for the heartless villainess ! Sumantra! This horrible and thoughtless decision of mine has happened irrevocably for the downfall and obliteration of this glorious empire! Can you now be kind enough to let me reach Rama at once as I donot think that I could survive without seeing him in person. May I entreat you to please do so at once as I might have to soon enough visit Yama loka without seeing him. Then Dasharadha cried out loudly: hā rāma rāmānuja hā hā vaidehi tapasvinī, na mām jānīta duḥkhena mriyamāṇam anāthavat, dustaro jīvātā devī mayāyam śokasāgarah/ Ha Rama! Ha Lakshmana! As King Dasharatha was totally drowned with uninterrupted flood of grief likewise , he had once again got into unconsciousness as Devi Kousalya got terribly alarmed and started behaving rather wildly!

Devi Kousalya became shaking severely as though with ‘bhuta aavesha’ or as if a devil entered into her psyche, and loudly instructed Sumantra: naya mām yatra kākutsthaḥ sītā yatra ca lakṣmaṇaḥ, tān vinā kṣaṇam apy atra jīvitum notsahe hy aham/ nivartaya rathaṁ śīghraṁ daṇḍakān naya mām api, atha tān nānugacchāmi gamiṣyāmi yamakṣayam/ ‘Where ever Rama-Sita-Lakshmanas are, reach me atonce; if not, I should make my travel to Yama Loka!’ Sumantra got alarmed as Devi Kousalya was shouting, he replied in low voice: Maha Rani! Please do not get rattled up with shoka-moha-and dukkha ; Shri Rama would have comfortably settled down while Lakashmana and Devi Sita should be at his tranquil feet. Devi Sita should be performing puja to Rama by now with devotion and unshaken faith and that should why she must have been fearless. To my reckoning, she must have already got reconciled and even accustomed to the present situation. Do you not recall her frequent visits to nearby forests for fun, often all by herself! I recall that on way to the forests, she was curious about each kind of tree, or flower of fruit as she is a true nature lover. She used to some times convey to Rama Lakshmanas that she liked to go alone in the garden -like- wildernesses with vegetation, wild fruits and roots nearby! I recall that Devi Sita had never commented about Kaikeyi’s highhandedness. On the other hand she was always expressing Devi Kousalya’s magnificence, her spontaneous reactions even against oddities and her generosity. Even her tiresomeness of long chariot rides with ups and downs on the way, the attacks of speedy currents of winds, the views of loathsome or frightening scenes on way, or the blazing severity of Sun, had not disturbed her as though she was always in the care of cool rays of Chandra! After all, she is under the constant care and vigil of Shri Rama, then why should be concerned of wild elephants, cruel tigers and lions! na śocyās te na cātmā te śocyo nāpi janādhipaḥ, idaṁ hi caritaṁ loke pratiṣṭhāsyati śāśvatam/ vidhūya śokaṁ parihr̥ṣṭamānasā; mahar̥ṣiyāte pathi suvyavasthitāḥ, vane ratā vanyaphalāśanāḥ pituḥ; śubhāṁ pratijñāṁ paripālayanti te/ Therefore Maha Rani! Having heard Saarathi Sumantra's detailed account on return from the entry point of the Deep forests and the ever hard life ahead of Sita Rama Lakshmanas, Devi Kousalya addressed King Dasharatha as follows: 'Maha Raja! As is well realised by Tri Lokas, you are the kindest, broad minded, soft spoken Dharmatma! But, you have not realised that your sons and daughter-in-law brought up with luxurious background would encounter unusual and unheard of difficulties of deep forest living. How had you ever imagined that a just married princess of some sixteen-eighteen years of Devi Sita could bear the extremities of scorching heat and freezing cold under the open skies! Devi Sita being of royal background is used to taste and leave away 'pancha bhaksha paramaannas' but now would have to bite dried up and semi cooked food out of sheer necessity! She is used to auspiciousness and objects of lavishness listening to soft and soothing musical notes around, but now would have to ear breaking roars of lions right before her! Maha Bali-Maha baahu Shri Rama was used to rest his broad shoulders, strong and tall hands on cushioned and well raised head rest but now sleep of like a wooden log due to extreme tiresomeness on bare earth full of dust. When indeed in my life time that I could vision his readily arresting countenance like an open lotus of freshness with his soft breathing of scented flowers and ever sparkling eyes and cool looks! My heart is made of steel and even without seeing him may it not break into smithereens and splintered pieces. I must have in my past life been apparently a cruel monster without mercy and that is why my consciousness keeps running to the deep forests! I am not convinced that even after the end of the prescribed 'vana vaasa', Bharata would not leave the treasury. Maha Raja! It is said that in the 'shraddha karmas', some house holders of selfishness tend to serve food to the near and dears of the family of the karta and then later on to the prescribed Brahmana atithis! But, the truly virtuous and learned vidvans refrain from consuming even drops of 'amrita' before serving to the 'athithi brahmanas'. At the same time, those brahmanas who finish off their bhojanas first do get up and walk away, the learned vidvans being unable to finish off soon seek to some how gulp out of shyness. The golden rule of 'panti bhojana' is to keep pace with the co-eaters. Further, an ox is not ready to part with the stick firmed up into the earth!. Evam kaneeyasaa bhraatraa bhuktam raajyam vishaampate, bhraataa jyeshtho varishthascha kimartham naavamanyate/ Maha Raja! On this very analogy, how could the elder and most suitable brother is disallowed in favour of the younger, and how could the elder brother accept the 'ucchhista'! Just as havishya, ghrita, purodasha, and kusha grass once utilised in one yagjna are never utilised in another yagjna, how indeed a kingdom ruled by the younger brother be accepted by the elder brother! Like wise again, is it possible to consume 'soma rasa' in one yagjna be consumed once again in another yagjna! Just as a powerful tiger's tail is not possible to hold by some one, then would the tiger not bear that insult! Could a person of Ramas's stature bear that insult either! Naitasya sahita lokaa bhayam kuryur - mahaamrudhe, adharma tvahi dharmatmaa lokam dharmena yojayet/ Even if all the lokaas are united and wage a battle unitedly, Rama is unnerved facing them all; but in this way that the kingdom is taken away in grave injustice, then even he did not transgress the precincts of dharma; after all, could a dharmatma like Rama himself resort to adharma! Moreover, Maha parakrami Maha baahu Rama with his golden arrows could burn off maha samudra, like Samvartaka Agni Deva in the pralaya time could devastate the praana koti! Unfortunately however, Maha Veera Rama was devoured by his own father like a big fish devours its own small fish! Maha Raja! Gatirekaa patirmaaryaa dviteeyaa gatiraatmajah, triteeyaa jnaatayo Raajanchaturthaa naiva vidyate/ It is said that the support for a woman is her husband, later her son, further the father's brother or other relatives, and there beyond none at all.[Manu Smriti is quoted in this context:Pitaarakshati Kaumare Bhartaa rakshati youvane, Putrastu sthaavire bhaave na stree swaatantrya marhati/ Sookshmebhyopi prasangebhyah striyo rakshyaa visheshatah, Dvayorhikulayoh shokamaavahed arakshitaah/ Imam hi sarva varnaanaam pashyanto dharmamuttamam/ Paanam durjana samsargah patyaacha virahotanam, Svapnonyageha vaasascha naaree sandushanaani shat/(During the 'Kaumara dasa' before wedding, the father takes the responsibility, whereafter the husband and in old age the sons, thus a female is always protected though not independent! Even minute expressions might not offend a female and be safeguarded lest there might be unhappiness in either of the families of father and husband, and indeed a female plays a significant yet sensitive role of both the families and hence the need for her balancing act!] But unfortunately Maha Raja! tatra tvam caiva me naasti ramaś ca vanam āśritaḥ, na vanam gantum icchāmi sarvathā hi hatā tvayā/ hataṁ tvayā rājyam idaṁ sarāṣṭraṁ; hataṁ tathātmā saha mantribhiś ca, hatā saputrāsmi hatās ca pauraḥ; sutaś ca bhāryā ca tava prahr̥ṣṭau/ Among these supporting sources, you would not be counted since you are under the spell of Kaikeyi; now the second support line too is unavailable as you had already despatched him away to the forests and my other supports of 'bandhu-bandhavas' are too far off and thus am helpless and lonely; yet I can not go to forests, since stree dharma prescribes 'pati seva' and thus I am having to stay back without reaching my son, any way! My dear husband! Having sent off Rama to forests, you have not only ruined me, but also the high reputation of the Kingdom including the innocent ministers and the public too!' Thus having attacked the King with sword like sharp words out of desperation, disgust and distress, Devi Kousalya fell down to earth unconsciously!

As Devi Kousalya spoke most harshly and fell unconsciously, King Dasharatha was stunned and shocked. He took long sighs and drew heavy breathings. Kousalya was lying beside him and he was afraid of even touching her to bring her back to senses. He started recalling and recounting the blunders that he committed. As Kousalya too regained senses, both of them kept on crying. He started shivering with shame and fear. Then with trembling tone he begged her with folded hands to become normal; he said that she had always excused the lapses of others and similarly she might pardon his blunders too with kindness as he being her husband. Bhartā tu khalu nārīṇām guṇavān nirguṇo 'pi vā, dharmam vimṛśamānānām pratyakṣam devi daivatam/ Whether a husband is a characterless, hatred worthy and despicable human being, he is still deemed as a 'pratyaksha devata'. You too are a 'dharma patni' and well versed with the ways of the world, and of human beings- to err is human and to forgive is divine!' As her husband had literally begged her pardon, Devi Kousalya had apparently reconciled with tears rained down without stop and stated: 'Deva! I am now lying down on earth and fallen at your feet; I beg you to please calm down; if you also ask for my pardon, then I am as good as dead. Naiṣā hi sā strī bhavati ślāghanīyena dhīmatā, ubhayor lokayor vīra patyā yā samprasādyate/ jānāmi dharmam dharmajña tvām jāne satyavādinam, putraśokārtayā tat tu mayā kim api bhāṣitam/ A husband is always a 'pratyaksha devata' indeed both in this world and elsewhere. What all I have burst out was actually in the context of my 'putra shoka' or the extreme concern of my unique son; indeed I regret having expressed likewise. Shoko nāśayate dhairyam śoko nāśayate śrutam, śoko nāśayate sarvaṁ nāsti śokasamo ripuḥ/ One's mental agony tends to kill its stability; that distress leads to black out 'shastra jnaana' or awareness of traditional values; indeed that grief of the worst enemy of the self! The intense thoughts of Rama's absence keep stepped up day by day as the force of the river flows is intensified before merging into the Great Oceans!'

As Devi Kousalya had cooled down somewhat against the background of attacking King Dashratha mercilessly. Indeed both Dasharatha and Kousalya were grievously agitated retrospectively and having been terribly tired slept off cryingly.

Raja Dasharatha who slept off after intense mutual grief along with Devi Koushalya, suddenly woke up midnight with subdued thoughts of Rama who was just like Surya Deva got darkened by Rahu. Then he initiated his thoughts of his erstwhile sins committed by him in the past. As Koushalya too woke up, then he shared his memories and said: yad ācarati kalyāṇi śubham vā yadi vāśubham, tad eva labhate bhadre kartā karmajam ātmanaḥ/ guru lāghavam arthānām ārambhe karmaṇām phalam, doṣam vā yo na jānāti sa bāla iti hocyate/ 'Kalyani! My heinous deed of killing a ‘muni kumara’ by poisoned arrows due to sheer arrogant nonchalance is now rebounding me . I fact I had the self pride of learning ‘shabdavedhi baana vidya’ or the knowledge of releasing arrows on the basis of knowing distant sounds and that immaturity has now recoiled in Rama’s aloofness from me.’ King Dasharatha further continued his confessional recall of yet another tragic episode of his past life: ‘Devi! When I was not wedded to you and was a Yuva Raja, I picked up my articles of archery and commenced riding my chariot for hunting animals even like lions or tigers. On entering a forest on the banks of River Sarayu, I was moving around a lot in search of animals till almost the dusk time. I felt thirsty and had a further ride till the river bed by which time it was dark; as I came up almost up to the river, there was the sound of a pot being filled in by the river water. But later realised that it perhaps was of an elephant drinking water by lifting its trunk up and down to reach its mouth. I desired to test my penchant for ‘shabda vedhi vidya’ again. I aimed at the precise place where the sound waves originated from and released a poisonous arrow. Almost simultaneously, there were the sounds of dropping big pots full of water and ‘haahaakaras’ of a humam being: Iṣuṇābhihataḥ kena kasya vā kiṁ kṛtaṁ mayā/ ṛṣer hi nyasta daṇḍasya vane vanyena jīvataḥ, kathaṁ nu śastreṇa vadho madvidhasya vidhīyate/ jaṭābhāradharasyaiva valkalājīnavāsasaḥ, ko vadhena mamārthī syāt kiṁ vāsyāpakṛtaṁ mayā/ evaṁ niṣphalam ārabdham kevalānarthasamhitam, na kaś cit sādhu manyeta yathaiva gurutalpagam/ Who has hit me with an arrow, what wrong have I committed! I have already discarded my evil profession of harrassing various beings and have since assumed the life of a sage by merely eking my livelihood with ‘kanda moola phalaas’ or roots and wild tree fruits by wearing ‘mriga charmas’ as a ‘tapasvi’. Of which avail of killing me like this! You have no use or purpose served by killing me like this; may your murder of an innocent person like me recoil on you! May this murderer be advised that he should reap ‘pancha pahapatakas’ [Stree hatya, Bhruna / Shishu hathya, Brahmana hatya, Go hatya and Guru hatya / Guru Bharya Gamana].

I am not regretful of being killed but my aged parents become solaceless and sourceless. Indeed more than me , you have literally killed my aged parents!’ King Dasharatha continued the description of his state of mind to Devi Kousalya further: ‘ I was bewildered for a while as the dying person’s sinking tone halted. I felt moved with ready sympathy and ran to the spot from where voice ringing in my ears. The tapasvi was irrevocably hurt and lying with the broken pot in his hands as he was pierced through the poisonous arrows. He saw me approaching him and fixed his eyes on me as though they would convert me into ash and shouted : Raja! you have not only killed me but my aged parents too. They are weak, old and blind too. They are waiting for me for long as they are badly thirsty. They are obviously unaware that I am dying myself. Can a dying tree due to heavy storm possibly help another tree! Go atonce to my hut at this side of the hill nearby and convey them of my dying condition and hopefully they might not curse you to turn into ashes. Now, as I have excruciating pain and please remove the poisonous arrow from my back. Please do not hesitate to do so as poison is sinking into my veins. You may be alarmed that you have perpetrated ‘Brahma hatya’. As I am nearing death, may I declare that I am not a Brahmana by birth; I was born to a vaishya husband and a low caste woman. On hearing his confession and as the poison had entered into his vitals, then I removed the poisonous arrow in one stroke and closed his eyes.

Having revealed details of the Muni hatya, the helpless cryings of his blind parents , Vriddha Muni’s curse that Dasaratha’s death would occur in son’s absence, Dasharatha collapsed to death!

King Dasharatha thus described the most unintentional death of the Munikumara and followed the way by which the latter's parents were to live in the banks of the river Sarayu. He found the parents in a pathetic condition of old, weak, blind, and helpless state. As he reached there he started shivering with fear and tried to say in a low and trembling tone; he said : 'Mahatmas! I am not your son here but am a kshatriya named Dasharatha and most unfortunately committed a blunder. I had come down to the banks of Sarayu with the intention of killing wild and cruel animals like tigers and lions and felt that such animals would normally arrive at the banks of the river. At the time of dusk, I could not see properly and felt that a wild elephant arrived at the river banks and was drinking water by the help of its trunk into its mouth. Then I lifted by dhanush and released a poisonous arrow. But most unfortunately, it was not an elephant but a tapasvi who was targetted and fell down with loud cries of pain almost dying. On reaching the spot, he was writhing in excruciating pain and informed that his blind, old, weak, and helpless parents were nearby and were badly thirsty. As I prostrated at his feet and confessed that the accident had taken place out of the terribly mistaken notion of a wild elephant most unknowingly, he revealed details about you, cried out loudly for the parents but asked to take away the poisonous arrow at once due to terrible pain. ajñānād bhavataḥ putraḥ sahasābhihato mayā, śeṣam evaṁgate yat syāt tat prasīdatu me muniḥ/ In this manner, most unrealisingly and most unfortunately your dear son has reached heaven; as I have confessed truthfully, I beg of your pardon and very kindly resist your anger and anguish not to give me a 'shaap''. Dasharatha continued the narration of the accident and stated that in view of my truthful confession, the aged parents did not give me an instant curse to turn me into ashes! They were dazed with blankness, cried out silently, took long and heavy breathings, and fainted. On recovery gradually, the old parent said: yady etad aśubhaṁ karma na sma me kathayeḥ svayam, phalen mūrdhā sma te rājan sadyaḥ śatasahasradhā/ kṣatriyeṇa vadho rājan vānaprasthe viśeṣataḥ, jñānapūrvam kṛtaḥ sthānāc cyāvayed api vajriṇam/ ajñānād dhi kṛtaṁ yasmād idam tenaiva jīvasi, api hy adya kūlaṁ nasyād rāghavaṇām kuto bhavān/ Raja! If you have not immediately informed us and confessed about your irrtreivable sin, then your head would have broken into hundreds and thousands of smithereens. If a kshatriya would have wantonly committed and escaped the most heinous sin of this nature, even Vajradhari Indra ought to have been dethroned and thrown out. If a Brahmaṇḍi Muni engaged in deep tapasya were to have been killed with 'shastra astras' knowingly and consciously, then his head would have broken into seven parts. But since this tragedy occurred most accidentally and as you have truthfully confessed at once, you are alive and the entire Raghu Vamsha would have been wiped out! Now, Nareshwara, you take both of us to the spot where the dear son is lying dead.' As both the parents were conducted to the spot, they said softly: 'Dear son! Why are you not greeting us nor speaking to us; why are you lying here; are you annoyed with me! Dear son! If you are annoyed with me, why don't you atleast speak to your mother! Why do you not embrace her; son! Say some thing. Only last evening, you were performing 'swaadhyaya' of scriptures in your musical voice and the explained their analysis. Now, after your bath, sandhyavandana, agnihotra, how would you appease us with our 'putra shoka' now. Who should now bring kanda-moola-phalas and provide us 'athithi satkaaraas'! Dear son! Your 'tapasvini' mother is blind, aged, helpless and is crying with 'putra shoka'; how could I being in similar features and situations look after her! Son! Do not enter Yama Loka now; please let us also accompany you. On personally meeting Yama Dharm Raja, I shall make an appeal to padon our son, as he could not maintain his parents! Dear son, you are totally sinless but a sinful kshatriya has killed you, and on account of my truthfulness do reach quickly those lokaas where astra yodhi shura veeraas; but son, never ever show your back but face the enemies with courage and confidence and reach 'veera swarga'. Son! When you reach there you shall encounter veera purushas like Sagara, Shaibya, Dileep, Janamejaya, Nahusha and Dundhumaara. Those who take to Swaadhyaya and Tapasya are presumably accomplish 'Para Brahma Prapti'. Bhumi daata, Agnihotri, Ekapatnivrati, and giver of charity of thousand cows, and Guru sevakas are stated to attain 'maha prasthaana'; be blessed to reach there most certainly.' In this manner the aged father performed 'jalaanjali' or tarpanas to the departed son. Having thus performed the obsequies to the departed Soul, the old man addressed King Dasharatha and stated that he would like to give him a shaap: putravyasanajam duḥkham yad etan mama sāmpratam, evaṁ tvaṁ putraśokena rājan kālāṁ kariṣyasi/Raja! Your death would occur when you would suffer the distress of 'putra viyoga' which I am presently suffering. However, I may not curse you with 'brahma hatya pataka' as you are a kshatriya and you have killed a Vaishya Muni'. Thus concluding the curse to me, Kousalya! the old couple both offered their bodies to dense flames even as I was staring stunned. Devi! This was how that out of youthful carelessness that I killed a Great Muni Kumara and in return secured the curse.'

Having concluded the sad killing of Muni Kumara and the details there after about the curse received by the parents of the victim besides the climaxing their self immolations to 'agni jwaalas', King Dasharatha addressed Devi Kousalya: Tadetacchintayaanena smritam paapam mayaa swayam, tadaa baalyaat kritam devi shabdavedhyanukarshinaa/ Tasyaayam karmano devi vipaakah samupasthitah, apayyaih saha saambhukte vyaadhirannarase yathaa, tasmaanmayaagatam Bhadre tasyodaarasya tad vachah/ Devi! In this manner due to the youthful ebullience, I had utilised the 'shabda vedhi astra' as the poisonous arrow pushed the Muni to death, and now I am vividly recalling the details of that involuntary tragedy and the consequences; that accident resulted me into this curse of 'putra viyoga' at the time of my death. As the entire taste of excellent food spoils a speck of poison is bound to react, is it not! Now this is the time when the Mahatma's curse is nearing me! Kousalye! Now I am facing mrityu devata! I can clearly vision her approaching me and I can not see any thing else! Touch me to decide whether I am conscious. Those getting ready for yama loka yatra would not recognise even close relatives. Only Shri Rama's personal touch could perhaps revive me. Na tanme sadrusham Devi yanmayaa Raghava kritam, sadrusham tatthu tasyaiva yadanena kritam mayi/ Dedvi! The manner in which I had behaved and treated Shri Rama was such that I am totally unworthy of me. Who is that monster on earth who could reject a son of high virtue and fame! He had made his quitting quietly despite his awareness of his elevation on that very morning! Kousalye! Now my vision is blurred, memory power is sinking, and lo, behold! Yama dootaaas have stood up to take me and I am only seeing Rama on my memory screen! He is not a human being but Devata himself! Padma patrekshanam subhru sudamshtram chaarunaasikam, dhanyaa drakshyanti Ramasya taraadhipasamam mukham/ Blessed be that human who could vision that countenance with lotus eyes, prettiest eye brows, sparkling teeth and alluring nose and Purna Chandra samana face! Kousalye! My consciousness is hazy, heart beat is sinking and the sensations of vision, hearing, smell, taste, and breathing are getting terminated. Ha Raghava Maha Baaho haa mama asanaashana, ha pitru priya me naatha haa mamaasi gatah suta/ Ha Mahabaahu Raghu nandana! Ha my overcomer of difficulties, ha Pitru priya, ha my Nadha, ha my dearest son! Having shouted thus Dasharatha finally stated: Saadhvi Kousalya, Tapaswini Sumitra, Cruel Shatru Kaikeyi, and Mahtma Rama! And collapsed finally!

[Vishlesanas : i) on the process of death- ii) departed jeevatma-iii: Yama- iv: Mrityu Sukta [Prashnopanishad vide III.6-7 explains the process of death: Hridi hyesha Atmaa, atraitad ekashatam naadeenaam taasaam shatam shatam ekaikaashyam dyaa saptatir dvaasaptatih pratishakhaa naadee sahasraani bhavanti, aasu vyaanascharati// Athaika -yordhva udaanah, punyena punyalokam nayati, paapena paapam, ubdhaabhyaam eva manushya lokam//(The heart in the subtle Self is connected to some hundred and one nerves of importance each one of these is described as with hundred divisions and each of such divisions is stated to be of 72000 sub- branches or arteries, among which permeates 'Vyana' of the Pancha Pranaas, activating the various directions of the heart spreading all over the joints, shoulders and vital parts. It is this Vyana of the Pancha Pranaas that demands of the body parts of deeds that require strength to perform. Chhandogya Upanishad vide VIII.vi.6 explains: Shatam chaikaa cha hridayasya naadyah taasaam murdhaanaam abhinih abhinishtaika tayordhvam ayann amritatvam eti vishvavam anya utkramane bhavanti/ In the context of the process of death, the status of the physical nerves and how Sun influences these is described: the veins of the body issuing out of the fleshy bulge called lotus shaped heart is charged with juices of varied colours akin to human desires. The heat of the Sun causes bile which when comes into contact with phlegm in the nerves assuming different colours as accentuated by wind contacts. As life departs, the Self goes upwards through the Sun rays and the praani reaches the Sun within the time that mind travels. The nerves connected to the heart are hundred and one. At the time of departure, one of the nerves-Brahma Nadi- of the blessed ones reaches the crown of the head. While the opening of that nerve enables Immortality, vyana through other exit points totalling nine indicates definite return to the cycle of rebirths. Now the reference to Udaana; this vital force moves everywhere in the body from top to toe. When it takes an upward trend it leads to Deva Lokas and as it takes a downward trend it leads to ‘manushya loka if it is ‘ubdhaabhyameva’; or as a result of paapa- punyaas or sins and virtues)III.8-9) Adityo ha vai baahya praana udayati, esha hyenam chaakshusham praanam anugrahnaanah prithivyaam ya Devataa saishaa purushasyaapaanam avashtabhyaantaraah yad aakaakaashas sa samaano vaayur vyaanah// Tejo ha vai udaanah tasmaad upashaanta tejaah punarbhavam indriyair manasi sampadyamaanaih//(Surya indeed is the external praana which ascends in favour of Praana that is present in the eye. The Deity of Earth favours attracting the ‘apaana’ in a human being. The Antariksha as signified by Vayu Deva is ‘Samaana’ and Vyana is Air in the common parlance. The interpretation is that while Surya-Bhumi-Antariksha are stated as of the divine context, Praana-Apaana-Samaana are stated as eyes, exiting wind of human beings and common Air respectively. As regards Udaana, Tejas and common light are the divine and human forms respectively. As explained above,Udaana is the cause of death too, besides all the deeds requiring force in the normal course of life.)III.10-12) Yatchistastenaisha praanam aayaati, praanaastejasaa yuktah sahaatmaanaa yathaa samkalpitam lokam nayati// Ya evam vidvaan praanamveda na haasya prajaa heeyate, amrito bhavati, tadesha shloka: // Utpattim aayatim shtaanam vibhutvam chaiva panchadhaa,adhyaatmam chaiva praanasya vijnayaamritam ashnute, vijnayaamritam ashnute, iti//(Whatever frame of mind and thoughts occur to a human being at the time of the end of life, indeed those very thoughts and feelings along with the functioning of the organs similarly attuned do surface then. Then the prime Praana of the dying person along with Udaana, the Consciousness tapers off and ‘praana yuktah tejasaa nayati lokam yathaasankalpitam’ or the Life Force along with the light within leads to the lokas as felt and deserved! Any person of knowledge who understands of what praana as all about certainly knows that the Departed Soul or the Antaratma then merges in its own origin. In this context, there is a relevant verse: A person of knowledge of Praana would thus be sensitised with its origin, entry, place of residence and the process of exit by achieving its next destination as per one’s own actions of a mix of virtues and vices; very few attain Immortality and the majority return back to Life again; this is the Truth of Life and that indeed again is the Truth of Life!)]

The departed ‘jeevatma’ discarding life behind is accompanied by Lord Yama:Yama:Pareyivaasam pravato maheeranu, bahubhyah panthaam anupaspashaanam, Vaivasvatam sangamanam janaanaam, Yamam Rajanam havishaa duvasya/ May King Yama the son of Surya Deva/ Vivasvaan, be worshipped as he is followed by His relatives and admirers of the departed; Yama has travelled far from the heights beyond and taken to the perfect destination without disturbing any one else. The Stanza is from Rig Veda 10-14.1. ii-iv)

The departed jeeva:Idam tvaa vastram prathama nvaagan/ Apaitaduuhya yadihaabibhah puraa, ishtaapurtamanusampashya dakshinaam yathaa te dattam bahudhaa vi bandhushu/ Imoau yunajmi te vahnee asuneeyaaya odhave, yaabhyaam Yamasya saadanam, sukrutaam chaapi gacchataat/ May the departed one arrive here with new ideas and forget the erstwhile impulses and memories, recalling however the erstwhile actions some of which might have satisfied the conscience such as the acts of dakshinas to brahmanas vis a vis the wealth given by the kinsmen. May the departed one be yoked by two oxen to carry the body dear so far as the life and these oxen reach the abode of Lord Yama or alternatively to other abodes in case that It had done 'satkarmas' earning virtue outweighing the deeds of vice.v-viii) Pushaa tvetah chyaavayantu pra vidvaan, anashthapashuh bhuvanasya gopaah, sa tvaitebhyah pari dadat pitrubhyo, agnirdevebhyah suvidanniyebyah/ Pushemaa aashaa anu veda sarvaah, so asmam abhiyatamena neshat, svastidaa aaghrunih sarvaveero, aprayucchan pura etu prajaanan/ Aayuh vishvaayuh pari pasati tvaa pusha, tvaa paatu prapathe purastaat, yatraaste sukruto, yatra te yayuh, tatratvaa devah Savitaa dadhaatu/ Bhuvanasya pat idam havih, agnaye rayimate svaaha/ May Pushan the omniscient escort the departed Soul to another world as His rays never fail to protect all the Beings and reach them to Pitru Loka and may Agni Deva reach the concerned Devas further on. Indeed Pushan is totally conversant with all the Lokas successively as He is aware the ways and means of leading the jeevaatma to safety free from perils. The post life of departed mortals is well realised by Pushan and hence lead them upto the halts en route. As the Souls which may have done well with the earnings of 'punya', the celestial Savitur would place them well in advance and accordingly lead these with care. Hence, Paramatma! may this offering of the body remains engulf by Agni Deva ultimately! The stanzas v-vii are repeats of Rigveda Mantras of 10.17.3-5-4 respectively.]

iv: Mrityu Sukta: Taittiriya Aranyaka 3.15.1-6 :Mrityu Sukta

Hariam harantamanuyanti Devaah, Vishvasyeshaanaam vrishabham mateenaam, Brahma swarupamanu medamaagaat, ayanam maa vividheervikramasva/ Ma cchido mrityo maa vadheeh maa me balam vivruho maa pramosheeh, prajaam maa me reerisha aayurugna, nrichakshasam tvaa havishaa vidhema/ Sadyas - chkamaanaaya pravepaanaaya mrityave paarasmaa aashaa ashrunvan, kaamenaajanayanpunah/ Kaamena me kaama aagaat, hridayaadhbhudayam mrityoh, yadameeshaamadah priyam tadaituup maamabhi/ Pare mrityo anuparehi panthaam, yaste sva itaro Devayaanaat, chakshushmate shrinvate te braveemi, maa nah prajaam reerusho mot veeraan/ Pra poorve manasaa vandamaanah naadhamano vrishabham charshaneenaam, yah prajaanaam eka karanamaanusheenaam mrityum yaje prathamaja - amritasya/ These verses are stated to be recited in the rites of cremation.

Samasta Devas are stated to accompany the Mrityu Devata- harim harantam; the latter is the Lord of all the worlds and thoughts of the departed. As Mrityu Devata approaches the yajamaana or the victim, the latter assumes an appropriate form. May the Devata be contented with the stanzas recited and destroy the obstacles faced in the journey post life. Mrityu! At the time of departure of the victim, do kindly spare him from severing his body parts causing pain and tolerant energy. Kindly also do not harm my progeny, much less the victim's life span as we are prepared to serve you with suitable offerings. Mrityu Deva! You are source and form of terror and panic to all the Beings with 'Praana'; all the 'ashta dishas' receive the 'aartha naadaas' or the signals of frightening cries. May the children of the departed one be equipped to face moment of departure and spared from the distress that pursues. May the heart of Mrityu be kind and beneficial to the victim and family members. Mrityu Deva! may all paths except Devayana be blocked as that is the only path that the victim desires and surely deserves! May Mrityu be endowed with kind thoughts and actions as the victim seeks mercy and forgiveness after the departure to realise the Truth of Life!

Following the death of King Dasharatha on the previous night, next morning the 'Vandeejana' or the professional prayer- cum-praisers of the departed assembled in the 'Raja Mahal'. Vyakarana- Mantra- Panditas of the Royal Establishment, as also professional singers assumed their turns in praise of the departed King. Svara yukta shloka reciters too assembled in large numbers out side the Raja Mahal blessing the departed Soul. Stuti ganas with modulated clappings and singing the glories of King Dasharatha! Meanwhile, several royal servants initiated the fetching various material in bulk like chandana-karpura-darpana-aabhushana-vastra- gangaajala- vessels of varying sizes. The 'antahpura strees' or the womanfolk of the interiors of the queens queued up to perform 'parikramas' or circumambulations of the body. Some of the select women had even touched the body and got bewildered that the body was still warm and sprang up in surprises. Devis Kousalya and Sumitra were in half sleep as they were awoken till the small hours of the day break. Some of the antahpura strees had even thought that as the queens Kousalya and Sumitra were sleeping as the King had departed! Suddenly they seemed to have recovered from slumber and screamed and shouted 'hey praana naadha'! Tataḥ sarvaa Narendrasya Kaikeyee pramukhaḥ striyaḥ, rudasyaḥ shokasantaptaḥ nipeturgata chatanaḥ/ Then as Queen Kaikeyi too having arrived, all the queens became benumbed and fell down unconscious crying away.

Devi Kousalya with over wept and swollen face looking at the body of her husband was looking like a dried up ocean, shinelss Surya, and burnt off dry ash . Then as Devi Kaikeyi lifted up the dead head of the King on her lap, Koushlaya stated in a low voice: Kaikeyi, your wish is fulfilled now. Now that the hurdle of the King having been removed, now enjoy the 'Saamrajya' all by your self! Rama had gone away and the King has been eliminated; of what avail my life now! bhartāram tam parityajya kā strī daivatam ātmanah, icchej jīvitum anyatra kaikeyyās tyaktadharmanah/ na lubdho budhyate doṣān kiṃ pākam iva bhakṣayan, kubjānimittam kaikeyā rāghavāṇān kulam hatam/ Could there be any body in the womanhood in the universe who kills her venaration worthy of husand and live with luxury and joy! Victimised and getting poisoned by Mandhara, you are squarely responsible for the death of the husband and getting rid of Rama-Sita-Lakshmanas in one masterly stroke to ruin the Raghu Vamsha just for vicarious joy! That Kaikeyi is squarely responsible for pushing Rama forcefully out is once known to King Janaka , how much of appreciative he would be! What a shame that my son would not even know that I was cursed with widowhood! Is Devi Sita the born princess of Mithila worthy of this type of unimaginable hardship. Even whenever there harsh sounds of pashu pakshis heard, she used to hide on my lap! If only the aged Janaka Maha Raja who had only the daughters as his offspring were to know that Devi Sita too accompanied Rama for the ever long forced 'vana vaasa', he would surely not be alive. Saahamadyaiva dishtaantam gamishyaami pativrataa, idam shareeramaamaalingya pravekshyaamo hutaashanam/ I am also ready to follow the parivrataa's duty of 'sahagamana' by jumping into the fire along with the body of my husband!' As such relentless address made by Kousalya to Kaikeyi and simultaneously embracing the departed body, the Ministers gradually took away the queens and the surrounding ladies from the body to initiate the task of soaking the body in oil in large and flat plated vessels, as per the instructions of Maharshi Vasishtha. This has been done so to preseve the body till 'dahana samskaara'. As the body was lifted there were uproars and shouts by the queens and all the onlookers. niśānakṣatrahīneva strīva bhartṛvivarjitā, purī nārājatāyodhyā hīnā rājñā mahātmanā/ bāṣparyākulajanā hāhābhūtakuḷāṅganā, śūnyacatvaraveśmāntā na babhrāja yathāpuram/ In the absence of the departed King, Ayodhya puri was barren like a starless sky and like a king with his widows! Rutetu putraad dahanam Mahipate naarochayamste suhrudah samaagataah, iteeva tasnim- sc haayane nyaveshayan vichintya Raaajaanamichyanta darshanam/ Veda Panditah who had assembled there had unanimously decided not to initiate the daaha-samskaara and as such the body was retained in oilful vessel. Meanwhile the entirety of the citizens of Ayodhya were queued up for the final view of the body of the King.

Atharva Veda 18.3.1. The widow is then advised to get back normalcy as she would be under a shock and realise the reality that her husband was no more; indeed the person who took your hand on wedlock had left her now. After all, she would have to continue to remain in existence and recover her normalcy since she should fight back the evils of the world and fortify herself. One has to reconcile to the absence of the husband and realise that he was not there. Yet, she would have to take a vow that he was there and get readied for a lonely fight. The stanza 6.1.15 viz. Dhanurhastaat explains that since the upbringing of the progeny has to be the wife's prime need of the hour, the widow should take over the bow from the hands of the departed husband's hands and be prepared for a battle to protect the children and stay there itself and face the situations. Thus she takes the challenge of life ahead. Vyasa Maharshi explains of some features of widows: Patyaomritepi yo yoshivaidhavyam paalayet kvachit, Saapunah praapya bhartaaram svarga bhogaan sameeshnute/ Vidhavaa kabari baddhah bhartru bandhaaya chaayate, Shirasovasanam tasmaat kaaryam vidhavaatathaa, Ekaahaarah Sadaa kaaryah nadviteeyah kadaachana/ Gandhadra –vyasya sambhogonaiva kaaryastathaa kvachit, Tarpanam pratyaham kaaryam bhartuh kushatilodakaih/ Vishnostu pujanam kaaryam patibudhaana chaanyadhaa, Patimeva sadaa dhyaaedvishnu rupa dharam param, Evam dharma paraanityam vidhavaap shubhaamataa/( As a husband passes away and the widow observes the regulations of widowhood, since a widow is distinguished as being one, it is preferred that her head hair is removed forever, takes a single meal a day and refrain from a second meal that day! She should not use fragrances and not utilise flowers; every day she should perform tarpana with 'tilodakas' or black Tilas with water using 'darbhas'. Those women who are widowed should consider as the diseased husband as Vishnu himself and then her remaining life would be spent peacefully without problems and even though as of a woman of auspiciousness.]

As all through the night the public Ayodhya thronged for the darshan of the departed King of far reaching reputation, the early morning thereafter, the Kingdom's vidwan Brahmanas collected at the royal court. The Brahmana shreshthas like Markadeya, Moudralya, Vaama Deva, Kashyapa, Gautama and Jaabaali sat before Maharshi Vasishtha and gave their opinions. The substance of what they expressed as follows: 'The passing away of great King Dasharatha to heavens is indeed unfotunate. More unfortunate would be when Rama accompanied by Devi Sita and Lakshmana Kumara had left on a long Aranya Vaasa. Bharata Shatrughnas had been on a pleasure holiday to Devi Kaikeyi's father's kingdom. ikṣvākūṇām ihādyava kaś cid rājā vidhīyatām, arājakam hi no rāṣṭram na vināśam avāpnuyāt/ nārājale janapade vidyunmālī mahāsvanaḥ, abhivarṣati parjanya mahīm divyena vāriṇā/ nārājake janapade bījamuṣṭiḥ prakīryate, nārākake pituḥ putro bhāryā vā vartate vaśe/ arājake dhanam nāsti nāsti bhāryāpy arājake, idam atyāhitam cānyat kutaḥ satyam arājake/ Now this is a serious situation when there is no King of this glorious Ikshvaaku Vamsha in position and in the absence of a King, the Kingdom would be at heavy stake and there is an immediate urgency to declare a King. In a Kingdom where there is no King, it is asserted that in the villages and townships- let alone in Ayodhya- neither lightnings on the sky nor clouds would yield timely rains and the mother earth could yield good crops. Without a King, neither the children nor the wives would be under the regulation of a husband and the entire family life would be at stake. Then where would be order of the society, the central- township- village level administration, the public gardens, dharma shalaas, temples, chatur varnas, yagjnaadi dharma karyas, group meetings, music-dances; and above all internal security and external safety! Yathaa drishtiḥ shareerasya nityameva pravartate, tathaa narendro rashrtasya prabhavaḥ satyadharmayoh/ Just as one's concentration is anchored on one's own body parts [like eyes, nose, ears, skin, tongue, and entries and exits] Raja like the mind or brain is the nucleus, and the supreme controller of all the aspects of the Kingdom, both internal and external. Rajaa satyam cha dharmascha Rajaa kulavataam kulam, Raja maataa pitaa chaiva Rajaa hita karo nrinam/ A King is the representation of truthfulness and virtue; he is stated to be the foremost of all classes of the Kingdom. He is the father -mother- and the chief adviser of one and all in the kingdom. Yamo Vaishnavanah Shakro Varunascha Maha Balah, vishishyante Narendrana vrittina mahataa tatah/ A King by the virtue of his own background and sensitivities might be a Yama, Kubera, Indra, or Varuna and many more features and characteristics. Yama Raja punishes, Kubera bestows wealth, Indra is an outstanding administrator, and Varuna enforces good conduct; but a King is all rolled in one! Sa naḥ samīkṣya dvijavaryavṛttaḥ; nṛpaḥ vinā rājyam arāṇyabhūtam, kumāram ikṣvākusutam vadānyam; tvam eva rājānam ihābhiṣīcaya/ Hence Maharshi! Do nominate an Ideal King at once!

[Vishleshana on an Ideal Kingship vide Manu Smriti-Achaara Khanda]

Ideal Kingship: Manu Deva then describes the ways of conduct and dharmas of a King about his origin and keys to his success as a popular and famed head of a nation. On attaining kingship to a deserving and select kshatriya origin, the King is coronated by the prescribed Vedic Principles to assume the duties expected as from a Head of the Kingdom. This is so when a Leader of the Society has to establish an authoratative Institution based essentially on Dharma and Nyaya and above all to ensure safety and security as an Integrated Identity among the comity of co-kingdoms. Hence the group of Devas like Indra, Surya, Vaayu, Yama, Agni, Varuna, Chandra and Kubera confer Kingship to the most suitable Kshatriya as per Vedic Verses hence as the unique representative of the lusters and magnificences of the combinations of the representative Devas; indeed like a Sun God the King becomes too radiant to gaze and provides the great source of authority and power sourced from the respective Devas of warmth yet heat of Agni, sweep and speed of Vaayu, placidity and coolness of Chandra, sternness and demand of justice/ virtue of Yama, ample food and sustenance of Varuna, and the auspiciousness and prosperity of Kubera! Even a King as an infant is worthy of respect and awe as there is a worthy King in him and ought to be so venerated. Indeed, careless approach and casual treatment paid to an infant king, who is no doubt, backed up the strong foundations of Kingship as from Vedic Principles, as Agni could provide warmth as also burn the whole family and property as of 'lock-stock- and barrel'! A King with his 'kaarya siddhi' or the success of his purpose as per the prevalent circumstances of 'Desha Kaala Tatwa' seeks to attain 'dharma siddhi' as he assumes varied features of kshama, krodha, mitrata, or even pratikaara or revenge! A King indeed is 'sarva tejomaya' or all powerful as he could usher in Devi Lakshmi or alround prosperity, or his anger might invite mrityu or death. If a King is annoyed even by default, the victim's misfortune kicks off and his indignation is certain to mritu! Tasmaad dharmam yamishteshu sa vyavasyennaraadhipah, anishtam chaapyanishteshu tam dharmam na vichaalayet/ Tasyaarth the sarvabhutaanaam goptaaram dharmama -atmajam, brahmatejomayam dandam- asrijat purvameeshvarah/ or that is why the dharmas originally created by the institution of Kingship are such as never to be infringed upon and hence the age old principles are such as shaped by the conscience of any King either of mercy or of punishments. This why any of the 'sthaavara-jangamaas' or of moving-immoveable nature in Srishti are driven by the impulses of their own consciences too and the interpretations of respective Kingships as per 'desha - kaala- paristhitis' or of contemporary situations need necessarily to be upheld and observed. Hence punishments truly represent the King, his Purushtva of assertion and of unquestionable Leadership ; punishment only governs, protects, and sustains vigilance even in sleep or casualness as the constant guard and caution. Sameekshya sa dhritah samyak sarvaa ranjayati prajaah, asameekshya praneetastu vinaashayati sarvatah/ Once punishment is made applicable and enforced, it uproots the evil but once gets lax then attracts further evil. In the case of a King's negligence of punishment, the defaulted person once saved perpetuates the evil as a fried fish about to be pitch-forked spared or soft cotton piece turns into an iron rod! In case a King spares a criminal from punishment, a crow would steal a pitru pinda or a dog sniff or lick a sacrificial food just as a person of illfame forcefully occupies another's lawful house in possession since dandasya hi bhayaat sarvam jagad bhogaaya kalpate/ or the entire world loses the grip of fear and becomes all kinds of illegal perversions. Once a rod is spared then even a child is spoilt; Deva, Daanava, Gandharva, Raakshasa, Pakshi, Sarpas too once spared would be victimised with evil; being devoid of 'daanda', the conduct of all the beings in Srishti gets sullied and in respect of human beings varnaashrama dharmas are severely broken irretrievably paving way for vices and engendering evil forces Yatra shyaamo lohitaaksho dandashcharati paapahaa, prajaastatra na muhyanti netaa chet saadhu pashyati/ Tasyaahuh sampranetaaram raajaanam satyavaadinam, sameekshya kaarinam praajnam dharm kaamaartha kovidam/ That exactly why the concept of Kingship or Leadership is stated as the hinge and hold of the sensitive balance of virtue and vice; where punishment is due it ought to stalk around assuming black color and of red eyes demolish blemishes and sins. Moreso it is in the context of fulfilling the four human aspirations of Dharma-Artha-Kaama-Moksha in a measured manner; indeed hence is the presence of Leadership as assumed by a King. Kingship is defined as who is aware and conscious of the are of punishing and sparing the stick ; tam raajaa pranayansamyak trivargena abhivardhate or He is the ideal King who is truthfully wedded to the principles of virue and nyaaya, modest and ideal earnings for the Self and dependents besides spare for charity, and controlled and regulated by moderate and just desires; but certainly not to fullfill sensual pleasures, deceitful ways of flippant lives and of selfish motivations. When punishment is prescribed it may not be palatable to unrelenting minds, but when the king concerned does not proclaim it in a non commensurate manner without adequately examining or hiding facts of the case, then the King if partial in judgment is not spared too and might affect his family even. Once the King and his family is ruined, then the store of 'adharmaas' so collected might affect not only his possessions of castles, his territories and his 'praja' and their fortunes also. Contrarily a champion of Dharma and Nyaya would carve a niche not merely among the co-kings but as in respect of Maharshis and even Devas might secure a qualification for Brahmatva! A continuous series of undue punishments out of hiding facts or ignoring them and issued by an unjust King would have repercussions on the disgrace and ruin of his deputies down the line in the Vamsha and might adversely affect those concerned like Ministers, Army Commanders and so on as involved in the declarations of judgments. Further on, even the Sages would feel the guilt and the thought processes of Devas receiving 'havyas' at the Agni Karyas in the Kingdom might be disturbed! Hence: Shuchinaa satyasandhena yathaa shaastaanusaarinaa, pranetum shakyaate dandah susahaayena dheemataa/ Svaraashtre nyaaya vrittah syaad bhrishadashcha shatrushu, suhritsvajihmah snigdheshu braahmaneshu kshamaanvitah/ The ideal most King is such sagacious, truthful and intelligent kind of unique followers of Dharma and Nyaya, ably assisted by equally professional deputies, and indeed his judgments for or against punishments or rewards are stated to be one among the countless ones of his worthy race. The fame of such rarity are like drops of oil spreading fast in running flows of water. However the ill fame of a King unworthy of his title and seat tends to act like butter on the water flows steadily till the day of doom. The idealism of Kingship upholds the dignities of the Chatur Varnas and ensures their continuity.. Such Kings of rarity are stated to possess their daily routine as follows: in the early mornings itself, they attend the congregations of the learned and the aged vidwans of Rig-Yajur-Saama Vedas and discuss the specifics of Dharmas and of Administrative Principles involved. They worship and honour such vidwans appropriately and abide by their teachings as discussed. Such exemplary Kings are never harmed but enjoy longevity and prosperity. They are modest and that modesty makes them imperishable. For want of modesty, several Kings in history had perished along with their belongings and on the other hand hermits in forests had turned to be Kings. Veno vinashtovinayaatnahushashchaiva paarthivah/Sudaah paija vanashchaiva sumukho nimoreva cha/ Prithustu vinayaad raajyam praaptavaan manureva cha, Kuberashcha dhanaishvaram brahmanyam chaiva Gaadhijah/ In the historical introspective, illustrious Chakravartis or Emperors like Vena, Nahusha, Sudaasa, Yavana, Sumukha, and Nimi perished out of their questionable and evil conduct. On the other hand Prithu and Manu flourished as Chakravatis out of their outstanding modesty and impeccable character and Kubera gained the position of Dhanaadyaksha and one of the Ashtapalakas of the Universe. Vishwamitra the illustrious son of Gaadhi a Kshatriya by birth attained the status of an elevated Brahmana by the dint of perseverance, tasya and conduct. The King should perfectly understand the aspirations of the common persons of the day especially in avoiding the pitfalls of co-Kings and most unhesitatingly try to initiate steps in constructing such a Capital City and never even seek to his own personal comfort but ensure his deputies and staff as well as the public of the Kingdom to live with comfort and safety. Towards this end, he needs to construct a fortress protected by vagaries of seasons and possible eventualities of diseases or natural disasters. Such a fortress of distinction and status be suitably equipped with defence forces to ensure safety from attacks of beasts, robbers, internal forces of revolution, external foes and such elements and fortified with weapons, grains, cattle and fodder, ample water and tools, as also Vidwans, artisans, and representatives of chatur varnas, and above all Purohitaas or Priests and Ritvigs to duly perform various smarta karmas of auspicious nature besides the shroutha karmas of daily agni karyas and Sacrifices. Yajeta raajaa kratubhirvi vidhairaapta dakshinaih, dharmartham chaiva viprebhyo dadyaad bhogaan dhanaani cha/ Saanvatsarikamaaptaishcha raashtraadaahaarayad balim, syaachchaamnaayaparo loke varteta pitrivatnrisu/ The King has to be such as always engaged in Ashwamedhaadi yajnas attracting learned Brahmans to receive gifts and charities of golden ornaments, precious clothes and so on besides providing employment to workers as also the participating crowds of public with feasts. Indeed the King is stated more than a father and protector of the interests of one and all. As the citizens of the Kingdom are responsive of the noble activities of the King and the band of his officials of commitment ensuring peace and safety, the taxes are paid on time and general business climate is salutary and hence the economy is sound and attracts investments from the public and from foreign kingdoms too. Besides plugging in loopholes of business transactions, the King too motivate the officials down the line with incentives , moral persuasion and punishments against inefficiency or corruption. As BrahmanaVidyathis emerge out of Guru Kula after Vedaadhyayana are suitably gifted and trained for more and more tough assignments to preserve and promote dharmaacharana since nidhir braahmanobhi dheeyate or indeed Brahmanas are the treasures installed by the Kings that could neither be lost nor robbed; such treasures could also not be split, nor perish as they are ever-sustained by the purity and blaze of Agni itself. Samamabraahmane daanam dvigunam braahmanabrue, praadheete shatasaahasramanantam veda -paarage/ Paatrasya hi visheshena shraddadhaanatayaiva cha, alpam vaa bahu vaa pretya daanasya phalamashnute/ While charity is offered to any of Varnas then there would be good returns of ‘sukrita phala’, but once that daana is given to a Brahmana the returns get doubled ; once that daanas are executed to a well read and knowledgeble Brahmana, the fruits get further intensified hundred thousand fold, while the recipient is a Veda Vedanga paaranga, then he demands ‘anantha phala’! Even if a ‘daana’were given as per one’s own ability, then undoubtedly a deserving status is accomplished in the higher worlds.]

As Maharshis like Markandeya exhorted Maharshi Vasishtha about the urgency of appointing a King in place of the deceased King Dasharatha, the latter replied that Bharata was already nominated as the King of Ayodhya but as of then Bharata along with his younger brother had gone to his maternal uncle’s Kingdom on a holiday. Then as the Maharshis suggested, Maharshi Vasishtha had then instructed five horsemen named Siddhardha-Vijaya-Ashoka - and Nandana to race up their horses to Rajagriha Nagara and bring Bharata and Shatrughnas as quickly. The Maharshi briefed that they ought not to mention even one inkling about the developments at Ayodhya about the King’s passing away, or Rama-Sita-Lakshmana’s going for long time vana vaasa and so on. They should only convey : Purohitas tvāṁ kuśalaṁ prāha sarve ca mantriṇaḥ, tvaramāṇaś ca niryāhi kṛtyam ātyayikaṁ tvayā/Bharata Shatrughna Kumaras! Purohita Vasishtha Maharshi and all the Ministers have the pleasure of sending their best wishes and enquiries of your welfare. The Purohita has requested both of you to return at once as he informed that there was a very urgent matter concerning you. mā cāsmāi proṣitaṁ rāmaṁ mā cāsmāi pitaraṁ mṛtam, bhavantaḥ śamsiṣur gatvā rāghavāṇāṁ imaṁ kṣayam/ Even by mistake or slip of tongue you ought not mention that Rama had proceeded for vana vaasa and thus King Dasharatha had passed away. Then to Bharata Shatrughnas were sent gifts and silk clothes. As per instructions the horsemen proceeded forth with and on way rested for a while and further crossed the Apartaal Mountain and towards the south having reached Pralamba giri crossed River Maalini. Then they further crossed Hastinapura's Ganga, reached Panchla Desha, Sharadanda, Kulinga, River Ikshumati as was worshipped by King Dasharatha, Bahmaaka Desha, Sudama Parvata, venerated Vishnu Paada on the mountain top, then moved o towards Pipaasha River. By did desire to halt for the night as they were dead tired at the township of Girivraja but having indeed recalled the instructions of the Maharshi and hence had to hurry up by the exhausted horses to reach the Royal Palace.

Even at the arrival of the Nagar, in the small hours of that morning , Bharata has had a very inauspicious dream and having called a few close friends , expressed his anxiety about it . The dear friends rejected the dream and sought by diverting his anxiety; some took to instrumental music, some soothened by dances and hilarious jokes, but Bharata was the least amused. Then he described about the bad dream; he said that in the dream he saw his father; his face was dirty, his hairs were uncouth, and he appeared to have fallen into a mass of mud from a mountain top. That mud was of excretion of a cow. Then he was applying oil, consuming flows of it and was swimming in it. His face was pale and dry as of a dried up ocean, as Moon fell down on earth. The entire earth was shaking in swings as though there were repetitive quakes. Mountains were breaking down with their sides falling down with thunderous thuds emitting heavy smokes all around. King Dasharatha was seated on a black boulder wearing black clothes as black women were abusing and beating him. Dharmatma Dashratha was wearing a blood red garland with red sanders wood powder besmeared all over his body seated on a donkey which was braying away towards the southern direction. One raakshasi female was forcibly drawing the donkey cart. As Bharata was detailing the early morning dream of distress to his friends and gradually recovered by its impact, the messengers from Ayodhya arrived and having touched the feet of the Raja Kumara stated: Purohitastwaam kushalam praaha sarvecha Mantrinah, tvaramaanascha nirhyaahi krityakrityamaatyayikam tvayaa/ Kumara! Purohita Vashishtha and all the Ministers would like to convey their blessings to you. They would like you to return to Ayodhya urgently on some official business. Then the messengers offered him valuable clothes and gifts, of which twenty crores were meant for the King of Kaikeya and ten crores meant for the Kumara's maternal uncle. Accordingly all the gifts were distributed by Bharata personally. Further more, how is my own mother who is ever selfish for her reasons of self pride and superiority Devi Kaikayi!' As Bharata enquired of all the family members at Ayodhya, the messengers conveyed the welfare of them all and most respectfully reminded him to be ready for the return travel at once. Then Bharata approached the maternal grand father and having respectfully prostrated to him stated that he was urgently required at Ayodhya for some official duty. The King then touched Bharata's head as a gesture of blessing. Similarly Bharata reached the maternal uncle with affection and was sent off with several elephants, tiger skins, valuable gifts of two thousand gold coins and jewellery, hundreds of well trained and faithful dogs, horses and elephants, and groups of body built and ever loyal personal attendant soldiers. Thus having recieved a ceremonial send off, Bharata along with the younger brother Shatrughna sat comfortably in the chariot with hundreds of soldiers, elephants, horses and innumerable and invaluable gifts behind and ahead.

From Raja Griha, Bharata Shatrughnas proceeded towards rivers Sudama and further to Hladini and Shatadru (Satej) and reached Aparaparvat named village and further to Shila River where 'shilpis' were famed for their 'shilpa vidya' or rock carvings. Then they reached the sangama place of Sarasvati and Ganga, and having crossed River Kulinga and reached the banks of Punya Nadi Yamuna. As the horses and the entourage were tired, Bharata-Shatrughna Kumaras had refreshing baths. Proceeding further, they reached Amshudhana village near Bhagirathi Ganga and on to the renowned Pragvat Nagara. Having crossed Ganga, they reached Kutikoshtthi rivulet, Torana graama, Jambuprastha, and Varuthaka village. They spent the night in a garden with tall trees and scented flowers. The next halt was at Kadamba

Gardens. There after, he hurried up to be able to cross the villages of Sarva Tirtha- Hasti prishthak-Rivers Kutika-Kapeevati-village Ekasaala-Vinata graama-and having crossed Gomati river banks and Saala vana near Kalinga nagara. As the horses and the soldiers were all dead tired they spent the next night too at Saala Vana. By the next day break, Bharata witnessed the ancient Ayodhya which was built by Manu. Presuming that he would visit the King's palace later, Bharata foremost visited his mother's palace and on seeing the appearance of Bharata, Kaikeyi sprang up from her golden chair with excitement. He found his palace was looking unbecoming inside out, he touched his mother's feet. She embraced the sons and as they were seated, she initiated the conversation: my sons, I have missed you for long as you had gone to the maternal uncle's kingdom; how was the journey; hope all is well there; are you tired! Having nodded his head positively, he said that it was a week or so that he left his maternal grand father's place and all were safe and happy there and we were sent off with numberless gifts and memories. But tell me mother, why are you looking pale and lonely! Is the father not here; I have actually felt that father would be here itself, and that is why I preferred coming here itself first! Tell me where and how is dear father! Is he with mother Kousalya! Then Kaikeyi kept silent for a moment and thought that as Bharata was totally unaware of the factual situation that it was out of her self avarice which brought about her husbands's death, she responded slowly: yā gatiḥ sarvabhūtānām tām gatiṁ te pitā gataḥ/ tac chrutvā bharato vākyam dharmābhijanavān śuciḥ, papāta sahasā bhūmau piṭṛśokabalārditaḥ 'Son! Your dear father King Dasharadha, a great Mahatma, Tejasvi, Yajna sheela, satpurusha's ashaya, one night had reached where all the human beings finally should reach!' On hearing this stunning news suddenly, Bharata shouted loudly, cried broken down instantly and swooned down. On recovering senses gradually, he crawled up to the father's bed and cried that the bed was like a moon less sky and like dried up 'maha samudra'! Having burst out like wise, he crawled and rolled in rounds under the raised bed symbolically. Having gradually pacifying Bharata for good time, Kaikeyi addressed Bharata: uttiṣṭhottiṣṭha kim šeṣe rājaputra mahāyaśaḥ, tvadvidhā na hi śocanti santaḥ sadasi saṁmatāḥ/ sa rudatyā ciraṁ kālam bhūmau viparivṛtya ca, janānīm pratyuvācedaṁ śokair bahubhir āvṛtaḥ/ abhiṣekṣyati rāmam tu rājā yajñam nu yakṣyati, ity aham kṛtasamkalpo hṛṣṭo yātrām ayāsiṣam/ tad idam hy anyathā bhūtaṁ vyavadīrṇam mano mama, pitaram yo na paśyāmi nityam priyahite ratam/ 'Raja! please get up as you are fallen on earth in this manner. You are worthy of being honoured in Royal Courts and your responsibility is of a King in the making. Dear son! Your mental sharpness at this juncture as the King of Ayodhya ought to be akin to the supreme brightness of Surya Deva; you should now on be the figure of top authority of daana-dharmas- vedic karyas and all such responsibilities of a King.’ Then Bharata was further stunned and said: I had rightfully imagined that I was being called back from my maternal grandfather to join the celebrations of Shri Rama’s ‘yuva rajatva’! But on the contrary King Dasharatha is no more! What had happened to him! Did he take ill suddenly. Rama has to now take our the entire responsibility of ‘antyeshti!’ Now: yo me bhrātā pitā bandhur yasya dāso ’smi dhīmataḥ, tasya mām śīghram ākhyāhi rāmasyākliṣṭa karmaṇaḥ/ pitā hi bhavati jyeṣṭho dharmam āryasya jānataḥ, tasya pādaḥ grahīṣyāmi sa hīdānīm gatiḥ mama/ Rama is my brother, father, relative and my dearest; please urgently send intimation Rama of my arrival. While dying, he also expressed that those could witness Rama accompanied by Devi Sita and Lakshmana would be blessed.’ Innocently inquisitive Bharata asked as to where Rama Sita Lakshmanas had gone! Kaikeyi replied craftily that they were dressed in ‘mriga charma’ and departed for ‘dandakaranya’! Bharata kept on wondering as to why they had left likewise! Had Rama’s ‘dharma paraayanata’ which had been the hallmark of the Vamsha got degenerated! He interrogated Kaikeyi: Had Rama looted some body or killed an innocent! Hope Rama was not involved with another woman! Kasmaat sa dandakaaranye bhrataa Raamo vivaasitah/ Why indeed Rama was punished and banished for ‘vana vaasa’? Then having seized of the seriousness of the situation, Kaikeyi revealed: ‘neither Rama looted and killed a brahmana, nor he had illicit love affair; but: mayā tu putra śrutvaiva rāmasyaivābhiṣecanam, yācitas te pitā rājyaṁ rāmasya ca vivāsanam/ sa svavṛttiṁ samāsthāya pitā te tat tathākarot, rāmaś ca sahasaumitriḥ preṣitaḥ saha sītayā/ tam apaśyan priyaṁ putram mahīpālo mahāyaśāḥ, putraśokaparidyūnaḥ pañcatvam upapedivān/ Dear son! Let me now tell you the truthful reality: I had realised that King Dasharatha decided to celebrate the Yuva Raja Abhisheka to Rama and I requested that this opportunity be afforded in your favour and suggested that Rama be banished for ‘vana vaasa’. King Dasharatha recalling the two boons granted to me in the past and being a basic follower of Truthfulness, he conceded to my requests. As Sita and Lakshmana also decided to accompany Rama, they too accompanied Rama. As they proceeded to ‘vana vaasa’, the outstanding follower of ‘dharma and nyaya’, your father died of ‘putra shoka’. This indeed is the truthful reality. tvayā tv idānīm dharmajña rājatvam avalambyatām, tvatkrte hi mayā sarvam idam evaṁvidhaṁ kṛtam/ tat putra śīghram vidhinā vidhijñair; vasiṣṭhamukhyaiḥ sahito dvijendrain, saṁkālya rājānam adīnasattvam; ātmānam urvyām abhiṣecayasva/ Now, My son of virtue, do assume the honour of Kingship as I have nicely crafted every detail; do not cry now and face the situation with firmness and as per dharma. Now, Kingship is right at your feet. So brace up the opportunity on hand with bravery, firmness and commitment! As all the arrangements have been tied up by no less than Maharshi Vasishtha himself, get ready of the Rajyabhisheka!’

Having heard the double edged horrifying developments at Ayodhya of the King's agitated death and the vana vaasa of Rama-Sita-Lakshmanas, Bharata was shocked and wept non-stop, shouting away: 'what use now is my Kingship; is it a boon or curse! You have ruined our lives! Tell me why you had tortured and harassed my exemplary father! Explain to me why you had turned off Rama out of his place of living! He is such outstanding example of virtue and modesty without one word in protest! You have also tortured Param Saadhvis Devis Kousalya and Sumitra with double horrors of father's death and vana vasa for their sons of fame and of untold modesty! Bharata continued lashing his anger and hatred for his mother Kaikeyi! He said that she should be banished from the Kingdom as she had rolled down from the 'Dharma shikharas' or the mountain tops of dharma. Kaikeyi! as you have done the sin of 'Kula vinashana' you be deemed to have assumed the 'bhruna hatya maha paapa' killing a fertility egg and as such be cursed with 'naraka yatana' or the unimaginable experiences of hell.[Pancha Maha Patakas are stated as Stree hatya, Bhruna / Shishu hathya, Brahmana hatya, Go hatya and Guru hatya / Guru Bharya Gamana.] In other words, she should seek to cry for a still born child like me. Give me one justification as to why you have hastened dear father's death, Rama Sita Lakshmana vana vaasa and as a corollary of 'loka ninda' or universal slander and denigration for me! mātṛrūpe mamāmitre nṛśamse rājyakāmuke, na te 'ham abhibhāṣyo 'smi durvṛtte patighātini/ Owing to the avarice of becoming a King's Mother you have now turned out as 'dushta charini' and 'pati ghatini' or cruel demoness and a killer of husband! You will go down in human history as an evil mother of an innocent son! Devis Kousalya and Sumitraas well as the mothers of the Kingdom have all been crushed in their thoughts just because of your arrogance and high - handedness. Indeed you are not to be deemed as the 'kanya' of Dharmaraja King Ashvapati but 'kula dhvamsi raakshasi!' The double edged sins that you had committed are now resulting in vicious circles of sending off Dharmatma Rama to vanavasa, Pativrata Sita Devi accompanying him, dear Lakshmana following them, this led to father's death, and now your anxiety and ambition to reign the Kingdom by makinbg me a puppet King and pulling down the high prestige of the Kingdom and the worst of all making the public of the Kingdom harassed and exposing it to internal rebellion and external attacks! Normally, mothers give birth to sons from the purity of their hearts, but not as toys to play with. Anyadaa kila dharmagjnaa Surabhih sura sammataa, vahamaanou dadashrovyaa putrou vigata chetasou/ In the remote past, Surabhi Kama dhenu saw its sons as they had become senseless; like wise, a dharmatma stree too became unconscious like me. The two sons were commanded by the masters of the sons to keep on tilling the land even during the mid day blaze of the Sun. The kind mother Surabhi kept on crying about the fate and misfortune of the oxen. Lord Indra realised that the divine cow Kamadhenu was in distress. Taam drishtvaa shoka samtaptaam varjapaaniryashasvineem, Indrah praanjalirudignah Sura raajobraved vachah/ As Indra Deva noticed that the Divine Cow Surabhi was crying away on the high skies incessantly, he prayed to her with folded hands ; he asked hear about her great grief. I have no complaints from swarga; but my two sons in the form of oxen are being treated mercilessly by the farmers on earth even in heat of the mid Surya. These are my own children and like wise a number less oxen are born on earth! Yasyaah putra sahasraani saapi shochati Kaamadruk, kim punaryaa vinaa Raamam Koushalyaa vartayishyati / Just as Kamadhenu too keeps crying for her sons, Devis Kousalya and Sumitra too keep crying and how could they survive such hapless situation as their sons are be harassed for no fault of theirs! aham hy apacitim bhrātuh pituś ca sakalām imām, vardhanam yaśasaś cāpi kariṣyāmi na saṁśayah/ ānāyayitvā tanayam kausalyāyā mahādyutim, svayam eva pravekṣyāmi vanam muniniṣevitam/ I have no decided that having renounced this type of very temporary Kingship as decided by Maharshis , I will most certainly go to Shri Rama and prostrated him to kindly return and accept his lasting Kingship! Having thus shouted at Kaikeyi, Bharata fell down on earth like an elephant and dragged himself like a serpent with heavy breathings.

Vishleshana on Surabhi: In the Ramayana, Surabhi is described to be distressed by the manner of public's treatment of her sons, the oxen, in the fields. Her tears are considered a bad omen for the Devas and Indra. Raghu vamsha of Kaalidaasa mentions that the King Dilip, an ancestor of Shri Rama once passed by Kamadhenu-Surabhi, but failed to pay respects to her, thus incurring the wrath of the divine cow, who cursed the king to go childless. So, since Kamadhenu had gone to Patala, Maharshi Vasistha advised the King to serve Nandini, Kamadhenu's daughter as the latter was in Vasishta's ashram. Accompanied by his wife, the King propitiated Nandini, who neutralized her mother's curse and blessed the King to have a son, who was named Raghu. The Vana Parva of the Maha Bharata also narrates a similar instance: Surabhi cries about the plight of her son, a bullock, who is overworked and beaten by his peasant-master. Indra, moved by Surabhi's tears, stopped rains to stop the ploughing of the tormented bullock!

Having recovered his senses still persisting with distress, Bharata having mercilessly shouted at his mother, he approached the Ministers and addressed them: Hon'ble Ministers! I should most emphatically assert that I am not interested in Kingship and I was never informed of this status before my arrival. I was totally blank about what my father conceded of my kingship, as I was away along with brother Shatrughna well before his sad demise.. I was also blank about when and why Rama Sita Lakshmanas were forced to leave for vana vaasa. As Devis Kousalya and Sumitras came to realise that they were conferring with the Ministers, Devi Sumitra was informed and conveyed to Devi Koushalya that the cruel Kaikeyis son Bharata had arrived. After addressing the Ministers, Bharata Shatrughnas approached Koushalya. Even from a distance, Koushalya felt unease and fell unconscious, Bharata ran and kept her on his lap; on recovery, she kept on crying and said: idaṃ te rājyakāmasya rājyaṃ prāptam̐ akaṇṭakam̐, sam̐prāptam̐ bata kaikeyyā śīghram̐ krūreṇa karmaṇā/prasthāpya cīravasanam̐ putram̐ me vanavāsinam̐, kaikeyī kaṃ guṇam̐ tatra paśyati krūradarśinī/ 'Dear son! May such degraded sinners at whose behest Rama was banished for vana vaasa be reborn as chandalas in the next birth as the lowest servants of the worst of chaturvarnas, like those who face Surya and resort to 'mala muutras' or kick off the sleeping cows. May that heinous person responsible for tormenting Rama-Sita-Lakshmanas be reborn as slaves of those cruel masters who refuse to pay wages and even deprive of their daily bread. Akartaa chaakritag- t nascha tyaktaatmaa nirapannapah, loke bhavatu vidvashto yasyaaryonumate gatah/ That heinous human being responsible for despatching Rama for vana vaasa is despicable, ungrateful, rejected by the virtuous, shameless and worthy of public hatred. That desolate and wretched person would be such as should enjoy ‘mrishhtaanna’ or highly tasty and rich food all alone without sharing with one’s own children, servants, and let alone beggars! May such disgraceful and wicked person who has instructed Rama to be forcefully thrown out along with Dharmapatni and brother to wilderness with an early, lonely and distressed death. The monstrous and wicked sin in one’s human life is stated as the killing of a glorious king, an outstanding woman of virtue, an aged and helpless woman and an honest servant of trust; may that miserable sin be applicable to that fallen person responsible for Rama’s vana vasa. That loathsome villian responsible for Rama’s vana vaasa be soon a beggar with torn and detestable clothes to hide the body - shame, loaf around the universe with shoutings of hunger and thirst!’ As innumerable such curses were showered on ‘THAT WOMAN HIS OWN MOTHER’, Devi Koushalya was stilled and stunned and stated: mama duḥkham idam putra bhūyah samupajāyate, śapathaiḥ śapamāno hi prāṇān uparunatsi me/ diṣṭyā na calito dharmād ātmā te sahalakṣmaṇaḥ, vatsa satyapratijñō me satām lokān avāpsyasi/ Dear son! Do kindly stop any more curses as each of those have had sinking feelings in me and my disgust for further living is ever palpitating in my sub-consciousness. I am however contented that son Lakshmana was never shaken from the precincts of Dharma . You too Kumara is of Satya Pratigjna and should most certainly be rewarded all along your future life now and ‘parama mukti’ there after. Having stated likewise, Kousalya drew Bharata on her and embraced him. [Padma Purana is quoted: Shri Rama at the end of his ‘avatara’ or incarnation finally walked into the Sacred Sarayu River. Bharat, Shatrughna, and all the citizens of Ayodhya along with their wives, Mantris, Servants, Vedikas, Brahmanas, the nearby animals, birds, and so on accompanied Shri Rama who never looked back. As Shri Rama went deep into the River, Lord Brahma, Devas, Rishis and all Celestial Beings extolled Raghunatha even as He took the Huge Form of Maha Vishnu with his four hands along with Bharata as Shankha, Shatrughna as Chakra, and Lakshmana as Gada with Sri Devi and Bhu Devi beside Him.]

As Bharata was in grievous distress, Maharshi Vasishtha approached Bharata to face the situation with fortitude as he should now perform his duty of ‘Pitru Antyoshthi Karma’ and the ‘Dahana Samskara’ of the King Dasharatha. Then the Ministers also initiated the task, Bharata approached the body preserved in oil, prostrated dutifully thrice and initiated the task. As the body was lifted from the oil the face of the body looked very pale; then the body was washed and was placed on a bed decorated with precious stones. Bharata got heart broken and cried stating: Maha Raja! you could not even wait for my arrival as I was away for a while, but having sent off Rama-Sita-Lakshmanas for vana vaasa, you hurried up to attain swarga! As you had left off peacefully, what did you think that in the absence of Rama about the fate of this kingdom! Maha Raja! Vidhava prithvi rajasatvayaa heenaa na raajate, heena chandreva rajani nagaree pratibhati maam/ Without you the kingdom is widowed and your sons are paled off like the moonless night of their lives. As Bharata was crying away thus, Maharshi Vasishtha mildly alerted Bharata that he should recover himself at once and take up the duty faithfully with resilience, courage and with absolute peace of mind dutifully. Even as the Ritviks, Acharyas and Maharshis were hurrying up, the body was shifted to a ‘palki’ accordingly and taken to the crematorium as accompanied by Ministers, officials, renowned public figures, and servants, was placed on earth facing ‘Agni Jwalaas’ and the ‘havan’ was initiated. Some were decorating the body with chandana and sugandhas, guggulaas and while the high volume recitations of the ‘vedic mantras’ the body was dedicated to the high flames emerging from the wooden sticks of devadaaru-sarala- padmaka tree branches. Then the Ritvikas were rendering Saama Veda Shritis. It was at that time Queens Koushalya, Sumitra and Kaikeyi followed Bharata the main Karta made pradakshinas weepingly and finally fell down to earth with ‘saashtaanga pranaamaas’. Ritvikas with Vasishtha Muni in the lead too recited the relevant Mantras. Consequent on the ‘Daaha Karma’, Bharata, the Queens, Ministers, Purohitas, and the entire Public carried the ‘savaaris’ or the ashes to the banks of the Sacred River Sarayu for ‘jalaanjali’ tarpanas.

[Vishleshanas from Taittiriya Aranyaka: The departed ‘jeevatma’ discarding life behind is accompanied by Lord Yama- departed Soul-Pushan- Sayavari / cow- widow-and Agni

i) Yama: Pareyivaasam pravato maheeranu, bahubhyah panthaam anupaspashaanam, Vaivasvatam sangamanam janaanaam, Yamam Rajanam havishaa duvasya/ May King Yama the son of Surya Deva/ Vivasvaan, be worshipped as he is followed by His relatives and admirers of the departed; Yama has travelled far from the heights beyond and taken to the perfect destination without disturbing any one else. The Stanza is from Rig Veda 10-14.1.)

The departed jeeva: Idam tvaa vastram prathama nvaagan/ Apaitaduha yadihaabibhah puraa, ishtaapurtamanusampashya dakshinaam yathaa te dattam bahudhaa vi bandhushu/ Imoau yunajmi te vahnee asuneeyaaya odhave, yaabhyaam Yamasya saadanam, sukrutaam chaapi gacchataat/ May the departed one arrive here with new ideas and forget the erstwhile impulses and memories, recalling however the erstwhile actions some of which might have satisfied the conscience such as the acts of dakshinas to brahmanas vis a vis the wealth given by the kinsmen. May the departed one be yoked by two oxen to carry the body dear so far as the life and these oxen reach the abode of Lord Yama or alternatively to other abodes in case that It had done ‘satkarmas’ earning virtue outweighing the deeds of vice. Pushaa tvetaḥ chyaavayantu pra vidvaan, anashthapashuh bhuvanasya gopaah, sa tvaitebhyah pari dadat pitrubhyo, agnirdevebhyah suvidanniyebhyah/ Pushemaa aashaa anu veda sarvaah, so asmam abhiyatamena neshat, svastidaa aaghrunih sarvaveero, aprayucchan pura etu prajaanan/ Aayuh vishvaayuh pari pasati tvaa pusha, tvaa paatu prapathe purastaat, yatraaste sukruto, yatra te yayuh, tatratvaa devah Savitaa dadhaatu/ Bhuvanasya pat idam havih, agnaye rayimate svaaha/ May Pushan the omniscient escort the departed Soul to another world as His rays never fail to protect all the Beings and reach them to Pitru Loka and may Agni Deva reach the concerned Devas further on. Indeed Pushan is totally conversant with all the Lokas successively as He is aware the ways and means of leading the jeevaatma to safety free from perils. The post life of departed mortals is well realised by Pushan and hence lead them upto the halts en route. As the Souls which may have done well with the earnings of 'punya', the celestial Savitur would place them well in advance and accordingly lead these with care. Hence, Paramatma! may this offering of the body remains engulf by Agni Deva ultimately! The stanzas v-vii are repeats of Rigveda Mantras of 10.17.3-5-4 respectively.

Sayaavari / Cow to cleanse the sins of the departed: Purushasya sayaavarayapedaanim mujahhe, yadhaam no atra naaparrah puraa jarasa aayaati/ Purushasya sayaavari vi te simnaam praanaam, shareerena maheemahim, svadahyehi pitrunup, prajayaasmaanilahava/ Maivam maamstaa priyeham Devee satee pitrulokam yadaishi, Vishvavaaraa nabhasaa samvayantgee, tasyah porajaam dravinam cheha dhehi/ Sayavari is the cow which was stated dear to the departed person brought to the place of cremation as the symbol of all Devas. Thus, the Sayavari the symbol of Devas! Kindly remove the sins of the departed. As the departed one has loosened all his / her energies, may the Sayavari enter the planes of the firmament and lead the way to Pitru Loka. May you also provide your milk to the departed one en route and at the destination as you have access to all the lokas. (Garuda Purana vide Chapter 30: 41-42 and 52-53 are quoted: 'Tarkshya Deva! Any Being on Earth or Pancha Bhutas or the entirety of Creation is Vishnu. Hence whosoever performs a ' karma' or action, the fruit of that action is Vishnu too; thus a person when performs an act, good or otherwise, Vishnu decides the fruit of that action. At the end of the journey of a human- as in other cases too-River Vaitarani is commended as its waters would purify the sins made by the departed one- during the 'kaumara-youvana-vaardhakya- janma janmaantara' as also during 'raatri- praatah- madhyaahna-aparaahna' and both the sandhyas too. The singular solution is hence the charity of a 'kapila gomaata' to a well deserved Brahmana. The following is the verse to be recited at the time of Godaana: Gaavo mamaagratah santu gavaam madhye vahaamyaham/ Yaa Lakshmeeh sarvabhutaanaam yaa cha Deve vyavasthita, dhenurupenasya Devee mama paapam vyapohatu/ Cow alone is ahead of me- the departed Soul, behind me as my support, my sides too; cow is in my heart and I am on the midst of cows. May the Lakshmi Svarupa-Sarva Bhuta Svarupa-Sarva Deva Svarupa- as the symbol of a Cow, destroy my sins instantly with this Go- Mata! Guruda Purana sums up : those who are destined to go to heaven are supposed to grab the tail of a cow that appears on the banks of the river Vaitarna to be led safely across to the ethereal shores of Vaikuntha)

Tributes to Agni Deva for the final offer of the dead body : Imamagne chamasam vaa vi jighvarah, priyo devaanaamuta soumyaanaam, esha yashchaamaso deva paanah, tasmin Devaa amritaam maadayante/ Agnervarma pari gobhirvyayasva, sam prornushva medasaa peevasaacha, net tvaa, ghrushnurharasaa jarshyashaano, dadhat vidhakkshyan, paryangyaate/ Mainamagne vi daho, maabhi shoucho maasya tvacham chikshipo maa shareeram, yadaa shrutam karavi Jaatavedo, athemainam prahinutaan pitrubhyah/ Shrutam yadaa karasi Jaatavedo athemenam pari dattaat pitrubhyah, yadaa gacchantyaasuneetimetam, athaam Devaanaam vashaneerbhavaati/ Suryam chakshurgacchatu vaatamaatmaa, dyocha gaccha prithiveem cha dharmanaa, apo vaa gaccha yaditram te hitam, oushadheeshu pratrim tishthaa shareerereh/ Ajobhaagastapasaa tam tapasva, tam te shochishpatu tam te archih, yaaste shavaastanuvo jaatavedah, taabhirvahemam sukrutaam yatram lokaah/ Ayam vai tasmaadadhi, tvametadayam vai tadasya yonirasi Vaishvaanarah, putrah pitre loka krut, Jaatavedo vahemam sukrutaam yatram lokaah/ Agni Deva! please do not hurl or shake this dead body; it is dear to Devas as wells as to mortals; the former seek to enjoy the pleasure of the Soma juice and this vessel is the drink of Devas and the latter who are immortal take pleasure in the Soma; this stanza is a repeat of Rig Veda 10-16-8. The next stanza is a repeat of Rig Veda's previous stanza 10-16-7 addresses the dead body: you are enclosed with the 'kavacha' or the shield of Agni Deva who is merely turning only your body parts to ashes but not your true self which indeed is everlasting. Hence Agni is merely clearing the mess of your body! Agni Deva! you may consume the deadbody along with his heart, pancha koshas or Five Sheaths of the body called Annamaya (Physical Energy), Praanamaya (Vital Energy), Manomaya (Mental Faculty), Vigyanamaya (Buddhi or Sharpness of Discrimination) and Ananda maya (Bliss) only but thereafter kindly despatch the 'Jeevatma' - Inner Being- safely to the Loka of His forefathers the Pitru Loka. Agni Deva, when you render the jeevatma fully rid of the memories of the erstwhile life, then That becomes rendered fit with a fresh form subject to the will of Devas. Preta swarupa! Let your vision see Surya Deva, your breath to Vayu Deva! As per your destiny and the fund of your 'sukrita phala', you may reach swarga, or back to earth or waters. In case you are destined to return as vegetation, then you shall do precisely the same swarupa once again.- Rig Veda 10-16.-3. Referring to the stanza : Suryam chakshurgacchatu vaatamaatmaa, dyocha gaccha prithiveem cha dharmanaa, apo vaa gaccha yaditram te hitam, oushadheeshu pratrim tishthaa shareerereh/ as explained , Chhandogya Upanishad 5.10.6 explains: Abhram bhutwaa meghe bhavati meghe bhutwaa pravarshati taiha veehiyavaa oshadhivanaspatyah tila-maasha iti jaayant, ato vai khalu durnispra pataram, yo yohyannam atti yo retaah sinchati, tad bhuya eva bhavati/(In the further travel of the Soul from white clouds to thick black clouds to rains, the same is born as paddy, barley, herbs, sesmum, black pulses and so on. Now, the release of the concerned paddy or pulse is also destined as per the time of its release from the shell to kernel; similarly the cycle of food intake from an insect to a bird or to a reptile to an animal or human being is destined likewise). The next stanzas 6.1.22 -23: Ajobhaaga stapasa tam tapasva-- and Ayam vai tvamsmaadabhi/ are as addressed to Jaataveda: 'Agni Deva! having burnt off the body totally, may the physical aspects of the human being been burnt off totally, may the subtle body as the Jeevatma be carried to the wide world of the Devas of virtue; then there is hardly any difference of Vaishvanara and Jeevatma, especially after passing through the layers that the latter passes through! 6.2.1-3: On the path above after death, the jeeva is protected by three kinds of Devas besides Agni Deva; Ya etasya patho goptaarastebhyah svaaha, ya etasya patho rakshitaarah; tebhyyarasvaahaa, ya etasya pathorakshitaarastebhyah svaaha, Khyatre svaaha Apakhyatre svaahaa, Abhilaalapate svaahaa Abhilaalapate svaahaa, Apalaalapate svaahaagnaye karmakrite svaaha Yamatra naadheemastasmai svaah/ Yasta idmam jabharat, slshvidaano muurdhaanam vaa tatpate tvaayaa, Divo vishvasmaat seemaghaayata uruushyah/ Asmaatvamadhi jaatosi, tvadayam jaayataam punah, Agnaye Vishvaanaraaya suvargaaya lokaaya svaaha/ May the jeeva on the ascent to high skies be protected by this Agni Deva three Devas viz. Goptaarah, Rakshitaarah and Abhirakshitaata. May also this offering be received to Khyata who disclosed this secret as also to Apakhyata who refrains from disclosing the information. May also this offering to Deva Abhilaalapate who commends the deeds of virtue of the Jeevatma that performed in the just concluded mortal life and what is more , may Apalaapate Deva not to divulge the deeds of vice with great refrain. Above all, this offering be made to Agni Deva Himself in case any other Deities of help have not been addressed by default. Agni Deva! you are indeed the unique help in reaching our oblations to all the concerned deities including those who have not been addressed! May the passage of the 'pretaatma' to the respective destinations be free from all types of visissitudes. Agni Deva, you have had the background of birth of the antaratma of the departed person irrespective of the dead person's pluses and minuses of concluded life. That is the supplication to you to assist the pretatma to a helpful rebirth. May the offering be received by Vaishvanara Agni in the upper worlds! The journey of the departed from Agni to the dogs of Yama to Pitru Loka to Surya: *Pra ketunaam brihataa yatyaagnih, aarodasee vrishabho roraveeti, divaaschidantaam upamaam udaanat, apaamapasthek mahisho vavardha/ Idam ta ekam, para vuu ta ekam, truteeyena jyotishaa sam vishasva, samveshane tanvaschaarudhi priyo, Devaanaam parame sadhasthe/ Naake suparnamupa yat patantam, hridaa venanto abhyachakshat tvaam, hiranyapaksham varunasyadootam, yamasya yonou shakunam bhuranyanyum/ Ati drava saarameyou shvaanou, chaturakshou shabaliu, saadhunaa pathaa, athaam pitruun suvidatraam upehi, Yamena ye sadhamaadam madanti/ You te shvaanou Yama rakshitaarou, chaturakshou pathirakshee nruchakshasou taabhyaam raajan paridehi enam, svasti chaasmaa anmееvam cha dhehi/ Urunasou asutrupaa udumbalou Yamasya dootao charato janaam anu, taavasmabhyam drishaye suryaaya, punardaataam asum adyaha bhadram/ Soma aikebhyah pavate, dhurutameka upaasate yebhyo madhi pradhaavati, taan chit evaapim gacchhataat/ Ye yudhyante pradhaneshu shuuraamso ye tanuutyajah, ye vaa sahasra dakshinaah, taan chit evaapim gacchhataat/ Tapasaa ye anaadhrushyaah, tapasaa ye svaryayuh, tapo ye chakrire mahah, taamschadevaapi gacchhataat/ Ashmanvatee Revati, sam rabhadvam, uttishthath pra tarataa sakhaayah, atraam jahaama ye asannashevaah, Shivaan vayam urtteeram abhi vaajaan/ Yadvai Devasya Savituh pavitram, sahasra -dhaaram vitatamantarikshe, yenaapunaat Indram anaatar maartyah, tenaaham maamsarvatanum punaami/ Yaa raashtraatpannaadapayanti shaakhaam abhimrutaa nrupatimicchamaanaah, dhaatustaaya sarvaah pavanena puutaah, prajamaasmaantrayyaa varchasaa saamsrujaaya/ Utvayam tamasah pari, jyotih pashyant uta taram, Devam devatraa, Suryam agamna jyotih ut tamam/ Dhataa punaatu Savitaa punaatu agnestejasaa Suryasya varchasaa / Agni Deva in the form of thick smoke flies high from bhumi to dyuloka with his flag assumed the form of a bull with roar; even as He enters the dyuloka with the assistance of Jala Deva assumes the form of lightnings This stanza is the same as Rig Veda vide 10-8-1. Rig Veda 10.56.1 denotes that this Praani is the food of Mrityu; Its basic form was of Agni, then that of Vayu the Deity of Wind and finally of Jyoti Tatva or of Atma Tatva. 'Meet this Soul and provide him 'tejasvi rupa' or of effulgence and get It divinity! The Third stanza is taken from Rigveda 10.121.6 meaning : This scene would be visible as that of a high flying bird Varuna in svarga loka and it is this bird which gets nourished in Yama Loka. But the departed Atma, if saved from Yama's dogs called Shaarameya which are four eyed and could change their appearance in multi colours, could then proceed to join the virtuous Pitru Loka. These Sharameya dogs both are actually are the dogs of intuition and are the gaurdians protecting the Atma on the way up towards the Deva Yaana the divine path with their divine vision. Thus the departed human beings are hunted or helped too by the 'Yama dootas'; Rig Veda vide 10.14.12 the messengers of Lord Yama are broad nosed and of extraordinary physical strength and mental energy. Once satisfied by the swing of balance of the departed soul's karma, the fierce dogs sober down and save from any evil forces on the right path. May these divine dogs guide the 'pretaatma' to reach the Land of Bliss and grant him relief from the sorrowful earth of 'arishdvargas' or the six principal evils of existence so that the Soul could look upon the Surya Deva with contentment and Joy! The seventh stanza referring to the Pitru Loka where Soma Juice flows is a repeat of Rig Veda 10.154.1; the meaning is ' Pretatma! Pitru Loka is the celestial place where Pitru Devas rejoice flows of Soma Juice and 'ghritaahutis' or the offerings of ghee while meditating on Surya Deva and that is why there is a rush for the honey of delight who are in the know and practice of Madhu Vidya. Rig Veda 1.90.6-8 explains about Madhu Vidya: *Madhu vaataa rutaayate madhu ksharanti sindhavah maadhveernah snatoshadheeh/ Madhunaktamutoshaso madhumatpaarthivam rajah, madhu

May like pitru devataas bestow divine juices of sweetness while the Maatru Varga Devatas too bless us with earthly juices of outstanding taste thus reaping the sweetness of ‘Iham and Param’ or on earth and thereafter! May all kinds of Vanaspatis grant us pleasures while Surya Deva with His ‘tejasvi kiranās’ or radiant rays shower happiness while the nights and ‘usha kaala’ ensure our joys always thus so that the herds of cows too yield sweet milk to us. May Mitra Deva, Varuna Deva, ‘Nyaaya Pradaata’ Aryama Deva, ‘Aishvaryavaan’ Indra Deva, ‘Vaani Swaami’ Brihaspati, and the Singular Universal Vishnu Bhagavan bless us all round auspiciousness!]

[Visleshana on Shraddhas: The Brahmanas to be appointed as ‘bhoktas’ are to be well versed in Veda Vedangas, well behaved, healthy with no physical disabilities, coming of good family background, infallible, and trained well in performing Parvana shraddha and /or ekoddishtha as well. Such ideal bhoktas be invited in advance by the Karta or his brother or son or disciple. The ‘nimantrana’ or invitation should be done with ‘Apasavya’ of ‘yagnopaveeta’ in respect of ‘Pitru sthaana bhokta’ and ‘savya’ position to Vaishwanara bhokta. The prescribed number of Pitru Sthana and Vaishwadeva Sthana is three and four but as per Desha-Kaala-Parishithis or convenience and availability a minimum of one each would be a must. Vaishwa Deva Brahmanas are to be seated Purva Mukha or east facing and Pitru Deva brahmanas are Uttara mukha or facing north. The respective Brahmanas of Pitru and Vaishwadevas are not mingled nor even touch each others. Vishwedevas are stated to be ten in number: Kraturdaksho Vasuh Satyah Kaalah Kaamasthaivacha, Dhunischa Rochanaiva tathaa chaiva Pururavaah/ Ardraaascha darshete tu Vishwadavaah prakourtitaa/ (Kratu, Daksha, Vasu, Satya, Kaala, Kaama, Dhuri, Vilochana, Pururava and Ardrava are the Vaishwadevas). In the present context, two ‘Arghya patras’ or water vessel with ‘gandha-akshata-darbhas’ are placed at the seat of of the Vishwa Devas and are to be handed over with reverence to the representative Brahmanas and perform a pradakshibna around him. The arghya paatras / vessels could be of bronze or copper or palaasha leaves. Similarly at the Pitru sthaana Brahmana too has to be circubambulated but in an ‘apradikshina’ manner or the reverse manner changing the yajnopaveeta in the ‘praachhenaaveeti’ manner. All the tasks concerning the puja of the Brahamana representing Pitru Devatas need to be done including that of his puja with black tila to be ornamented on his head downward to his feet, while puja to similarly be done tp the Vaishwe deva with akshata white rice grains from head to feet. After puja to both the Viashwanara and Pitru Devata representative- Brahmanas with gandha-pushpa-dhupa- deepas, the next task would be Agnoukarana with the concurrence of the Brahmanas. This task is to make two homas after keeping Agni in the homa kunda twice reciting: Saannidhyamupaasa Somaaya pitru matey Sadhaanamah/ Agnaye kavyavaahanaaya swahaananamah/ These homa kriyas need to be performed as of Pitru yagna vidhaana homa and since Pindapitru yagna is of two fold nature of Daivikatwa and Paitrukutwa the yagopaveeta might either be in Savya or Apasavya manners as per one’s own shakha manner. In any case, the remaining ‘anna’ needs to be disposed off in Agni itself and no remainder of it be retained. The next step is Pariveshana or purification of the cooked bhojana or bhakshya-bhojya-shaaka-soopanaadi padarthas with right hand wearing darbha followed by ‘ghritaabhikarana, then holding the right hand thumbs of the Brahmanas representing the Vaishwa Deva and Pitru Devas of three generations with naama-gotras , taking care of savya-praacheenaaveeti precautions, showing them around the padarhas placed in circles – in savya or apasavya manner respectively- and request them to commence the bhojana after performing ‘Aaposhana’ making the bhoktas feel completely comfortable discarding what ever they do not like. The karta would address the bhokas saying: Anna heenam kriyaheenam mantra heenam yadbhavet, Sarvamachchidramiyutkaa tato yatnena bhojayet/ Even as the bhojana starts, there should be Swaadhyaya: Swaadhyayam shraavayet Pitrye Dharma shastraani chaiva hi/ Anna Suktaadi Shravana is to be taken up during the Bhojana kaala. Also before the bhojana itself, the remainder of anna at Agnoukarana is to be placed as three small pindas along with ghee and tilas. After the bhojana follow the tasks of Sapindeekarana and Pinda pradana- puja karmas. As regards, ‘Madhyama Pinda viniyoga Vidhana’ or the matter related to be disposal of the middle pinda of the three pindas, it is customary that the wife of the Kartha if childless receives it with reverence in her hold with both palms from her husband as the Mantra is recited: Apaamtvoushashadho - naagum rasam praashayaami bhutakrutam garbham dhatswa/ As the house wife eats the Madhya Pinda, the Mantra is to be recited: Adhatta Pitara garbhamanta santaana vardhanam/ Manu states: Pativrataa dharma patnou pitrupujamnatparaa, Madhumantu tatah pindamadhyatsamyak sutaarthinow/ Ayushmantam sutam vindet yasho medhaa samanvitam, Dhanavantam prajaavantam dhaarmikam saatwikam tathaa, iti/ In the event of wife not consuming the Madhyama Pinda, or even otherwise, the Tri Pindas be eaten by a Brahmana, or Agnihotra or cow or running water. In case a Karta cannot perform Parvana Shraddha for any reason of inability due to any reason he could perform the same as Sankalpa Shraddha .Source: Parashara Smriti]

There after on the thirteenth day of the agni samskaara, śabdāpihitakaṇṭhaś ca śodhanārtham upāgataḥ, citāmūle pitur vākyaṃ idam āha suduḥkhiṭaḥ/ tāta yasmin niṣṛṣṭo 'haṃ tvayā bhrātari rāghave, tasmin vanam pravrajite śūnye tyakto 'smy ahaṃ tvayā/Bharata broke down and cried aloud stating: ‘My dear father! You have entrusted this hard task of king ship to me after sending off my elder of incomparable virtue and capability. Why had you decided and despatched Rama the only source of strength to Devi Kousalya!’ On seeing the place of where the father’s body ashes was visualised, he recalled his memories and wept again: you had put mother Kuashalya with such heavy load of distress on her and me!’ As Bharata kept on crying again and again, Shatrughna followed suit. Then they kept on recalling their memories and suddenly went in rage and said: mantharā prabhavas tīvraḥ kaikeyīgrāhasaṃkulaḥ, varadānamayo 'kṣobhyo 'majjayac chokasāgarah/ How indeed this vily and wretched woman Mandhara had entered the scene and ruined the psyche of Kaikeyi which led to all these diasters in a chain and threw us all midstream in the irrevocaable ocean of misery! And our considered resolve is now to leave the glorious Ayodhya which was the cynosure kingdom ruled by the generation of Ikshvaaku.’ As Bharata Shatrughnas were swept away by the forceful tides of the ovean of sorrow, Maharshi Vishvamitra intervened: trīṇi dvandvāni bhūteṣu pravṛttāny aviśeṣataḥ, teṣu cāparihāryeṣu naivam bhavitum arhati/ Bharata! There are three inevitable characteristics of mankind viz. hunger and thirst- sorrow and infatuation and old age and death. Being fully aware of these it is unnatural that bursting out wastefully to a person of self restraint is rather childish of immaturity’. As Maharshi Visishtha mildly reproached Bharata Shatrughnas wiped off their tears and got engaged with other urgent actions to be attended to.

As the duties of the thirteenth day were concluded, Shatrughna approached Bharata cryingly and said: How horrible was this that Rama who was not only in respect of family persons but to entire society was equally considerate and that ideal most person was humiliated and thrown out for long forest life! And this tragedy had happened due to one woman; ‘is this not a slander of the Society!’ Even then, that person of unique bravery and repute viz. Rama did not say one word in protest: how magnaanimous he had been! pūrvam eva tu nigrāhyaḥ samavekṣya nayānayau, utpatham yaḥ samārūḍho nāryā rājā vaśam gataḥ/As King Dasharatha was drowned in the evil influence of a woman, then itself having examined as to what was justice and what was not, that evil woman ought to have been imprisoned at the beginning itself! While this conversation was going on, Devi Kubja entered the eastern gate of the palace and stood having been decorated with bright precious jewellery, expensive silk clothing and with sweet scented body perfumes like an old female monkey. Even when she was entering, the doorman noticed her entry, he dragged her by her neck and addressed Shatrughna: yasyāḥ kṛte vane rāmo nyastadehaś ca vaḥ pitā, seyaṁ pāpā nṛśamsā ca tasyāḥ kuru yathāmati/ śatrughnaś ca tad ājñāya vacanaṁ bhṛṣaduḥkhitāḥ, antaḥpuracarān sarvān ity uvāca dhṛtavrataḥ/ tīvram utpāditam duḥkham bhrātṛjñāṁ me tathā pituḥ, yayā seyaṁ nṛśamsasya karmaṇaḥ phalam aśnutām/Rajakumara! It was this dirty woman who was responsible for Shri Rama’s departure for ‘aranya vaasa’ and dear father’s sad demise. Now she is being handed over to you and you may treat her suitably!’ Then Shatrughna had at once grabbed her both wrists and head hair, shouted loudly as the entire interiors of the palace got resounded: ‘This hateworthy wretched devil who made my father’s life miserable leading to his sad demise and responsible for the degraded sin of advising Kaikeyi to banish the Godly eldest brother ought to deserve apt punishment!’ As Shatrughna screamed with disgust and hatred, the onlookers especially the womanhood of the palace felt that he would surely kill her mercilessly. As Mandhara was dragged by her neck, her jewellery cracked up to bits, Kaikeyi rushed to rescue her and shouted at Shatrughna. But Shatrughna retaliated and she had to withdraw from his anger. Then Shatrughna addressed Bharata with extreme anger: avadhyāḥ sarvabhūtānāṁ pramadāḥ kṣamyatām iti/ hanyām aham imāṁ pāpāṁ kaikeyīm duṣṭacāriṇīm, yadi mām dhārmiko rāmo nāsūyen mātṛghātakam/ imām api hatām kubjāṁ yadi jānāti rāghavaḥ, tvām ca mām caiva dharmātmā nābhībhāṣisyate dhruvam/Pardon me! Women are not worthy of being killed by anybody. But for this fear of even Rama not excusing me for ‘stree hatya’, this nasty woman Mandhara is being spared! If Rama were to be aware of my indiscretion, he would never even speak to me. Then Bharata having seen this ugly scene, asked Shatrughna to leave Manthara to her own fate!

Precisely fourteen days subsequently, the Mantris and the senior officials of the Kingdom called on Bharata Kumara and stated that since King Dasharatha had passed away and Shri Rama had already left for vana vaasa, you are the King now and formally should take over as the mourning period had formally concluded as meanwhile all the required arrangements had since been ready for your Rajyabhisheka. Then Bharata made a parikrama of the Abhisheka Kalasha, and addressed the officials as follows: jyeṣṭhasya rājatā nityam ucitā hi kulasya naḥ, naivaṁ bhavanto mām vaktum arhanti kuśalā janāḥ/ rāmaḥ pūrvo hi no bhrātā bhaviṣyati mahīpatiḥ, ahaṁ tv araṇye vatsyāmi varṣāṇi nava pañca ca/ yuyjatām mahatī senā caturaṅgamahābalā, ānayaṣyāmy ahaṁ jyeṣṭhaṁ bhrātaraṁ rāghavaṁ vanāt/ Dear friends, you should not ask me to do so as Rama is the eldest of the family and in our vamsha, it has been our convention that the eldest son is only eligible for Kingship and that ought to be so. Therefore get ready with chaturanga sena so that my elder brother would return and assume the kingship. As the Mantris and senior officials who requested Bharata earlier were totally taken aback at Bharat's decisiveness to reject their proposal of his kingship; they stated: evaṁ te bhāṣamāṇasya padmā śrīr upatiṣṭhatām, yas tvam jyeṣṭhe nṛpasute pṛthivīm dātum icchasi/ Mahatma! By your decisiveness like this , may you be blessed again and again and may the lotus eyed Maha Vishnu along with Devi Lakshmi be with you ever, as you desire to decline the kingship as that actually rests with Shri Rama the truly eligible eldest son! Later on the Mantris made a public announcement to one and all of the most exhilarating news of Rama-Sita-Lakshmanas return to Ayodhya as Rama being the fullfledged King, soon! The Public was overcome with unparalleled joy at the divine-like determination of Bharata rejecting the erstwhile misdoing of Kaikeyi!

As the preparations of laying the Raja Marga through the forests along and upto the Sacred Ganges were in full swing as per Bharata's instructions, there at Ayodhya on a prescribed early morning, Bharata was woken up by the 'vandimagadhas' or the troupe of praising awakeners. Subsequently, the morning drums and instrumental musician groups alerted Bharata who had been crying away besides thinking all through the night. Then he flared up at the groups of drummers and musicians and shouted: I am not the King! and stopped the sounds forthwith. Then he addressed Shatrughna: 'See! What type of damage that Kaikeyi had done; Maha Raja Dasharatha was despatched to Swarga and immersed us in deep distress! Now thanks to King Dasharatha now Rajya Lakshmi is floating like a boat which way to go by! Yo hi nah smahaan naathah sopi pravraajito vane, anaya dharmamutrujya maatraa me Ragvah swayam/ That maha swami and dharmagjna being the universal protector Raghunadha had already been sent off by my own mother and despatched away dharma with 'tilaanjali' !' As Bharata said so, the Rani vaasa women broke out in sobbings aloud. At that juncture, Maharshi Vasishtha entered the sabha bhavana of the ex. King Dasharatha. He then instructed Bharata Shatrughna to please attend. Then the Ministers, Sena patis, Public Leaders gradually occupied their seats.

As Bharata graced the full Rajya Sabha like the post monsoon Sharad Ritu Purnima Chandra along with the sparkling Stars all around like vidwans, minsters, and the public figures of far reaching fame. Then Maharshi Vasistha addressed Bharata! ‘ Esteemed Bharata! Dharmagjna King Dasharatha has since left for heavens and Satyavaadi Shri Rama had left for forest life. Now on behalf all of us at this Grand Meet, may I request you to take over the reins of Kingdom. Once you agree, the huge fraternity of the co- Kings and the reputed businessmen from all over the globe are ready to dedicate their dhana-dhanya-vastu-vaahanas by way of their unanimity and great good will for you as the new King. Bharata then broke into tears in the open conference and in low voice addressed the Maharshi: ‘ Gurudeva! How could I a normal human like me steal away the Kingdom of the outstanding Shri Rama. He has the radiance of King Nahusha or King Dilip of this dazzling ancestry and of the just deceased Maharaja Dasharatha! anāryajusṭam asvargyam kuryām pāpam aham yadi, ikṣvākūṇām aham loke bhaveyam kulapāmsanaḥ/ It is only the mean and undeserving persons who could resort to such sinfulness who would most certainly reach the lowest kind of narakas. If I assume the kingship that rightfully belongs to Rama, would that be not a grave slur to the most reputed Ikshvaaku Vamsha! Yad dhi mātṛā kṛtam pāpam nāham tad abhirocaḥ, ihastho vanadurgastham namasyāmi kṛtāñjaliḥ/ As I have sincerely abhorred what my mother had planned and sinned grievously, I am hereby prostrating my elder brother Shri Rama living in deep forests from here itself. Rāmaṁ evānugacchāmi sa rājā dvipadām varah, trayāṇām api lokānām rāghavo rājyam arhati/ I ought to therefore follow Shri Rama alone and he is the assuredly unquestionable King of Ayodhya. In fact, he is worthy of administering three lokas!’ As Bharata replied likewise to what Vasishtha Maharshi proposed, the entire conference hall resounded with clappings and appreciative cryings with tears. Then Bharata further asserted: ‘ yadi tv āryam na śakṣyāmi vinivartayitum vanāt, vane tatraiva vatsyāmi yathāryo lakṣmaṇas tathā/ sarvopāyam tu vartiṣye vinivartayitum balāt, samakṣam ārya miśrāṇām sādḥūnām guṇavartinām/ In case I fail to have Rama returned back to Ayodhya, then I too should follow the example of Lakshmana and stay backalong with them all! I shall endeavour my utmost to return by using all my capabilities. I have already made elaborate preparations by way of making suitable road laying through the forests and crossing water bodies and rivers to facilitate Rama’s return and am strongly convinced of his approval for return to Ayodhya.’ Having thus concluding the Maha Sabha, he then addressed Sumantra to send his command to move the army. The entire audience in the Maha Sabha roared in raptures with applauses. As a ripple effect of the proceedings, the city of Ayodhya which had thus far crestfallen thus far and the public came alive. From each household, the woman folk egged on their husbands and the able bodied to join the procession along with the thousands of soldiers , apart from the workforce who had already positioned themselves. Then Bharata instructed Sumantra: tūṇa samutthāya sumantra gaccha; balasya yogāya balapradhānān, ānetum icchāmi hi taṁ vanastham; prasādyā rāmaṁ jagato hitāya/ Sumantra! Have you not already readied the Senapati to line up the army as we are about to launch the glorious fulfillment of our program of return with Shri Rama- Devi Sita-brother Lakshmana. Then the house holds Brahmana-Kshatriya-Vaishya and Lower classes of Ayodhya were pleasantly activated and got readied with unusual excitement and the anticipated fulfillment of their ambitions.

Bharata with unprecedented excitement for 'Shri Rama darshana' got readied in the morning on into an ideal chariot like that of Surya Ratha itself! The chariot was followed by a thousand elephants., six thousand chariots in which several 'dhanurdhara's too were present. Behind them were a lakh of horse men. Countless 'dwijas' of Brahmana-Kshatriya-Vaisya communities joining the procession. They were excited to the core as if they were all in 'Vrataanushthaana' or the supreme dedicated mindedness to meet and see for themselves Shri Rama Devi Sita Lakshmanas conversing in animated discussions especially Rama the Sthitaprajna-Samsara dukkha nivaraka- shyaama varna- aajaana bahu. They were all in trance like excitement embracing of camaraderie and solidarity. They are assuring mutually: Drishta eva hi naḥ shokamapanashyati Ragavah, tama sarvasya lokasy samudyinniva Bhaskarah// Just as Surya Deva at the 'ushahkaala' or early morning smashes darkness, the vision of Shri Rama should terminate the 'shoka-santaapa' or the agitated cryings of 'samsara'. The crowds in the procession were in multifarious body presentation- some wearing glittering clothes of variety with studded artificial semi and precious stones; some peacock wear dresses; some with besmeared sandal pastes, some with ivory made jewellery, some with bedspreads with variety of motifs, some with display of their skilled artistries of carpentry, metal works of copper, silver, gold, bronze and steel; some of the 'veda vettas' reciting stanzas on auspiciousness, safety, and good health and some displaying varieties of group dances, or 'vaadya brindaas' and so on. Prahṛṣṭamuditā senā sāvayāt kaikayīsutam, vyavatiṣṭhata sā senā bharatasyānuyāyini/ The entire army

Nishada King Guha, then described about the outstanding qualities of Lakshmana to Bharata. As Shri Rama was resting for a night sleep, Lakshmana was in the habit of addressing Shri Rama while desirous having the night sleep, then Lakshmana would say: Raghunandana! I have prepared a comfortable bed for you and you may please rest well. Guha said that he and Lakshmana were talking and exchanging views almost through the small hours of the morning. Na hi rāmāt priyataro mamāsti bhuvi kaś cana, motsuko bhūr bravīmy etad apy asatyam̐ tavāgrataḥ/ asya prasādād āśam̐se loke 'smin̐ sumahad yaśaḥ, dharmāvāptim̐ ca vipulām̐ arthāvāptim̐ ca kevalām̐/ Lakshmana assured Guha that there was none like Rama on the face of earth and that he would provide raksha all through the night! Thanks to Rama, I could certainly beget dharma laabha, great fame, and luxuries of life; but there could be no other like ambition of mine right now to keep my arrows in readiness and ensure safety to Sita Ramas through out the night. Lakshmana further used to state Guha that there could never be a secret unknown to him in the forest, and even an attack by ‘chaturana sena’ even could be faced instantaneously!’ Thus the Nishada informed about Lakshmana’s dedication to Rama, Bharata addressed Guha: ‘Nishada Raja! Indeed it is so as Lakshmana would be not able to neglect his duty any way. Moreover, Lakshmana is capable to handle singlehandedly even when sura-asuras combine in a mutual battle with him; that is how, Sita Ramas are sleeping without any problem at all!’ Having thus affirmed the complementary heroism of Rama Lakshmanas, Bharata then realised another context of Rani vaasa strees in Ayodhya too should be now peaceful as all along the unfortunate developments of Ayodhya swept them off their feet so far! Guha then continued his narration to Bharata about what Lakshmana felt when the latter told Guha: ‘Maha Ranis Kousalya, King Dasharatha and my mother Sumitra might or might not survive till now. My mother might survive perhaps due to the hope of Shatrughna who had left along with Bharata, but since Rama had left away, Devi Kousalya’s life could be risky! As far as King Dasharatha would be concerned, it appears certain that since Rama had left, he might not survive the shock’. Then Lakshmana could not further control his emotions and broke down: api satyapratijñena sārddham kuśalinā vayam, nivṛtte samaye hy asmin sukhitāḥ praviśemahi/ ‘Can we three after the termination of the fourteen vana vaasa return back to Ayodhya!’ Thus Guha conveyed what all Lakshmana expressed keeping awake through out the night. He then concluded his recall to Bharata that at the next early morning Rama Sita Lakshmanas proceeded further looking somewhat lost in thoughts into the forest even as were dressed with ‘mriga charma’ dresses.

On hearing details of Rama Sita Lakshmanas, Bharata swooned down, Shatrugna and the mothers cried away, and persisted on the details of the threesome regarding their food and sleeping patterns.

Having heard the narration of what Nishada King and the latter’s reactions expressed by Lakshmana before proceeding to dandakaranya, Bharata was shaken off his senses and had a vague feeling whether Rama would or would not agree to return to Ayodhya now! Bharata then lost his balance of mind and swooned down as though a huge tree was uprooted by an earth quake! Shatrughna was nearby and broke down. The mothers Kausalya-Sumitra-and Kaikeyi too surrounded and since they were on fast, they too were looking pale and helpless. As a mother cow caresses her calf in a similar situation, Devi Kousalya drew the sons on her lap and wept stating: ‘putravyādhir na te kaccic charīraṁ paribādhate, asya rājakulasyāsyadya tvavadheenam hi jeevitam/Twaam drushtvaa putra jeevaami Raame sabhraatruke gate, vritte Dasharathe raagjni naatha ekas tvam adya nah/ Dear son Bharata!! Have you been affected by a body injury or mental shock that you are in this state! Now you are the single hope for this vamsha. I am surviving only due to you as my shelter Rama Lakshmanas had already gone away and King Dasharatha had left me too anyway.’ Then as Devi Kaushalya was feeling distressed, Bharata gradually recovered slowly and addressed Kousalya that he had since recovered. Then he addressed Guha to explain vividly as to where Rama Sitas, where was Lakshmana then, whether or what did they eat and sleep! Guha replied that his followers brought plentiful food which they were satisfied with. But when Guha offered several gifts, he had politely declined stating that Kshatriyas in general and Kings in particular would never accept gifts to others and should only offer. In the following night, Rama and Sita were on fast while Lakshmana accepted water only. Then Lakshmana himself made a comfortable bed for Rama Sitas and kept a vigil through out the night except the small hours of the day break. niyamyā pṛṣṭhe tu talāṅgulitravāñ; śaraiḥ supūrṇāv iṣudhī paramatapah, mahad dhanuḥ sajam upohya lakṣmaṇo; niśām atiṣṭhat parito ‘sya kevalam/ tatas tv ahaṁ cottamabāṇacāpadhṛk; sthito ‘bhavaṁ tatra sa yatra lakṣmaṇaḥ, atandribhir jñātibhir āttakārmukair; mahendrakalpaṁ paripālayaṁs tadā/ Lakshmana then lifted his arrows drawn carryin on his back the arrows retainer on his back and by walking up and around the place of Rama Sita’s resing bed, kept awake like Lord Indra being protected by various Devas.

Guha showed the bed of ‘kusha grass’ by which Sita Ramas slept on that night and the ‘valkala vastras’ left behind.

Having said so, Bharata had suddenly shouted with grief: Haa hatosmi nrishamshosmi yat sabharyah krite mama, eedrisheem raghavah shayyaamadhishetaa hyaanaathavat/ Haa! I am as good as dead, and my life is useless. I am so cruel and malicious as I am responsible of this mess; my life is a curse, as am squarely responsible of this treachery and betrayal! At the Shringaverapura on the banks of the Sacred Ganga, the morning next Bharata woke up and addressed Shatrughna and asked him to ask Nishada King Guha soon to cross the river by his boat. Shatrughna replied that he too was not asleep like Bharata through the night thinking of Rama on the lines of Bharata. Meanwhile, Nishada Raja arrived and with folded hands and enquired whether their stay over night was satisfactory enough. Bharata thanked Guha profusely and requested him to arrange the sacred Ganga as soon as possible. Then Guha alerted his boatmen and got five hundred boats in position to ferry the army men too. Besides a special house boat named 'Swastika' too was arranged with well decorated carpets and soft cushions to lean back; this was able to navigate Purohitas, Gurus, Brahmana Panditas, Bharata Shatrughnas, Devis Kousalya- Sumitra- Kaikeyis, and select Raja Parivaara, and chosen women too. As the massive number of boats were flooded with soldiers there were inevitable sky high shouts, noises and confusion. Some of the boats were exclusively meant for women only. Likewise, they were earmarked for horses, cattle, donkeys and oxen. The sturdy boatmen raced up and soon enough reached the other banks. The public and the heavy influx of soldiers were asked to rest in the Prayaga vana. Then Bharata Shatrughnas along with select Deva Purohitas and Veda Brahmanas proceeded to the ashram of Maharshi Bharadvaja.

Bharata having retained back the visitors from Ayodhya some good distance, approached the ashram of Maha Muni Bharadwaaja. He discarded his astra-shastras and royal robes but wearing only the silk clothes and keeping Maharshi Vasishtha the Purohita and senior disciples ahead and proceeded along with the ministers. As he entered the ashram, he had the 'darshan' of Bharadwaaja. As Maharshi Vasishtha was in the lead, Bharadwaaja welcomed him and asked his sishtyas to fetch 'arghya' to him and the followers. As Bharata touched the Maha Munis feet, instantly he recognised Bharata as the son of King Dasharatha. Bharadwaaja was well aware of King Dasharatha's death and hence he did not mention of the same. Vasishtha enquired of Muni Bharadvaja of his welfare, agnihotraadi shubha kaaryas, about his disciples, and so on. Then the Muni asked Bharata: 'kim ihāgamane kāryam tava rājyam praśāsataḥ, etad ācakṣva me sarvaṁ na hi me śudhyate manah/ suṣuve yama mitraghnam kausalyānandavardhanam, bhrātrā saha sabhāryo yaś ciram pravrajito vanam/ niyuktaḥ strīniyuktena pitrā yo 'sau mahāyaśāḥ, vanavāsī bhavetīha samāḥ kila caturdaśa/ Are you not the King of Ayodhya now! What has brought you here! I am not able to believe this! I am aware that your father instructed Shri Rama the symbol of dharma and glory was banished for Vana Vaasa for fourteen years due to the ill justified advice of one of his wives and accordingly Rama's his wife and brother too accompanied him. Indeed this was most improper and blameworthy!' As Bharadwaaja admonished Bharata, the latter started crying away and replied the Maha Muni in the most pathetic and low tone as follows: hato 'smi yadi mām evam bhagavān api manyate, matto na doṣam āśaṅker naivam mām anuśādhi hi/ na caitad iṣṭam mātā me yad avocan madantare, nāham etena tuṣṭaś ca na tad vacanam ādade/ Mahatma! It is most unfortunate that You as a Maha Muni too has a feeling against me and my traditional values of 'dharma'. May I assure you as I have no role or even the remote inkling of Rama's vana vaasa and very kindly do not ever reiterate that hard hit on my psyche! What ever had been viciously planned and executed by my evil mother was indeed my fate for which I regret most and am prepared to reverse the misdeed on myself! aham tu tam naravyāghram upayātaḥ prasādakaḥ, pratinetum ayodhyām ca pādau tasyābhivanditum/ tvam mām evam gataḥ matvā prasādam kartum arhasi, śaṁsa me bhagavan rāmaḥ kva saṁprati mahīpatiḥ/ I have essentially come here only to prostrate and plead Shri Rama to kindly return to Ayodhya and take over the kingship. Bhagavan! I should most humbly request you to let me know as to the whereabouts of Shri Rama!’ Subsequently, Maharshi Vasishtha and other Maha Munis too commended the sincerity of Bharata Kumara. Then Bharadwaaja Maha Muni addressed Bharata: ‘ I am indeed aware that you are the progeny of Raghu Vamsha and the traits of Gurujana seva, self control, dharmika chintana, are transparent in you! Yet, jāne caitan manahstham te dr̥dhīkaraṇam astv iti, apr̥ccham tvām tavātyartham kīrtim samabhivardhayan/ Purusha simha Bharata! I am totally aware of your pure heartedness and your strong desire to request Shri Rama to return, but I had actually wished your desisiveness to get further sharper and more effective and hence my erstwhile reprimand to you. May you be blessed to have your wish fulfilled. Jaanaena Ramam dharmagjnam sa Seetam saha Lakshmanam, ayam vasati te bhraataa Chitrakute Maha giro/ I am indeed aware of the where abouts of Rama Sita Lakshmanas; they are comfortably settled at Chitrakoota Mountain.’ Having thus informed Bharata, Maha Muni Bharadwaaja instructed Bharata to rest at the ashram along the Maharshi Vasishtha and others besides his ministers over night and move forward the next morning.

As Bharata expressed his doubt whether the Muni Ashram was equipped enough to provide hospitality overnight including food and night long rest, Maha Muni Bharadwaja smiled and said as to why did he not bring the entire Sena also! Bharata replied that the 'sena' was huge and had been equipped with elephants, horses, oxen, cows and so on too. At the express instruction of the Maha Muni, Bharata had somewhat hesitantly gave a command to let the army too to arrive at the 'ashram'. Then Bharadwaja entered the ‘Agni shaala’ or the Fire Abode of the ashram and invoked Vishvakarma and the related devatas. Further, he invoked Indraadi Lokapalakas including Yama-Varuna-Kubera and prayed to them to arrange for the hospitality of Bharata along with his army and public. He then invoked Prithvi, Aakaasha, Rivers flowing westward so as to sweet and cold waters. Maha Muni further invoked Vishvaivasu, Haahaa-Hoohu Deva-Gandharvas, Apsaras like Ghritachi-Vishvaachi- Mishrakeshi-Alambusha Nagadatta-Hema- Soma-Adrikritasthali-Indra sabha’s devanganas- Tumbura-Nritya Geeta ukta vanitas- and so on. Maha Muni further invoked Chaitra Ratha Gardens of north placed Kuruvvarsha with divine robed women supplying clothing, sweet fruits, ornaments, and bhakshya-bhojya- lehya - chokshya-paaneeyas besides enormous supply of celestial scented flowers. Maha Muni further invoked being seated eastward with extreme concentration invoked one by one of mountains named Malaya-Durdura and so on to forward cool and fragrant winds- the celestial clouds to shower scented flowers and distant lightnings and thunder sounds. Vayu Deva was invoked to provide visions of Apsara nrityaas, and experiences of sweet ‘Deva Gandharva Gaana’. As a result, the nearby earth of five yojanas of rectangle got soft, even and squatable with comfort. All around that even land had sprung up tall and solid trees like Bilva-Kapittha-Panasa- Beejapooraa-Aamakaka/ mango-with ripe fruits and colourful scented flowers/ preṣyāś ceṭyaś ca vadhvaś ca balasthāś cāpi sarvaśaḥ, babhūvus te bhṛśam tṛptāḥ sarve cāhatavāsasaḥ/ Thus as per the instruction of the Maha Muni, Bharata entered a huge hall with decorated walls with golden pillars, as followed by Purohitas, Veda Brahmanas, Ministers, Senapatis, and others. āsanam pūjayām āsa rāmāyābhipraṇamya ca, vālavayajanam ādāya nyaśīdat sacivāsane/ On being directed to a special throne, Bharata then visualised Shri Rama was worthy of occupying it and greeted it in the name of Rama, perambulated it with veneration as followed by the ministers and then occupied the same. Thereafter, Vasishta Maharshi and co- purohitas, Ministers, Senapati and others took to their seats as per protocol. Thereafter, celestial dancers and singers including apsaras, Narada Tumburaadi Gandharvas rendered their respective fine arts. The thousands of Ayodhya soldiers who were in raptures shouting with the surfeit of entertainment of wine, dance, music asserted: naivāyodhyām gamiṣyāmo na gamiṣyāma daṇḍakān, kuśalam bhāratasyāstu rāmasyāstu tathā sukham/ iti pādātayodhāś ca hastyaśvārohabandhakāḥ, anāthāś tam vidhiṁ labdhvā vācam etām udairayan/ We would not like to return to Ayodhya nor further to ‘dandakaranya’ as we are blissful here at this ‘bhutalala swarga’. Long live Bharata and long live Shri Rama! tato bhuktavatām teṣām tad annam amṛtopamam, divyān udvīkṣya bhakṣyāms tām abhavad bhakṣaṇe matiḥ/ preṣyāś ceṭyaś ca vadhvaś ca balasthāś cāpi sarvaśaḥ, babhūvus te bhṛśam tṛptāḥ sarve cāhatavāsasaḥ/ They further declared that the heavenly food in variety and taste was so fantastic that despite their bellies were saturated would still like to eat again and again! Servants and servant maids, soldiers and their wives were all glittering with a fantastic range of dresses and jewellery. nāśuklavāsās tatrāsīt kṣudhito malino ’pi vā, rajasā dhvastakeśo vā naraḥ kaś cid adṛśyata/ Man-woman-Child, be it a soldier or family, a pandita or an official or a servant and maid were all dressed in purity, with stomachs saturated, their hairstyles trimmed and clean; the picturesque surroundings were truly celestial. vyasmayanta manuṣyās te svapnakalpaṁ tad adbhutam, dṛṣṭvātithyaṁ kṛtaṁ tādṛg bhāratasya maharṣiṇā/ ity evaṁ ramamāṇānām devānām iva nandane, bhāradvājāśrame ramye sā rātrir vyatyavartata/ The heavenly hospitality thus extended by Maha Muni Bhṛadvaja was like an unimaginable experience of a dream par excellence! The ashram seemed to be a replica of swarga and one and all from Bharata-to- any being who accompanied him was a celestial dream come true in one’s own lifetime!

Next morning when Bharata decided to take leave of Maha Muni Bharadwaja, he expressed his heartfelt gratitude stating: sukhoṣito 'smi bhagavan samagrabalavāhanaḥ, tarpitaḥ sarvakāmaś ca sāmātyo balavat tvayā/ Mahatma! We all including the entire army, the retenue, and even the animals brought by us have been thoroughly contented. Now, we beseech you to very kindly inform as to how to reach Shri Rama ashrama, how much of distance and time involved! Bharadwaja replied that the distance should be approximately two and half yojanas - [see Sarga 54 above] and the place is named Chitrakoota Mountain; (as per today's reckoning the distance from Prayaga to Chitrakoota is approx.80 miles). The north of Chitrakoota flows River Mandakini and the intervening place is full of Beauty of Nature with plentiful flowers, fruits and of outstanding tranquility. The mid part of the river and the mountain is Shri Rama Ashrama situated in which the three famed personalities of Rama-Sita-Lakshmanas stay with peace. Then Bhardwaja Muni asked the Senapati to foremost follow the southern path along River Yamuna and should be able to reach Chitrakoota for Shri Rama darshana! As the entourage moved on slowly, the men and woman folk initiated their movement, Devi Koushalya was tired due to fastings and disturbed sleep pattern and was shivering as assisted by Devi Sumitra and touched the feet of Bharadwaja. Then Devi

Kaikeyi too performed a ‘pradakshina’ and stood besides Bharata. Maha Muni then enquired about the Devis and Bharata replied: ‘Bhagavan! That Maha Devi Kousalya who was looking blank, sorrowful and weak due to fastings is still mourning the death of King Dashratha and is the Prime Queen of Ayodhya. Eshaam tam purushavyaaghrām simhavikraanta gaaminam, Kousalyaa sushuve Raamam dhaataara-maditiriyathaa/ Just as Aditi gave birth to ‘dwaadasha adityas’ like Dhata, Kousalya Devi gave birth to Parakrama Purushasimha Shri Rama.

[Vishleshana on Dwadasha Adityas: Surya / Aditya Deva assumes twelve other Murti / Forms viz. Indra, Dhata, Parjanya, Pusha, Twashta, Aryama, Bhaga, Vivishwan, Amshu, Vishnu, Varuna and Mitra. Among these twelve Murthis, Indra was Chief of Devas ruling Amaravati and destroying Daityas and Danavas from time to time. Dhata being in the Status of Prajapati took up the task of Creation; Parjanya in the Form of Sun rays rained all over the Universe; Pusha is in the form of Mantras engaged for Prajaaposhana; Twashta is present in the form of ‘Vanaspati’ and ‘Aushadhi’ (Vegetable Oils and Herbal Medicines); Aryama who provides protection and relief to humanity; Bhaga is in the form of Earth and Mountains; Vivishwan in the form of Agni / Fire and is the cooking facilitator of food as also of the destroying power; the ninth name of Surya Deva is Amshu or of the form of Chandra Deva who provides coolness and pleasure of existence; Vishnu is the tenth name of Surya who constantly checks the evil forces in the World and slays Danavaas and establishes virtue from time to time by assuming Incarnations; Varuna is the eleventh appearance present in water as the source of life and fertility staying in Oceans, Rivers and various water profiles; and finally, Mitra or form of propitiousness and help to humanity. In whatever form he might be, Surya Deva is indeed the ‘Karanam, Kaaranam and Karta’ or the Act, Action and the Supreme Actor in the drama of Life! Bhakti (Devotion), Shraddha (fortitude) and Puja (Worship) sum up the meanings of human life!Indeed Shri Rama is the composite Swarupa of Dwadasha Aadityas!]

Standing next to Devi Kousalya is Sumitra Devi who too looks pale, sorrowful and jewellery discarded the mother of Lakshmana Shatrughnas. Then is Devi Kaikeyi: yasyāḥ kṛte narayāghrau jīvanāśam ito gatau, rājā putravihīnaś ca svargaṁ daśaratho gataḥ/ aiśvaryakāmām kaikeyīm anāryām āryarūpiṇīm, mamaitām mātaram viddhi nṛśamsām pāpaniścayām, yatomūlam hi paśyāmi vyasanam mahad ātmanah/ And then you Maha Muni! You see Kaikeyi Devi owing to whom Purusha Simha Shri Rama-Devi Sita-and Lakshmana had to undergo the frightful and fourteen long ‘vana vaasa’ and the killer of Maha Raja Dashratha; she indeed is the symbol of cruelty, devilish, thoughtless, arrogant, selfish and schemy and suffers from inferiority complex of being bodily beautiful. I am indeed ashamed of calling her as my mother !’ Having said that Bharata broke down with unstoppable cryings yet like hissings of a raised cobra. Then, Maha Muni Bharadwaaja stated: na doṣeṇāvagantavyā kaikeyī bharata tvayā, rāmapravṛjā -nam hy etat sukhodarkam bhaviṣyati/ abhivādya tu samsiddhaḥ kṛtvā cainam pradakṣiṇam, āmantrya bharataḥ sanyam yujyatām ity acodayat/ Bharata! Please do not see Devi Kaikeyi- your own mother- in this manner. Shri Rama’s ‘vana vaasa’ would pass off peacefully. What is more significant is what Devatas- Danavas-and Maharshis who are always anchored to Parameshwara do strongly feel that these vicissitudes are for ‘Loka Kalyana’ in the near future! As the Maha Muni visualized the auguries of the auspicious future, he gave a warm send off to the highly motivated Bharata and his entourage.

As Bharata headed the Maha Sena with pomp and glory, on the arduous route one would vision a wide range of deers, semi- cruel animals, boars, and monkeys. The vast army of Bharata was akin to clouded sky of rainy season spread out a very long distance. The elephants, horses, chariots were lined up long. Considerable distance later, Bharata addressed Maharshi Vasishtha that it would appear as though the tops of Chitrakuta Mountain range were visible along side the River Mandakini. Then Bharata addressed Shatrughna: have you noticed that from the elevated range of mountains, one could see the long lines of horses there beneath and the dust raised by them was truly alarming. Dear brother! These surroundings are truly exhilarating to me as being picturesque just like the way ahead of swarga!' Totally awestruck then he passed down the instructions to the authorities of the army to get vigilant saying: sādhu sainyāḥ pratiṣṭhantām vicinvantu ca kānanam, yathā tau puruṣavyāghrau dṛśyete rāmalakṣmaṇau/Let my army move ahead and make all out efforts to some how locate the Ashram of Rama-Sita- Lakshmanas. bharatasya vacaḥ śrutvā puruṣāḥ śastrapāṇayaḥ, viviśus tad vanam śūrā dhūmaṁ ca dadṛśus tataḥ/ te samālokya dhūmāgram ūcur bharatam āgatāḥ, nāmanuṣye bhavaty agnir vyaktam atraiva rāghavau/ On receiving Bharata's instructions, some of the very courageous and core group of soldiers got spread out themselves in various directions with long swords and 'trishuulas' by their mighty hands. After long search by the dedicated men one of them discovered smoke on the sky; they realised that when human beings were not there then there would not be a smoke and when smoke would be visible there ought be fire and as fire were there there could be Rama Sita Lakshmanas. Otherwise a 'maha tapasvi' is possibly present. yat tā bhavantas tiṣṭhantu neto gantavyam agrataḥ, aham eva gamiṣyāmi sumantro gurur eva ca/ In any case, be attentive and wait but do not rush in as I would go in slowly towards that specific place from where the smoke emerges. vyavasthitā yā bharatena sā camūr; nirīkṣamāṇāpi ca dhūmam agrataḥ, babhūva hr̥ṣṭā nacireṇa jānatī; priyasya rāmasya samāgamaṁ tadā/ The entire army and the entourage stood still praying , holding their breath and hoping against hope that the time has arrived for the darshan of Shri Rama!

Shri Rama has had considerable fascination and charming attraction for settling at Chitrakoota mountain. That indeed had been his life ambition thus fulfilled! He asked Devi Sita, like Indra would to his wife Shachi Devi , to move and wander freely all over the sprawling mountain places and get thrills of joy! He confided in Sita Devi stating : na rājyād bhraṁśanaṁ bhadre na suhṛdbhir vinābhavaḥ, mano me bādhat dṛṣtvā ramaṇīyam imaṁ girim/ I have been pushed out from the Kingdom and parted my relatives and close friends, but all the same, I am truly rejoicing here at the mountain top and have ceased feeling the abandonment and a sense of dejection. Devi! look at this memorable mountain life as birds of countless colour combinations are flying right before you; look at the sky scraping mountain tops replete with unimaginable 'dhaatus' or mineral resources, as though they are kissing the high skies! All such 'dhaatus' are sparkling like silver moulds or like metal balls in varied colours of crystal white or yellow. Besides these, Devi! do you not vision the glitter and twinkles of the 'nakshatra mandalis' spread all over the length and breadth of the blue skies! Some of the Stars are like diamonds or pearls, or sapphires, or corals, or rubies, or gomedha or vaiduryas! The variety of birds and animals is unimaginable ranging from sparrows or vultures to animals like antelopes to huge sized lions and tigers. So is the splendour of fresh flowers of hues of violet-blue- red- orange-indigo or just plain white or of varied permutations and combinations. Now, the surprising range of trees: Neem, Fig, Saal, Banyan, Coconut, Deodhar, Chinara, Sandalwood, Mango, Teak, Iron wood , Rosewood, Khejri, Palmeera, Jammi, Agar, Ashoka, Jakranda, Bael and finally the blessed Ashvattha. Devi Sita! śailaprasatheṣu ramyeṣu paśyemān kāmahaṣaṇān, kinnarān dvamdvaśo bhadre ramamāṇān manasvinaḥ/ śākhāvasaktān khaḍgāś ca pravarāṇy ambarāṇi

The gushing streams of water down the mountain minarets to earth are simply amazing! The mountain caves are like human noses inhaling and exhaling the scented and fresh airs of Nature. Anena vanavāśena mayā prāptam phaladvayam, pituś cāṇṛṇatā dharme bharatasya priyam tathā/ Beloved Sita! Having exited from the mountain, Shri Rama then climbed down and desired to show Devi Sita about the Sacred River of Mandakini. Devi Sita! Now look at the beauty and glory of this river with groups swans floating and the greenery and trees on the banks looking like Kubera’s scented Sarovara! As herds of deers got down into the banks and enjoy the drinking of the sweet water flows, one should a feeling of sensation and thrill. Further, groups of hermits clad in deer skins and with their shoulder hangings remove their apparel and with koupeena coverings get into the waters for bathing and perform oblations to Surya Deva. Devi, let us also bathe in these holy waters! Just as you along with your female friends tend to chase the red lotuses on the banks with gay abandon while drowning, swimming, and lying flat on the flows and so on, let us do so similarly! tvaṁ pauraṇavadvā vyālān ayodhyām iva parvatam, manyasva vanite nityam sarayūvad imām nadīm/ Do imagine that you are swimming and frolicking like the local residents here or in the famed ponds of Ayodhya feeling comfortable and homely. lakṣmaṇaś caiva dharmātmā mannideśe vyavasthitaḥ, tvaṁ cānukūlā vaidehi prītiṁ janayatho mama/ Videha nandini! Thus enjoying life thoroughly, Shri Rama has had the memorable visit of Mandakini with Sita and Lakshmanas!

As Shri Rama in one of his romantic moods offering a sweet fruit to share with Devi Sita as seated on the Chitrakoolta mountain, he saw the dust raised and approaching noises of crowds and the screamings of elephants and horses. He asked Lakshmana to ascertain what was the high pitched sounds about! Are they attacks of wild and cruel animals or what! Lakshmana had at once climbed up a tall tree top and found a huge army with elephants, horses and chariots. Lakshmana immediately asked Rama whether to put off the fire, erect his dhanush and arrows ready and alert Devi Sita who was seated resting. He further opined: sampannam rājyam icchāṁs tu vyaktaṁ prāpyābhiṣecanam, āvāṁ hantum samabhyeti kaikeyā bharataḥ sutaḥ/ Dear brother! I suspect and in fact assert that this should be the army of Bharata and as had by now assumed the kingship could be approaching us to get rid all of us. As Lakshmana was fuming against Bharata even threatening him to Bharata, Shri Rama sought to pacify and cool Lakshmana. Rama said that the very fact of searching for us arrived here all the way denotes that we would have to need to draw our 'dhanush baanaas' out and get ready for a fight. Lakshmana! If I had arrived here to respect the father's word of honour, does it make sense that we should kill Bharata and seize the Kingship! The whole world would then disrespect us, is it not so! Then of what avail would be my kingship out of shamelessness! Yadya dravyam baandhavaanaam vaa mitraanaam vaa kshaye bhavet, naaham tat pratigruheenaam bhakshyaan vishakritaaniva/ In case one earns prosperity by killing relatives or friends, that food is considered by me as poison. Lakshmana! I am hereby swearing that even the Universal Emperorship is disgusting for me which is not in accordance of the noble human's aspirations of Dharma-Artha-Kama-Mokshas. Sumitra Kumara! I would swear by my 'dhanush' that for the sake of Bharata's happiness is far more significant for me than the kingdom. Let me assure you that the whole earth as surrounded by the sapta samudras is not out of my reach, but by viciously accomplishing Swarga Puri of Indra too is unacceptable to me. Whatever is opted for or liked by Bharata Shatrughnas is dear to me and the rest be thrown into open fire to turn into ash! Lakshmana! Be it known that Bharata is a 'bhatru bhakta' or intensely attached and devoted to his brothers. He considers me as his very 'praana' and getting the sudden news on his return from his maternal grandfather's place that we had left for the arduous 'vana vaasa' wearing 'jataa valkalas', he having followed the 'kula dharma' of temporary kingship, took the earliest opportunity to meet us. prāptakālam yad eṣo 'smān bharato draṣṭum icchati, asmāsu manasāpy eṣa nāhitam kiṁ cid ācaret/ Bharata's arrival here and meet us is in perfect order and justified. After all, in which manner he ever had hurt you that your thinking pattern should get so disturbing! Beware, Lakshmana! You should never even utter a hard word or display any kind of resentment and that would be as bad as your hurting me. Do you not realise the magnitude of killing one's own brother or father figure! In case he would offer the Kingdom to me, should I recommend your name! Suppose I suggest so, would you accept the offer! tathokto dharmasīlenā bhrātrā tasya hite rataḥ, lakṣmaṇaḥ praviveśeva svāni gātrāṇi lajjayā/ vrīḍitam lakṣmaṇam dṛṣtvā rāghavaḥ pratyuvāca ha, eṣa manye mahābāhur ihāsmān draṣṭum āgataḥ/ Lakshmana has then realised his folly, rashness out of immaturity and the misbehavior that was caused and stood besides Rama with his head down in shame and said: I am ashamed of myself brother! I could as well imagine as though in a similar situation, even my father too might have visited us likewise! I am sure that Bharata is visiting us and might return after pleading with you to return! Then Rama instructed Lakshmana to get down from the tall tree. Meanwhile, Bharata instructed that there ought not be any problem created by the huge sena as they were approaching and thus halted the vast 'sena' some three yojanas away.

Thus having kept away the sena and the entourage at a distance, Bharata decided to spot the specific place of Shri Rama's place of stay and addressed brother Shatrughna to locate by intensive search in all the directions with the help of a handful of soldiers. Nishad Raja Guha too with his dhanush-baanaas and sword initiated the search. Bharata decided that he himself would initiate the search along with the Ministers, renowned citizens of Ayodhya, Guru Brahmanas and so on. He declared: yāvan na rāmam drakṣyāmi lakṣmaṇam vā mahābalam, vaidehīm vā mahābhāgām na me śāntir bhaviṣyati/ I cannot get balance of mind till I could locate Shri Ramas-Maha Bali Lakshmana-and Maha bhaaga Videha Rajakumari Devi Sita. Just as Lord Kubera is adorned in 'Nandana Vana', this 'Kakustha Kula Bhushana' Shri Rama is blessing this Chitrakoota Mangala Giri which is akin to Himalaya Giri or Venkataachala. With extraordinary excitement and thrill, Bharata shouted at Shatrughna and identified the direction of the Ashram. He then alerted Guru Vasishtha and the mothers and as accompanied by them proceeded to the spot. He then he located a 'parna kuti' made of tree trunk wood pieces covered by dried tree leaves and a hut to enable 'homaagni' and nitya pujas by flowers. The entrance of the ashram land was laid by a pathway leading to-and-fro the main ashram as indicated by trees planted by Lakshmana. To keep the living rooms of ashram cool, heaps of 'the gobar' of cattle and deer were arranged around. Then Bharata stated that what Bharadwaja Maha Muni had described in detail was visible then and the Sacred Ricer Mandakini would not be far from this ashram. Then suddenly Bharata bursted out with anguish: jagatyām puruṣavyāghra āste vīrāsane rataḥ, janendro nirjanaṁ prāpya dhin me janma sajīvitam/ matkṛte vyasanam prāpto lokanātho mahādyutiḥ, sarān kāmān parityajya vane vasati rāghavaḥ/ iti lokasamā - kruṣṭaḥ pādeṣv adya prasādayan, rāmasya nipatiṣyāmi sītāyāś ca punaḥ punaḥ/ Aho! I am shamed by the public and the world and my life is worthless and aimless. I have to instantly fall at the glorious feet of Shri Rama and those of Maha Pativrata Devi Sita and the ever blessed Lakshmana to possibly pardon me and my ill fated life!' Then the over agitated and anguished Bharata led the way to the Yagjna shaala covered with the dried leaves of Shaala-Taala-Ashvakarna tree leaves and spotted the sizeable Yagjna Vedika. In the 'parna shaala' itself, were arranged 'dhunush baanas', long swords covered in golden sheaths, and tiger and deerskins hung on the walls. nirīkṣya sa muhūrtaṁ tu dadarśa bharato gurum, utaje rāmam āsīnām jaṭāmaṇḍaladhāriṇam/ taṁ tu kṛṣṇājīnadharam cīravalakalavāsasam, dadarśa rāmam āsīnam abhitaḥ pāvakopamam/ śimhaskandham mahābāhum puṇḍarīkanibhekaṣaṇam, pṛthivyāḥ sagarāntāyā bhartāram dharmacāriṇam/ upaviṣṭam mahābāhum brahmānam iva śāśvatam, sṭhaṇḍile darbhāsmṭirṇe sītayā lakṣmaṇena ca/ Then in the 'Kuteera', Bharata saw Shri Rama with 'jataamandala' on his head and dressed in 'krishna mriga charma and valkala' seated on 'kusha grass' by the side of 'homaagni' vedika like Brahma himself. His shoulders were high like those of a lion with broad chest and strong hands and his sparkling eyes were like the fully opened up lotuses. He could not but run up to him with excitement and mixed feelings of intense anguish and remorse. Along with him were seated Devi Sita and Lakshmana too similarly wearing 'mriga charma' attires! Mannimittam idam duḥkham prāpto rāmaḥ sukhocitaḥ, dhig jīvitam nṛśaṁsasya mama lokavigarhitam/ Alas! How disgraceful am I to have placed that supreme devata in human form in this situation because of my misfortune as I am disgraced with wide spread 'loka ninda' and public shame.' Bharata thus collapsed down with extreme distress and fell at Rama's feet, as he could utter hardly two words: 'Arya! Ha Arya'! Shatrughna too likewise cried relentlessly and fell at Rama's feet. Then Shri Rama hugged both Bharata Shatrughnas as a gesture of kindness even as they were crying away relentlessly. Later on Rama and Lakshmana met Sumantra and Nishada Raja and as they moved forward there were implicit cryings of joy and relief by the forest trees and animals as well.

It is a very long time that I am seeing you as you might have returned from your uncle's kingdom, but you seem to have become thinned and weak. Why have you reached here! Hope dear father is alive and why are you crying away. Bharata you are still a lad and hope you are taking care of father properly! Hope, Dharmanishthaapara Maha Raja Dasharatha who had successfully performed Rajasuya and Ashwamedha yajnas is in good health. Trust you are constantly engaged in pujas to Ikshvakukula Acharya Maharshi Vasishta properly! Hope my mother Devi Kousalya is in good health. I hope you are ever respectful to the Purohita of the famed Ayodhya Kingdom! He is ever engaged in agnihotra karyas as per prescribed timings each day. Trust you are ever respectful to Deva-Pitru-bhrutya-gurujana-pita samana vriddha jana-vaidya-brahmanas. Hope you esteem and admire the teacher of Arthashastra- Raja neeti Visharada Acharya Sudhanva who knows the minute details of 'mantra rahita' and 'mantra yukta' dhanur vidya. I believe you must have appointed a Mantri who is a shura veera-shastragjna-jitendriya and of excellent family background who could sense the body movements as per one's inner thoughts Mantra vijayamulam hi rajnam bhavati rāghava, samavṛto mantradharair amātyaiḥ śāstrakovidaiḥ/Raghu nandana! Excellent ministerial support is the key to success of 'Rajyaanga' of Kingship. The back up good Ruler is indeed the neeti shastra nipuna- mantri amaatyas needed to be kept unknown to the public. Bharata! Hope you are not tired and feeling sleepy; tell me you are normally active with proper sleep in the nights! When ever spies convey the type of news which disturbs the mind, you ought to keep it to digest within as once you convey to one, it gets spread to dozens and eventually to the enemies. Bharata! When a particular task is easy to perform and has far reaching results, then procrastination becomes the thief and delay dilutes the end result. Hence never delay the essential tasks of importance. More over: kaccit sahasrān mūrkhāṇām ekam icchasi paṇḍitam, paṇḍito hy arthakṛcchreṣu kuryān niḥśreyasaṁ mahat/ sahasrāṇy api mūrkhāṇām yady upāste mahīpatiḥ, atha vāpy ayutāny eva nāsti teṣu sahāyatā/ eko 'py amātyo medhāvī śūro dakṣo vicakṣaṇaḥ, rājānaṁ rājamātraṁ vā prāpayen mahatīm śriyam/ You should realise that instead of keeping a thousand stupids as your advisers, you must retain even one experienced vidvan who could uplift collapsing situations in the art of 'Rajyaanga' or diplomacy as also success and prosperity. Yet the same time, the Maha Medhavi Mantri need not and should not be burdened with small, medium and even semi difficult problems as there should be a three tiered levels of advisers and action groups. Bharata here is another important alert in the art of Rajyaanga or diplomacy: amātyān upadhātītān piṭṛpaitāmahāñ śucīn, śreṣṭhāñ śreṣṭheṣu kaccit tvaṁ niyojayasi karmasu/ This relates to the issue of corruption and tht is why the need for appointing officials who are reputed for generations ; Bharata! Hopefully you are appointing such generation wise clean officials only! Another aspect of Ideal Kingship is to follow the art of 'chaturupaayas' or the four tier Saama-daana- bheda-danda means of counselling-gifting-rifing two parties who agree or disagree and proposal of kingship- or finally punishing by the kingship.

[Vishlesiona on King's adminitrative skill from Manu Smriti:

An ideal King is expected to learn of the naunces of Vyavahara Vidya. He should strain himself day-and-night and practise 'indiya nigrāh' or the self control of body limbs and senses. An exemplary King requires to abstain from ten evil habits generated from kaama or worldly desire and eight from krodha or anger. Indeed all the habits end up in evil and human misery. To any King the ten vices resulting from Kaama or human obsessions would gradually diminish wealth and vitue while the eight vices springing from Krodha or excessive wrath could terminate in his doom and death! The set of ten vices from desires and pleasures are stated to be hunting, gambling, sleeping by the day, repetitive statements of other's failures and vanity, obsession of feminity, drunkenness, excessive involvement of dance and music, and purposeless travel. The eight vices are carrying and encouraging tales, uncalled for violence, droham or treachery, jealousy, dushanam or abusive language, dravya haranam or unjust seizure of material and property, condemnation and censuring and physical beating. Lobha or avarice is stated as the root cause of all the evils and broadmindedness is the spring of hope. Intoxication, betting, women, and hunting are the four shortlisted banes led by human desires subjected to excesses while the worst possible offshoots of anger are abusive language, manhandling, and seizure of materials and property. Those persons who are not only prime movers of the excesses viz. the Kings in this context but the associates of these sins either from desire or anger are duly involved in the sins of humanity. Indeed Vyasana or vice and Mrityu or death are equally tough but death is easier since Mrityu has a possibility of reaching swarga but the one dragged into vyasana is sure to end up in naraka for sure! That is the reason why an iedal King needs to appoint an ideal Minister too as the latter should have the ancestry of ideal Ministers who are well versed in Shastra- Shaastra jnaana, and of proven nobility. It might sometimes be possible to bless a Kingdom even with unproven Kingship but is unimaginable to secure a Minister of trined background , inherent ability, knowledge and wisdom, be it in the matters of revenue incease and management, domestic governance and foreign relations. It is the Minister who has to daily interact with his deputies individually and collectively in all the matters relating punishments and rewards. This is the reason why a well read , experienced and trust worthy person- say a Brahmana with experice and wisdom, even as the King is ably assited and motivated with the larger issues and equally about the minor ones 'pro bono publico'! In turn, the Minister might appoint his deputies down the line of officialdom as in charge of duties. Thus when fully equipped with the task of governance, the King should take off the heavy responsibility of governance ably conducting the two horsed chariot of Virtue and Justice. The officials at the field level, be it for collection of revenues and of disbursements, or for internal security and and external relations too be appointed on the principles of integrity, incorruptibility and impartiality.]

Sarga Hundred continued: kaccid dhṛṣṭaś ca śūraś ca dhṛtimān matimāñ śuciḥ, kulīnaś cānuraktaś ca dakṣaḥ senāpatiḥ kṛtaḥ/balavantaś ca kaccit te mukhyā yuddhaviśāradaḥ, dṛṣṭāpadānā vikrāntās tvayā satkṛtya mānitāḥ/ Bharata! I hope you have appointed a trustworthy, loyal, well contented, brave and ever courageous, Senapati of traditional background. If not yet, please do so atonce. Further, you might have appointed a Prime Minister who is honest, industrious and public welfare minded who would be ready to kill himself for you! Then kaccij jānapado vidvān dakṣiṇaḥ pratibhānavān, yathoktavādī dūtas te kṛto bhārata paṇḍitaḥ/ Have you appointed ‘Raja dootaas’ of our kingdom in other friendly kingdoms who should be well read vidwans, diplomatic, and of sharp skills of forien affairs!

[Vishleshana on Videsha Neeti as per Manu Smriti:

A King of idealism should appoint an Ambassador who is well versed in the art of diplomacy with a countenance of placidity and of expression backedup by proficiency in the subjects of science, commerce and international affairs. More importantly the person has to be honest, skilful and of noble family background. In the context of diplomacy, he has to be an expert in the matters of Sandhi and Vigrah, give and take, intelligent enough of moves and counter-moves, possessive of good memory, fearless and eloquent, as also action oriented with timely and vigilant moves, but essentially upright and reliable. He has to be of military tactness, treasury and financial management, recogniser of allies and opponents, amd most significantly has the trust anf faith of the King, his allies and the passive. In fact, he should also be able to convince the King about the realities of the Kings and Kingdoms of the countries of his posting but of what his or her King decides to convey in word or deed to the other King however harsh it may be yet couched in a polite yet firm manner. The role of an Ambassador is like a dance on a razor’s edge, yet unhurting and yet with hardness. Just as a Minister possesses the wherewith all to punish or reward, save or ruin, run the treasury to get filled up or exhausted, drive the Kigdom’s Economy to prosper or take it to doom, an Ambassador too can perform similar tasks to place the Kingdom to brush it up with the colours representative worthiness of safety for foreign trade, investment, economic collaboration. Sa vidyadasya krityeshu nirgudhengita cheshtitaih, aakaaramingitam cheshtaam bhritye shu cha chikeershitam/ A successful Ambassador has to necessarily train himself with the face, gestures and actions of the counterpart King and so should his deputies too. This is in respect of the designs of the counter part King, his designs and plans of action and most importatly that might adversely affect his Kingdom.]

Bharata! Referring to Secret Agencies, are you aware that there are as many as eighteen positions in the Rajyanga or Kingship viz. Mantri-Purohita- Yuva raja-Senapati-Dwaarapaala-Antahpuraadhyaksha-Karagaaraadhyaksha-Dhanadhyasha- Specialists directly appointed by the King himself- Expert Lawyers who argue for and against on behalf oh the Kingship-Prosecutor and a three-tier Intelligence officials. Dear brother! Beware of Naastika Siddhantis in the kingdom and spies for outside kingdoms who seek to create unrest in the Ayodyha Kingdom; they all seek to preach our citizens and distort their thinking of the medium of Tarka or logic towards ‘nastikata’ or Atheism!. Brother! The Kingdom of Ayodhya has had an incredible glory with prosperity, dharma and nyaaya, chaturvarnas, vidwans and maha panditas of higher learning! Trust you are seeking to sustain and preserve its status in Bharata Desha. This Kingdom has been known for Ashvamedha and such maha yagjnas, renowned devalayas, dharma tirtha pradeshas, samaajika utsavas, periodical social meets, ever busy trading and marketing establishments, public parks, fertile and evergreen pastures, excellent agricultural yields, timely rains, and the public of men and women have been disciplined and well contented without social evils of thefts, robberies, etc.; hopefully the same prosperity and all round contentment prevails in the Kingdom. kaccit striyaḥ sāntvayasi kaccit tās ca surakṣitāḥ, kaccin na śraddadhāsyāsām kaccid guhyam na bhāṣase/ The contentment and safety of women folk of the kingdom invariably decides the definite mark of the fulfillment of a kingdom; Bharata! I am confident that you are making special endeavors to this end. Further make sure of excellent pashu sampada-fearlessness - dhana-dhanya-astra shastra-yantra-shilpa-vaiddya disciplines.

Bharata! Make a special note of the proverbial fourteen pitfalls of Kingship:

Nastikata-Asatya bhashana-krodha-pramaada-jnaani purusha nishkramana- aalasya-panchendriya anarogya- raja nirnaya asahita-vipareeta raja nirnaya- apaarambha of nischita kaarya- gupta nirnaya dushprachara- mangalika kaarya anushtana aalasata- akasmaat shatru yudha niraacharana. Maharaja Bharata! A successful King should always beware of dasa varga-pancha varga-chatur varja-sapta varga- ashta varga- and three varga vishayas.

(Lapses of ten categories are hunting animals and birds-play of ‘chadaranga’- day sleeping-criticism of others- interest and involvement of illegal sex- madya paana- dancing-singing-instrumental music-and wasteful travels. Now, the five types of durgas or avoidable places: Jala durga or desert areas- Parvata durga or unscaled mountains; Vriksha durga or thick jungles with complex and unknown trees; Eerana durga or salted lands or saline places; and dhanva durga or desert lands. Chatur varga: Saama- Daana- Bheda- Danda. Sapta varga: Raja-Mantri-Rashtra-Forts- Khazana or treasury-Sena-and Mitra varga; Pancha varga: Blaming others behind, Saahasa or taking risks, droha or cheating, jealousy, dosha darshana or pointing mistakes, half baked blaming others, raised tones, and danda kathorata or undue punishment. Ashta varga denotes: agricultural development, business promotion, erection of forts, bridge construction, planning to secure forest elephants, occupying mountain caves, gaining monetary interest from occupied kingdoms, and populating unoccupied areas of the kingdom. Three Vidyas refer to mastering three vedas and neeti sastra-- Krishi- and go raksha. Six gunas are Sandhi or mutual with drawyal of war, Vighraha or total abandonment of opening a war, yaana or travel, aasana or being seated with self control, dwaidhi bhava or the feature of duality or vacillation or of wavering indecision and Samaashraya or total surrender. Then the Five Daivi bhavas or fire breaks, floods, spread of diseases, kshaama, and maha maari or out break of incurable vyadhis. The Ten Rajaaritya Neetipurna kaaryas are refusing emoluments to the sevakas of the defeated king, punish who ever has insulted among the public, punish the masters who frightened the servants, open corruption practices of getting official tasks done and the related. Twenty wrongs are engaging the services of children, aged, long time sufferers of diseases, varna saksra humans, timids, the frightened ones, those who are lobhis, their helpers, those who distastify ministers, senapatis and dharmatmas, vishaya laalasaas, chanchala manasas and their supporters, those who resort of Deva- Brahmana dushanas, arrogant due to superiority feeling, persons who misbehave those afflicted by hunger, those who disregard soldiers, swadesha tyagis, persons with countless enemies, untruthful and unreliable persons! Then Prakriti Mandala includes Kings and Royalties, Ministers, Respected Public Figures, and those of treasury, provincial officials, Sena and of Forts.)

Thus Shri Rama enumerated the various duties of a King refreshing Bharata about some of the basic duties of Kingship and then asserted that the duty of a King should be to share tasty food with his followers and the entire public of the kingdom too!

As Rama along with Lakshmana having properly understood the inner feelings of Bharata, asked Bharata as to why precisely he had arrived at Chitrakoota and Bharata should clearly explain the reason. Ragjunandana! The dear father fell into the trap of his wife-my mother Kaikeyi- and did this heinous task and as having known about this had realised that a grave sin had been committed. On account of this, my mother had become a widow and due to continued distress should be heading to ‘naraka’ hereafter. Mahatma! Now be compassionate to me and very kindly accept this Kingship as the majestic Indra himself. The entire public of the Kingdom accompanied by widowed mothers have arrived here with this singular prayer for your kind acceptance. Being an outstanding embodiment of Dharma and Nyaya, you are fully aware that the eldest son ought to be the King and as per dharma paripaalana, you should be the King definitely. Please give consideration to their submission and not reject it.’ Having requested Rama again and again, Bharata placed his head at Rama’s feet and kept on crying away! Then Shri Rama hugged Bharata and said: dear brother! Having been born in a family of unique tradition of virtue, how could I blunder in upkeeping the Pitru Vaakya and disgrace myself! The Gurus, mothers and wellwishers are all respectable no doubt and they are indeed ever blessing to me, but defying the instruction of father is a serious blot and a grave sin of my life. Bharata! I can never find a speck of your conscience and you too should never blame your mother at all any further. As Shri Rama detailed a King’s duties in brief, Bharata replied that he was not eligible to kingship and of which avail the duties of Kingship were elaborated to him by Rama! Bharata then explained to Rama: ‘The authority of kingship would squarely be eligible to the eldest son only and hence my earnest supplication should be to take over the authority for the sustained progress of the tradition. Even if stated even otherwise by the public that a King is a human being, my firm conviction would be that a king is a divine being as a Deva. This is so because that to maintain the balance of Dharma and Tradition along with Artha and Kaama is possible only by a divinity but not a human being. When I was in Kaikeya desha, you had already left for the forest life and that glorious King who performed Ashmvamedha and other such Maha Yagjnas had left for swarga. Father Dasharatha was unable to resist swarga as he was unable to withstand your absence along with Devi Sita and Lakshmana. Purusha Simha Shri Rama! Now please get ready to perform 'Jalaanjali Daana Tarpana' in the memory of the departed Soul of the dear father. Dear brother! Be it known that father departed away while he was distressed for you, thinking deep about you, seeking even a glimpse of you and taking your name repeatedly and collapsed!

As Bharata described about the departing scene of his father as the latter kept on remembering Rama, his memories, his name and face, Rama too was upset and collapsed like an uprooted tall tree fallen suddenly. There was an uproar by Devi Sita, Lakshmanama, Bharata and Shatrughna as though in a chorus line. A person of Rama's standing was truly shaken up and addressed Bharata: 'As father had passed away, what indeed be the meaning of my returning to Ayodhya ever! It not a shame that I could not perform the 'dahana samskaara' despite being the eldest son: kiṁ nu tasya mayā kāryam durjātena mahātmanā, yo mṛto mama śokena na mayā cāpi saṁskṛtaḥ/ aho bharata siddhārtho yena rājā tvayānagha, śatrugheṇa ca sarveṣu pretakṛtyeṣu satkṛtaḥ/ Ha! Even as the immortal father departed taking my name and memories, I failed to attend the funeral rights and what could be the purpose of my being the eldest son. Bharata and Shatrughna! How fortunate were you to have performed the last rites! Of which purpose that even after the stipulated duration of my 'vana vaasa' that I should visit Ayodhya again!' Then Rama shouted hoarse and addressed Devi Sita that her father in law passed away and also addressed Lakshmana that his father of glory was no more! Then with suppressed emotions, Rama asked his brothers to initiate the 'jalaanjali karya krama'. Devi Sita recalling her memories of the inimitable father in law cried silently and could not even face Ramachandra straight suppressing her passionate emotions. Then Rama asked Lakshman to fetch appropriate deer skins smeared with 'hing' powder as body covers around the waist and as 'uttareeya' or as back covers and thereafter asked Devi Sita to lead; Rama explained that at the tragic situations, wives should lead the husbands unlike all the other sorrowful contexts. Then all of them proceeded to the banks of the Sacred River Mandakini bare footed. Then Rama addressed the departed Soul of his father: pragṛhya ca mahīpālo jalapūritam añjalim, diśam yāmyām abhimukho rudan vacanam abravīt/ etat te rājaśārdūla vimalam toyam akṣayam, pitṛlokatasyādyā maddattam upatiṣṭhatu/ tato mandākinī tīrāt pratyutīrya sa rāghavaḥ, pituś cakāra tejasvī nivāpam bhrātṛbhiḥ saha/ aiṅgudam badarīmīśram piṇyākam darbhasamstare, nyasya rāmaḥ suduḥkhhārto rudan vacanam abravīt/ Then Rama as followed by his brothers had invoked the respective Pitru Devatas and then addressed the Soul of the father facing the southern direction uttering: 'Respected father named Dasharatha of the famed Ikshvaku Vamsha! Today the 'jalaanjali' from my both the palms are being offered to the Soul that reached the Pitru Loka as of 'akshaya rupa' or of endless forms.' There after, the brothers performed 'pinda daana' addressing the departed Soul of Dasharatha reciting: idaṁ bhuñkṣva mahārājapṛito yad aśanā vayam, yadannaḥ puruṣo bhavati tadannās tasya devatāḥ/ Departed dear father! Here with the offerings of food in the form of 'pindas' of cooked cereals, as humans and the celestials do too.

Vishleshana on Tapan Vidhaana

Tarpana Vidhana: Ruk Saamaadrthvaa Vedoktaan Japya mantraan yajushim cha, Japitwaivam tatah kuryaaddevarshi pitru tarpanam/ Tava Vashishtah/ (Vashishta Maharshi affirmed that even after studying Ruk-Saamaadharvana Vedas, it is essential to recite Pranava and perform tarpana to fructify the knowledge of Vedas. Vishnu Purana emphasized: Shuchi Vastradharah snaato Devarshi Pitru tarpanam, Teshameva hi tirthena kurveet susamaahitah/ (Only on wearing clean clothes after bathing and poised with unperturbed conscience, Tarpana is to be undertaken thereafter). To Devas only one tarpana/ Jalaanjali each be executed, while to Rishis twice and to Pitru Devas thrice respectively for their satisfaction. Praaggeshu Suranstarpenmanushyaanchaiva madhyatah, Pitramstu dakshinaareshu chaika dwi trijalaanjaleen/ (As prescribed for example in Agni Purana: Tarpana Karya needs to be performed facing East in the Savya Yagnopaveeta position to Devas; to Rishis facing the East again with yagnopaveeta as a garland but to Pitru Devatas the tarpana should be performed facing south with the yagnopaveeta worn as 'apa savya' or 'Praacheenaa veeti' or in the reverse position reciting 'Swadhaanama tarpayaami'. Pitru Devas would not be contented if tarpana is performed from a higher plane position into water flows nor with wet clothes. In fact, Pitru tarpana needs to be performed with dry clothes only preferably seated on spread over darbhas. Also tarpana be done with water drawn from one vessel and transferred to a smaller vessel into a lower plane but due to the apprehension that a lower plane on the ground might be sullied with hair, ash, coal particles, thorns, and even bones on the ground and hence the tarpana is preferably done on a clean place with darbhas are spread over. Alternatively, tarpana may be done in a large flat plate or container. For performing tarpana only vessels of gold, silver, copper, brass, bronze or any metal vessels may be used but not earthen pots; however neither metal vessels nor hands without darbhas be used for the tarpana. Deva tarpana and Rishi Tarpana needs to be performed along with water mixed with plain rice grains or white tilas. Pitru tarpana needs to be necessarily done with water mixed with black tilas.

Deva Tarpana: This tarpana is to satiate Devas and the Devatva or the Divinity that is microcosmically present in all Beings in the Universe. Seated facing the east direction with the right knee kept in contact with the ground, placing the left leg over the right leg so that the knee is above the ground, keeping Akshatas in the water pot, holding the water pot on the right hand palm, covering it with left hand palm reciting Brahmaadaya Suraah Sarvey Rishayah Kashyapaadayah, Aagacchantu Mahaa Bhaagaa Brahmaandodaravartinah/ Now pour water with the left hand into the open right palm releasing water from the tips of four fingers; three darbhas need to be placed on the right palm with the tips of darbhas aligned with finger tips while reciting the following in favour of each Devata: Om Brahmaa tripyataam, Om Vishnum tripyataam, Om Rudrah tripyataam, Om Prajapatih tripyataam, Om Devaah tripyantaam, Om Devyah tripyantaam, Om Vasavah Tripyantaam, Om Rudraah tripyantaam, Om Adityaag tripyantaam, Om Chhandaamsi tripyantaam, Om Vedaah tripyantaam, Om Rishayah tripyantaam, Om Gandharvaah tripyantaam, Om Apsaraah tripyantaam, Om Devaanugah tripyantaam, Om Naagaah tripyantaam, Om Saagaraah tripyantaam, Om Parvataah tripyantaam, Om Saritah tripyantaam, Om Manushyaah tripyantaam, Om Yakshaah tripyantaam, Om Rakshaamsi tripyantaam, Om Pishcaachaah tripyantaam, Om Suparnaah tripyantaam, Om Bhutaani tripyantaam, Om Pashavah tripyantaam, Om Vanaspatayah tripyantaam, Om Oshadhayah tripyantaam/

Divya Pitri Tarpana: The revised procedure for tarpana to the Divine Devas and Manes requires change of sitting position to face the Southern direction and wearing the yagnopaveeta in reverse position as 'praacheenaa veeti', with left knee to be in contact with the ground while the right knee to be above the ground yet not touching it with left leg on the ground and the right leg on top of left leg; pour some black tilas (sesame seeds) in the water pot; now the offerings would be made thrice each time to Agni-Soma-Yama and Aryama ie. Agni the Divine Fire God who carries the soul of the burnt body, Soma the Water God who carries the soul of the drowned body, Yama the Maintainer of Dharma and the Judge of Karmas of the deceased and Aryama the Ruler of the Domain of Souls : Om Agnih tripyataam idam salilam jalam tasmai swadhaa namah, tasmai swadhaa namah, tasmai swadhaa namah/ Om Somah tripyataam idam salilam jalam tasmai swadhaa namah, tasmai swadhaa namah, tasmai swadhaa namah/ Om Yamah tripyataam idam salilam jalam tasmai swadhaa namah, tasmai swadhaa namah, tasmai swadhaa namah/ Om Aryamaah tripyataam idam salilam jalam, tasmai swadhaa namah, tasmai swadhaa namah/ The next three mantras are for the three Divine Manes-as were associated with the souls who were burnt or drowned and carried to the Skies till the latter are tendered to their destinations: Om Agnishu aatthaah Pitarah idam salilam jalam tebhyah swadhaa namah, tebhyah swadhaa namah, tebhyah swadhha namah/

After the Jalaanjali and Pinda daana, the brothers and Devi Sita were returning from the banks of the Sacred River, they were breaking the silence with their loud cryings were resoundings which attracted groups of lions which roared and the other wild beasts and birds too. The soldiers of the Kingdom reacted stating that Bharata Shatrughnas should have met Rama Sita Lakshmanas and hence the distant sounds. Then the army moved on with elephants, chariots, horses and all the rest of the entourage. As the noises were sky rattling, the Ayodhya crowd surged and moved forward and then: Tatastham Pususha vyaghram yashasvinakalmasham, aaseenam thandile Raamam sahasaa janam/ The public reached an Ashram and the most popular, blemishless, Maha Purusha Shri Rama was visioned seated on a 'vedi', a raised platform. As the crowds queued up and wept involuntarily in high pitch, blaming Kaikeyi as the villiainess the root cause. Glimpses of Shri Rama resulted in distressful scenes all around and kept on prostrating to parents and God. At that time, it seemed that the earth sky, mountains, caves and all the directions got distorted and resounded!

Maharshi Vasishtha then keeping the Ahodhya queens ahead moved forward towards Shri Rama. The mothers slowly covered the distance and reached the banks of River Mandakini and witnessed the 'ghaats' where Rama and Lakshmana were habitual taking their baths. Devi Koushalaya was moved in her heart and addressed the co queens: sisters! See the none too easy rough banks of the holy river where Rama who always refreshed himself with palace comforts of bathing and now is at the disposal of these deeply trenched up rough banks of the river. Sumitre! Your son Lakshmana would be carrying heavy loads of the water to the ashram. He is not intended to do so but does it for the sake of his elder brother. Having moved forward Devi Kousalya noticed the 'pindas' that Rama would have just offered to the 'swargeeya pita' and her dear husband. As she got outburst, she addressed the co queens and said: sisters! are you noticing the 'pinda pradana' to the ever memorable Maha Raja that Shri Rama brothers had just performed dutifully! why and how is my heart intact instead of breaking into thousand pieces! She cried quoting the adage that what humans eat for themselves is what they offer to Gods! Then she moved forward and saw for herself her dear son Shri Rama who was seated as of a devata descended to earth from the heaven. As soon as he saw the mothers Rama got up suddenly and touched their respective feet. Then they had cleaned off the dust on Rama's stomach affectionately since he bent down prostratingly. Lakshma too did so as Rama had done. Then seeking to control her tears, the extremely thinned down

Devi Sita too did similarly. Kousalya drew Sita nearby and embraced her as though she would have to a daughter. She exclaimed: videharājasya sūtā snuṣā daśarathasya ca, rāmapatnī katham duḥkham saṁprāptā nirjane vane/ padmam ātapasaṁtaptam parikliṣtam ivotpalam, kāñcanam rajasā dhvastam kliṣtam candram ivāmbudaiḥ/ mukham te prekṣya mām śoko dahaty agnir ivāśrayam, bhṛṣam manasi vaidehi vyasanāraṇisaṁbhavaḥ/ Videha Raja Janaka Putri! Dasharatha Raja Vadhu! How are you withstanding the tribulations of this forest life! You are looking pale and weak like dusted gold and clouded Chandama! As Devi Kousalya was endearing Sītha thus, Rama and Lakshmana by turns touched the feet of Maharshi Vasishtha just as Indra Deva would touch the feet of Deva Guru Brihaspati. As they all were seated, Bharata Shatrughnas and the Ministers, Senadhipati and senior citizens of Ayodhya were seated too. The then situation was like Bharata being seated just facing Shri Rama just as Indra would before Prajapati Brahma.

The night long session had thus concluded with exchange of mourning memories of the great Dasharadha and the next morning on the banks of the River Mandakini, there was a reassembly of all after the snaana-homa-japa and other schedule. Then Bharata addressed Shri Rama as follows: ‘Rama! Our revered Father was pleased with boons to my mother and my mother entrusted the kingdom to me. Now, I am placing the kingdom at your disposal and this be very kindly acceded to. The upkeep of this vast kingdom and its glory is far beyond my ability; the force of the torrential rains in the high rainy season is not possible like a weak barrier! Where is the comparison of a donkey and a horse or of an ordinary kite and Garuda Deva! I am simply unable to emulate your administrative skills and capabilities. The glory of a Kingdom over centuries of administrative finesse is akin to an ever growing tall and strong tree with ever yielding instantly scented flowers and of ripening fruits of sweetness; now preserving that famed tree is simply impossible for a person of my calibre and the risk of its gradual sinking into the established memories should never be hastened into mere myths. Kindly try to see the seriousness and urgency of this critical situation yourself. Our great father has had the forevision of begetting an illustrious senior son- (pursuant to the Putra kaamekshi yajna). śreṇayas tvām mahārāja paśyantv agryāś ca sarvaśaḥ, pratapantam ivādityam rājye sthitam arimādam/ tavānuyāne kākutṣṭha mattā nardantu kuñjarāḥ, antahpura gatā nāryo nardantu susamāhitāḥ/ Now, may such an outstanding King who could maintain a kingdom of multifarious castes, creeds, thoughts and opinions of leaders of the society, as also face with resolve, conviction and courage against internal struggles and external dangers be seen in position. In this convincing manner Bharata begged of Shri Rama to return to Ayodhya for the thrill of the citizens and the dancing joy of the ladies of the ‘antahpura’ like the return of a haughtily superior elephant and a roaring chieftain of Lions. As Bharata had most convincingly requested Rama as those present too shared similar anxieties of Bharata’s inability and Rama’s unique fame, Shri Rama then replied as follows:

‘ Dear brother! I am not a free man like God nor act as I please. The wheels of time and fate keep pulling me in different directions. sarve kṣayāntā nicayāḥ patanāntāḥ samucchrayāḥ, samyogā viprayogāntā maraṇāntam ca jīvitam/ yathā phalānam pakvānām nānyatra patanād bhayam, evam narasya jātasya nānyatra maraṇād bhayam/ yathāgāram dṛḍhashthūnam jīrṇam bhūtvāvasīdati, tathāvasīdanti narā jarāmṛtyuvaśam gatāḥ/ In all the kinds of permutations and combinations, at the finality is ‘vinaasha’ or destruction. All types of natural consequences of Prakriti or Nature and ups and downs of Life get terminated at the end. Samyoga-Viyogas or the Positive and Negative Impulses of Life end up in death. Like the fresh fruits of a garden, the end result is decay and likewise, birth inevitably follows death. A very strong rooted high building of magnificence eventually tends to wither down and so do the humans end up in death. As a night fall never returns again, like the flows of River Yamuna submerging into the ocean never return. Days and Nights in one’s lifetime never return again too like the rays of extreme summer season dry of water reserves. Bharata! You should always think of your own self and let others be governed by their own destiny.. Why are you repeatedly crying away for others, as all of them in their own life’s journey, their age of days, years, decades are suitably registered. Each Sun Rise and Sunset are thus accounted for. In each life separation of parents, children, wives or husbands is inevitable in each and every family and the feeling of separation no doubt occurs but that again becomes a passing phase and the only certainty is death and could that be reversed ever! Bharata! Indeed our father was deeply virtuous and has had countless dharma karyas like yajnas, charities, and so on yet has had to travel to swarga. But would it not be futile to keep on regretting as his life time was over as in our cases too it should be so sooner or later! sa svastho bhava mā śoco yātvā cāvasa tām purīm, tathā pitrā niyukto ‘si vaśinā vadatāmv vara/ yatrāham api tenaiva niyuktaḥ punyakarmaṇā, tatraivāham kariṣyāmi pitur āryasya śāsanam/ na mayā śāsanam tasya tyaktum nyāyyam arimāda, tat tvayāpi sadā mānyam sa vai bandhuḥ sa naḥ pitā/ ‘Therefore brother Bharata, do not cry, keep calm without agitation and loss of mental equilibrium; you are no doubt an effective speaker and convincer. Therefore, do return to Ayodhya and that precisely the instruction of the ever respectable father. As he had directed me, I should continue my forest life as stipulated. It would not behove us to disrespect his instructions as he is not only our friend-philosopher-guide but indeed he was our beloved father. Do honour his feelings and uphold his view point. Then as Shri Rama made his thinking crystal clear and sought Bharata to return back, there was mutual silence.

Bharata having patiently heard all the tenets of dharma- one's own karma prarabdha- impact of 'kaala maana' - its transcendent nature- and all the vedantic bhashana. Apparently these precepts are required to be stressed again and again. Raghu Veera, is there one in this world who could excel in this mental restraint. Yet, as I have a small comment to make: Indeed one's own psyche would be such that even while realising the realities of existence, one does succumb to the on going situations! Yatha mritastathaa jeevan yathaasati tathaasati, yasyaisha buddhi laabhah syaat, yasyaisha buddhi laabhah paritapyet kena saḥ/

Just as one's life is sustained and goes on, bodily ups and downs should not matter really; likewise the victories and defeats. But how could rule out the likings and dislikings of normal humans. If that strong mindedness is possible, one becomes a 'sthita pragjna' and not an ordinary human. In other words, it is only 'viveka buddhi prapti' that should be the negation of 'santaapa'. Nareshwara! It is only he who could distinguish 'atma and anatma' that one realises 'sankata and vishada' or disastres and sorrows. I am shackled with the principles of dharma and can not resort to violence. Moreover, my own father who surely understands the distinction of virtue and justice had resorted to this kind of a blatantly unjust decision and as such am having to reap the contemptible consequences as I could not openly admit in public. After all, the King Dasharatha was my father, mentor, and the maha yajna karta and knowing fully well got victimised by a low woman took this far reaching vicious decision. It appears that at the close of one's life, a human being loses balance and tends to take blatantly abhorable verdicts. But for this indiscretion, the glory of Mahatma Dasharatha would be permanent in the annals of human history. Indeed, we have to upkeep that tradition of Ikshvakus and what ever lapses had occurred should not be highlighted. Shri Rama who had thus visualised the state of agitation of Bharata literally begging him to return to Ayodhyas as endorsed by one and all, replied Bharata: Dear brother! You might not be aware that at the time of dear father's wedding with Devi Kaikeyi, then father promised your grandfather that the son of Kaikeyi would be the next king of Ayodhya. After the wedding your mother performed unparalleled service to father. He was mightily pleased and he obliged her to accompany father at the time of Devaasura Battle in which father participated and Devas subdued Asuras and the father was pleased to give a boon to Devi Kaikeyi. The latter out with a mischievous casualness she asked father for two boons and father replied: 'alright two boons'! Now, your mother cashed on those two boons of Bharata's kingship and Rama's vana vassa. Now, Bharata, this was the backdrop as you now know the boons of the father. so 'haṁ vanam idaṁ prāpto nirjanaṁ lakṣmaṇānvitaḥ, śītayā cāpratidvandvaḥ satyavāde sthitaḥ pituḥ/ bhavān api tathety eva pitaraṁ satyavādinam, kartum arhati rājendraṁ kṣipram evābhiṣecanāt/ This was also the consequence your kingship and my 'vana vaasa' which Sita-Lakshmanas joined too. For my sake, please relieve respected father's indebtedness to mother Kaikeyi and save his Soul from 'narakas' and at the same time enhance your mother's fulfillment of her inner pleasure to become the Prime Queen too. śrūyate hi purā tāta śrutir gītā yaśasvinī, gayena yajamānena gayeṣv eva pitṛṇ prati/ puṁ nāmnā narakād yasmāt pitaraṁ trāyate sutaḥ, tasmāt putra iti proktaḥ pitṛṇ yat pāti vā sutaḥ/ Bharata! Vishleshanas in reference to a) Gayaasura and b) Puta / Prithu Chakravarti

Gayasura:

The legend of Gaya Tirtha is recalled in Agni Purana in the Tirtha Mahatmya: Gayasura, the King of Rakshasas did fierce Tapasya to Maha Vishnu as the latter granted him the boon of materialising a Maha Tirtha by Gayasura's name. All the human beings and Asura-Daityaadi had the darshan of Gauasura and reached Vaikuntha as who ever had his darshan did not have to visit none else to achieve Vaikuntha. Devas and Bahma Deva approached Vishnu as the latter advised to approach Gayasura to let Brahma and Devas perform yagna over Gayasura's huge head. Gaya was in deep sleep and did not respond but still Brahma and Devas were in the process of executing the Yagna and could not perform 'Purnaahuti' the grand finale of the Yagna was still pending. Meanwhile when Gayasura woke up and wished to get up but could not. The Asura became shaky and tried hard to wriggle out from the fire pit, Vishnu advised Yama dharma Raja to keep a heavy boulder on Gaya's head and occupy the Asura's entire body of some eight km. of length till the purnahuti was over. The heavy boulder itself had a background connection: Maharshi Marichi the son of Brahma Deva was once resting in sleep and instructed his wife called Dharmavata to press his legs and not disturb his sleep other wise she would turn as a boulder. Meanwhile Brahma arrived and the wife faced a dilemma whether she should obey her husband's instruction not to disturb or announce the arrival of Brahma himself. She set aside Marichi's curse even as she faced the eventuality of her turning as a boulder. She gave a return curse to Marichi to have created an awkward situation for her that Marichi would have to face Maha Deva's wrath in some another connection and entered Agni and purified herself performing tapsya for thousand years. Lord Vishnu thus took advantage of the boulder which was blessed with the foot prints of Devas and utilised for Yama Dharma Raja to place it on Gayaasura's head which eventually became famed as Deva Shila-Sarva Deva Swarupa- Sarva Tirtha mayi-and the unique Pujnya Shila. Even after the Shila was placed on his head the Asura was still breathing and hence Vishnu had to place on his 'Gada' or Mace to fully sniff him out by adding his own presence to this Gaya Tirtha. This 'Adi Gada' was the backbone of Gajasura which was eventually turned by Deva's Architect Vishwa karma. The most outstanding PitruTirtha in the Universe, to which the Pitru Loka keeps close attention to look forward to the sons of mankind looks forward to Shraddha karmas and Pinda daanas. These Karmas not only redeem the souls of the ancestors by their performance but equally to collect bags of fulfillment to the Shraddha Kartas as far higher proportions manifold.

Putra / Prithu :

Prajapati Anga of Atri Vamsha, a defender of Dharma (Virtue) and an erudite scholar of Shastras was married to Sunitha who also was a follower of virtue and tradition. They were blessed with a son of high virtue called Vena, who on becoming a King, came under the evil influence of an evil muni who followed a Devata called 'Arhan' followed a vicious and immoral way of life and used to preach his 'Praja' (Subjects) not to perform Homas and Yagnas, nor indulge in charities, Vratas and Tirtha Yatras. In fact, he declared that he was Vishnu, Rudra, Brahma, Indra and Devas. The Rishis and Brahmanas were highly upset and undertook a huge procession to the King saying that a King was expected to guide and enforce Dharma, Nyaya (Justice) and discipline but instead Vena was getting self-opinionated by the day. The King shouted angrily that he was Dharma, Nyaya and Punya himself and that he could destroy Earth, throw it under water and break open the skies, if need be! The Rishis and Common men of the Kingdom forced their way to the King, surrounded him, forcibly overpowered and battered him. They screamed and asked him: 'Nishida' or 'sit down' and since then called him 'Nishida!' They rubbed his left thigh with force and out emerged streams of evil Beings like Nishadas, Kirathas, Bheels, Nahalakas, Bhramars, Pulinds and Mlecchas and Rishis were relieved that the King was relieved of sinners from his body. Then they rubbed the King's right hand forcibly and initially came out profuse sweat but later on materialised a 'Maha Purush'-a Unique Personality- and the congregation of Rishis named him King Pruthu and blessed him to herald a Golden Era where the Kingdom was full of propitiousness and Virtue but devoid of 'Akals' (Famines), diseases, untimely deaths, robberies and discontentment anywhere: na durbhiksham na cha Vyadhirnakaala maranam Nrinaam, Sarvey sukhena jeevanti lokaa Dharma paraayanaah! But ChakravartiPrithu decided to redeem his father King Vena from hells. He performed the duty of a son who delivers his father from hellish conditions. The word putra means one who delivers from hell, called ‘Put’, a worthy son who could save from a hell which is called puṁ-nāma-naraka and ‘tra’ means trāyate, or deliver. Hence putra means puṁ-nāma-narakāt trāyate iti putra or that is the son is expected to deliver the forefathers from the hellish condition of life. (Padma Purana)]

Sarga One hundred seven continued: ayodhyām gaccha bharata prakṛtīr anurañjaya, śatrughna sahito vīra saha sarvair dvijātibhiḥ--- śatrughnaḥ kuśalamatis tu te sahāyaḥ; saumitrir mama viditaḥ pradhānamitram, catvāras tanayavarā vyaṁ narendram; satyasthaṁ bharata carāma mā viśādam/ Shri Rama had thus instructed Bharata ultimately: My dear Bharata! You ought to be therefore return to Ayodhya to administer human beings as the King and I should remain as the King of beasts and forests. Brother Shatrughna would assist you and Lakshmana should assist me too. The four sons of King Dasharatha should be totally dedicated to preserve Dharma; Never ever feel hurt or sorry for this ultimate decision.

As Shri Rama thus persuaded Bharata to return the Kingdom, Viprottama Jaabaali made a comment stating that what all was stated by Shri Rama addressing Bharata was followed by him but unfortunately Rama’s statements were perhaps not endorsed by him. Kah kasya pususho bandhuh kimaapyam kasya kenachit, eko hi jaayate jantureka eva vinashyati/ Tasmaan maataa pitaacheti Rama sajjet yo narah, unmatta iva sa jneyo naasti kaschidvi kasyachit/ In this ‘samsaara’, who indeed are relatives and who are not as the Human Beings are born or die alone! Is it not foolish to feel that this person is a father or that person is a mother! Are they not travellers from places to places and how do you think and identify others as a father, mother or a relative or to assert that his money, property, or building are distinct. Therefore Shri Rama, that kind of a ‘vedanta’ or mind set of aloofness and of ‘vairagya’ is certainly neither acceptable nor practical. Hence my suggestion should be that you better return to Ayodhya and accept kingship. Theoretically stated that Dasharatha should be none for you but in practical terms he was your own father born out of his union with your mother. gataḥ sa nṛpatis tatra gantavyaṁ yatra tena vai, pravṛttir eṣā martyānāṁ tvam tu mithyā vihanyase/ arthadharmaparā ye ye tāṁs tāñ śocāmi netarān, te

As Maha Pandita Jaabala raised somewhat none too realistic questions smacking of ‘nastikata’, Shri Rama stated quietly yet decisively as per the lines of Shritis. He said: ‘Vipravara! Whatever you have described as if it should be my duty to return to Ayodhya even much against my father’s instructions; indeed they appear palatable but are not so. As a human being discards the ‘Veda Maryada’ and acts as per one’s own wishful thinking and resorts to the infringement of approved principles, then he distances from both ‘aachaara and vichara’ or the tradition and self analysis. That is why ‘satpurushas’ would not approve of such end results. It is the tradition of a kula or varna that decides as to who is virtuous or not. The pattern of thinking that you have expressed is truly speaking the ‘anaarya’ or non traditional . That kind of mind set appears to be appealing on the face of it but is impure on closer examination. For instance the eventuality of my return to Ayodhya even disregard of ‘Pitru agna’ looks attractive but actually that becomes void from the standpoint of tradition and the approved principles of virtue and justice. As per your advice the path to be treaded on apparently appears justifiable but indeed that would not be so as per the traditional values and norms. You stated that once my father had gone away, he would not be any body to me and vice versa. Then why one should perform ‘tarpanas and pinda pradaanaas’! You stated that we are all travellers and need to remember them again! Does Dharma approve this ‘nastikata’! You affirmed that by the path that you have recommended would free me from my inhibitions, since what ever a King does is that which that his public would follow. Pray! What type of kingdom that is with neither scruples nor principles! Be it known for good: satyam evāṇṣaṁsyam ca rājavyrttaṁ sanātanam, tasmāt satyātmakam rājyam satye lokah pratiṣṭhitah/ ṛṣayaś caiva devāś ca satyam eva hi menire, satyavādī hi loke ’smin paramam gacchati kṣayam/ udvijante yathā śarpān narād anṛtavādinah, dharmah satyam paro loka mūlam svargasya cocyate/ satyam eveśvaro loka satyam padmā samāśritā, satyamūlāni sarvāṇi satyān nāsti param padam/ ‘Satya paalana’ or Obedience to Truthfulness is the prime most dharma. That is the age old tradition; if a kingdom is of ‘Satya swarupa’ or of the form of Truth and Virtue, that becomes the approved tradition. Rishis and Devatas always seek to uphold truthfulness and those ‘satyavaadi’ humans do invariably accomplish higher lokas. Persons who resort to untruthfulness are timid and are afraid of everything such as serpents. The heights of truthful nature are thus considered as the roots of human excellence . satyam eveśvaro loka satyam padmā samāśritā, satyamūlāni sarvāṇi satyān nāsti param padam/ dattam iṣṭam hutam caiva taptāni ca tapāṁsi ca, vedāḥ satyapratīṣṭhānās tasmāt satyaparo bhavet/ Truthfulness is Paramatma and dharma is anchored to it. That indeed is the very root of existence and there is no ‘paramapada’ or Salvation therebeyond. That human who administers the world and represents a clan tends to either sinks into narakas or achieves swarga on the basis of truthfulness or its negation. so ’ham pitur nideśam tu kimartham nānupālaye, satyapratīśravaḥ satyam satyena samayīkṛtaḥ/ naiva lobhān na mohād vā na cājñānāt tamo ’nvitaḥ, setum satyasya bhetsyāmi guroḥ satyapratīśravaḥ/ I have had already taken the oath of following my father’s decision in the name of truthfulness, and am not foolish to reverse the instructions of my father under any circumstances, either by temptations or avarice or misguidances. It is learnt that those who crumble under temptations having sworn by truth become ineligible to ‘havya kavyas’ as accepted from pitru devatas and Devatas post life. As a hold ‘ Satya Swarupi Dharma’ in high esteem as applicable to humanity, I should continue to be dressed in ‘jataa valkas’ and practise ‘taapasa dharma’. kṣātram dharmam aham tyakṣye hy adharmam dharmasaṁhitam, kṣudraur nṛṣaṁsair lubdhaiś ca sevitam pāpakarmabhiḥ/ What all had been prescribed as ‘kshaatra dharma’ but gets negated by lowly, cruel, avaricious and sinful villians, would most certainly be rejected by me. kāyena kurute pāpam manasā saṁpradhārya ca, anṛtam jihvayā cāha trividham karma pātakam/ What all sins that humans do by their body are the consequences of their mental aberrations Then with the help of their tongues and voices convey to others with the help of others perform with their bodies. Thus all human deeds mainly of sinful deeds are executed and committed by three channels viz. kaayika- vaachaka-maanasika or body-voice-and mind based. Earth, fame, glory and prosperity are all ever anxious to get hinged on to truthful human beings and thus there is the necessity of serving only truthfulness. Brahmanottama Jaabaali! Your suggestion, argument, and considered instruction that I should take over the kingship is therefore sir! never worthy of acceptance as it would shatter the precepts of ‘satya and nyaaya’ or truth and justice. How indeed could then redeem father’s decision either by Bharara’s supplications or your way of mind set! The sworn decision before the my preceptors is irrevocable and unalterable and that had also comforted Devi Kaikeyi’s mindset. I should therefore reiterate my decisiveness to be dressed up, consume ‘phala-moola-patra- pushpaas’ and have the Pitru Devas and Devata’s comforted, as instructed. I have already decided a to what should be done and how to conduct myself; I will carry on by contenting my panchendriyas with kanda-moola- phaalas and carry on by observig my father’s directiveness. I will abide by the features of the ‘karma bhumi’ aided by natural air, fire, water, light, and sky and their alterations as per the Seasonality. Deva Raja Indra should have succssfully performed a series of yagjnas to attain that status and so should have Maharshis done severe tapasyas and reached higher lokas. satyam ca dharmam ca parākramam ca; bhūtānukampām priyavādītām ca, dvijātidevātithipūjanam ca; panthānam āhus tridivasya santaḥ/ dharme ratāḥ satpuruṣaiḥ sametās; tejasvino dānaguṇapradhānāḥ, ahimsakā vītamalās ca loke; bhavanti pūjyā munayah pradhānāḥ/ The vedic assertion states that ‘Satya- Dharma-Paraakrama- Samsasta Praani Daya- and Priya Vaachana, besides Deva-Atithi-Brahmana Puja are the essential features of Noble Humans leading to swarga loka and bliss. Dharme ratāḥ satpuruṣaiḥ sametās; tejasvino dānaguṇapradhānāḥ, ahimsakā vītamalās ca loke; bhavanti pūjyā munayah pradhānāḥ/ Finally, Vipravarya! It is only such Shreshtha Munis who practise dharma, satpuruṣa sangata, tejo sampanna, daana pradhaana, and asimhaa-charanaas that are worthy of prostrations!’ As Shri Rama explained in some detail about the tenets of Aastikata- Dharma- Nishchaya-and Indriya Nigraha, Pandita Jaabali replied : Shri Rama! I am neither a ‘Naastika’ nor of ‘Nastikata’ but unfortunately uttered such statements which were from the ‘vyavahaarika sambandha aalochanas’ which do indeed sound of traces of ‘nastikata’. My thinking pattern was only oriented to Bharata’s earnestness that you might return to assume kingship due to his inability to maintain the dignity of the kingdom vis-à-vis your own glory and capability. The ‘lounika vyavahaara’ got blurred unfortunately and dimmed up the radiance of Dharma and Kartavya; I am indeed ashamed of myself as I was momentarily entering into the labyrinths of social customs and mindsets!

Maharshi Vasishtha then endorsed the view point of Jabaali Maharshi in a way as the beings on earth do come and go by way of births and deaths and that would not imply 'naastikata' or the science of Godlessness. Rama! The incoming and outgoing traffic of the universe was what Jabali Maharshi had talked of. Now, let me explain to you about the basics of Srishti. Before Srishti, the Universe was 'jala maya' ; then Swayambhu Para Brahma got manifested. Then Bhagavan Vishnuswarupa Brahma evidenced floating on the sheets of water.. Sa varāhas tato bhūtvā projjahāra vasuṁdharām, asṛjac ca jagat sarvaṁ saha putraiḥ kṛtātmabhiḥ/ Subsequently, Vishnuswarupa Parabrahma appeared as Varaha Swarupa and pulled up Prithvi and initiated srishti of Beings.

[Vishleshana of Varaha: Brahmanda Purana is quoted: At the Kalpantara Pralaya or the Great Extermination of the Universe, the whole World got submerged in deep water as 'Ekarnava' or a single sheet of Water and the 'Sthaavara Jangamaas' or the Mobile and Immobile Beings were all submerged, then Para Brahma called Narayana, who was of 'Sahasraaksha, Sahasrapaat, Sahasra Shirsha' or of thousand eyes, feet and heads, was resting on the huge surface of water: Apo Naara iti proktaa Apo vai Nara Sunavah, Ayanam tasya taah proktaastena Narayanah smritah/ ('Apah' denotes 'Nara' or water; 'Naaraas' or the children or waves of 'Nara'; and Nara is a Being or Entity ; Nara plus Ayana is Narayana as he who rests on Samsara or water) . Narayana sought to locate Prithvi (Earth) deep down in water and assumed Varaahaavatara or the Incarnation of a Huge Boar like a mountain with ten yojanas of girth and hundred yojanas of height (one Yojana being 12 km), with a body of cloud-like complexion and extreme radiance of many Lightnings, Fire and Sun; making thunderous and high-pitched sounds and having broad shoulders, sharp fangs, white teeth and pointed nails. The YajnaVaraha is described as follows: Diksha Samaapteeshtim damshtriah kratu danto Juhuumukhah, Agni jihvo darbha romaa Brahma seersho Mahatapaah/ Veda skandho havirgandhirhavyakavyaadi vegavaan, Praagvamsha kaayo Dyutimaan naanaa Dikshaabhiranvitah/ Dakshinaa hridayo Yogi Shraddhaa satwa -mayo Vibhuh, Upakarma ruchischaiva pravagyaavarta bhushanah/ Naanaachhandogati patho guhyopanishad -aasanah, Maayaapatnisahaayo vai Giri shringamivocchrayah/ Aho raatrekshana dharo Vedanga shruti bhushanah, Ajya gandhah struvastundah Samaghosa swano Mahaan/ Satyadharma mayah Shrimaan Karma vikrama saskrutah, Prayaschitta nakho ghorah Pashujaanurmahaamakhah/ Udgaadaantro Homa Lingah Phala beeja mahoushadheeh, Vaadyantaraatmasatrasya naasmikaasomashonitah/ (The Yagna Varaha took up the diksha or Initiation of the Kratu or the Sacrifice with his 'damshtas' or curved fangs and teeth holding the 'Juhu' or the crescent shaped wooden ladle with which to make the offerings of ghee; Agni was his tongue to lap up the Sacrifice; Darbha grasses were the Varaha's hairs; Brahma one of the Chief of 'Ritviks' or the Brahmanas performing the Sacrifice was comparable to Varaha Murti's Head; Vedaas were his shoulders; his body-aroma was his 'havis' or the Sacrificial Offering; the Havya and Kavya or the offerings to Devas and Pitru Devas respectively constituted his body-speed with which the Sacrificial Offerings were made; the 'Praagvamsha' or the East-bound Chamber in which the guests at the Sacrifice were seated was Varaha's kaaya or the spacious physique; He was highly radiant and capable of accepting several Dikshas like the one being performed; He was the Master of Yoga full of Shraddha and Satwa or Sincerity and Resolve; he had Upakarma or extra study of Vedas and an expert in 'Pragvargya' or the Introductory Ceremony to the long-duration Soma Sacrifice; his 'Avarta Bhushana' or the ornamental and circular curls of the boar chest; the representation of various 'Chaandas' or Poetic Meters as his pathway; Upanishads as his seat; his able assistance is Maya as his spouse; his height was that of a mountain peak; his eyes representing Sun and moon and day and night; Vedangas and Shritis were his ear-ornaments; his body smell was that of 'Ajya' or the Ghee offering; Sruva or the sacrificial ladle is like his snout or muzzle; his voice was like the high pitch of the chanting of Sama Veda hymns; 'Udgata' or the elongated Sama Veda hymn was like his entrail or intestines; homa was his Linga or Symbol; fruits and seeds are his testicles; the altar of sacrifice was his heart; He was an Epitome of Satya Dharma and Soma Rasa was his own blood.) Thus Yajna Varaha Deva, as Nasika Soma sonita, dived deep into waters and lifted up Earth, allocated waters into Oceans and Rivers on Earth, materialised Mountains to stabilise the waters thus allocated, broadly created Sapta Dwipas on Earth, materialised Bhurbhuvassuraadi Lokas and their inhabitants on the same pattern as in the previous Kalpas before the Great Pralaya.]

From Kashyapa was born Visavaan and from the latter Vivasvanta Manu the foremost Prajapati whose son was Ikshvaaku. (Ref. Vishleshana of Sarga One of Essence of Vaalmiki Baala Ramayana). King Ikshvaaku's lineage was Kukshi-Vivukshi-Baan- Anaranya a famed King a maha tapasvi, in whose kingship there no anavrishti- akaala-chora bhaya. Anarnya's further lineage were the well known Kings Prithu- Trishanku for whom Brahmarshi Vishvamitra created a mid sky Trishanku Svarga- Dundhumaara-Yuvanaashva-Maandhata-Susumndhi- Dhruvasundhi-Shatrusudana-Asita who surrendered himself to enemy king. Maharshi Vasishtha then described about King Asita and his two wives and both of them became garbhavatis. One of the wives named Kalindi venerated Chyavana Muni of the vamsha of Maharshi Bhrigu and having prostrated to the Muni requested for an excellent son who would be a Chakravarti. Then Chyavana Muni blessed Kalindi to give birth to a glorious son. But the second wife got the news of the Muni's boon to Kalindi and got jealous and surreptitiously poisoned Kalindi but the Muni's blessing was still intact and a boy was born with 'gara' or poison and was thus named Sa-gara who eventually became Sagara Chakravarti. Then in that lineage was born 'Asamanjasa' who turned out to be a villian and was turned out of the Kingdom. In the further lineage of Kings were Ashumaan-Dileep- and the renowned Bhagiratha who brought 'akaasha ganga' by shher perseverance and tapasya to redeem the Souls of his forefathers. Bhagirath's son was 'Kakuthsa' as Shri Rama is known as of Kakutsa Vamsha. Kakutsa's son was Raghu and hence Rama is famed as Raghava. Raghava son was Kalmaashapaada who unfortunately became a victim of a Muni 'shaapa' and turned as a rakshasa for some years and after the prescribed time lag, he bacame known as King Saudasa. Kalmashapaada's son was Maha Veera Shankhana who was no doubt a 'veera parakrami' but on one his battles attained 'veera swaraga'. The further lineage included Sudarshana-Agnivarna-Sheeghraghna-Maru-Prashushrava and the famed Ambareesha- Nahusha and Naabhaga-.Aja and Suvrara- and Aja's son was Dasharatha. Rama! You are the eldest son and thus in the lineage, Kingship of Ayodhya belongs to you as the eldest son and you ought to assume its kingship as your bounded duty; tasya jyeṣṭho 'si dāyādo rāma ity abhiviśrutaḥ, tad grhāṇa svakaṁ rājyam avekṣasva jagan nṛpa/ikṣvākūṇām hi sarveṣāṁ rājā bhavati pūrvajāḥ, pūrvajenāvaraḥ putro jyeṣṭho rājye 'bhiṣicyate/ Indeed as per the lineage detailed as above, it is your bounden responsibility to assume the Kingship without a question. Shri Rama! Kindly do not infringe the hereditary's dharma of Raghuvamsha now and take up the administration of the Kindom straightaway.

Maharshi Vasishtha while seeking to persuade Rama to return to Ayodhya and assume the Kingship further advises Rama that in the context of men of virtue, three preceptors were stated as significant- Acharya-Pita- and Maata. Fathers are the roots of birth and Acharyas provide 'Jnaana'. Now, the Maharshi was the Guru of both Dasharatha and Rama too and hence the former's directive be taken as supreme. Moreover, the entire public, relatives, guides, co- kings, were unanimous in wishing Rama to Ayodhya and assume kingship. Further, Devi Kousalya as the own mother precedes priority as Scripts prescribe highest primacy as 'Maatru Devo bhava- Pitru Devo bhava- Achaarya Devo bhava'! Raghu nandana Rama! You are the emblem and store-house of Satya-Dharma-Parakrama. Bharata has been earnestly supplicating you to return to Ayodhya and assume Kingship and that would certainly not be an infringement of dharma. Then Shri Rama replied respectfully to Maharshi Vasishtha: yan mātāpitarau vṛttaṁ tanaye kurutaḥ sadā, na supratikaraṁ tat tu mātṛā pitṛā ca yat kṛtam/ yathāśakti pradānena snāpanāc chādanena ca, nityaṁ ca priyavādena tathā saṁvardhanena ca/ sa hi rājā janayitā pitā daśaratho mama, ājñātaṁ yan mayā tasya na tan mithyā bhaviṣyati/ In the context of a mother-father-son there always exists a bond of togetherness-affection and closeness. The parents as per their financial and societal limitations afford to their children the best possible physical comforts of food- bed- seating and play by the least possible hurt of the sentiments, good health and mind set. No child in their respective life spans could never ever repay the care and the anxiety of the parents. Now, when my 'janma daata' Maha Raja Dasharatha had given me an instuction and how indeed that could be disobeyed and made futile! As Maharshi and Raja Guru Vasishtha too exhorted Shri Rama and of now avail, Bharata finally addressed Sarathi Sumantra: 'Sumantra! Please spread out 'Kushaagrass' as a mat on this 'vedi' of a rock block and till such time these persuasions, arguments, and Rama's counter replies continue about my return to Ayodhya for kingship, I should follow 'aamarana deeksha' with neither water nor food, - just like a pauper brahmana would perform a 'niraahara deeksha' at the threshold of a 'dhanvaan vaishya' - right opposite Rama's kuteera'. Bharata himself spread out a 'kaushaasana' and got seated. Then Rama addressed Bharata in a vexed up tone: 'Which awful deed have I done for you Bharata as you have been harrassing me in this way! Yes; a Brahmana might do likewise but never a kshatriya!' uttiṣṭha naraśārdūla hitvaitad dāruṇaṁ vratam, puravaryām itaḥ kṣipram ayodhyām yāhi rāghava/ Raghu nandana Bharata! Do not please take over this ‘kathora vrata’; get up and go back to Ayodhya instantly!’ Bharata then addressed the public seeing the happenings and asked them to express their views and their representative replied: te tam ūcur mahātmānaṁ pauraḥjānapadā janāḥ, kākutsthā abhijānīmahaḥ samyag vadati rāghavaḥ/ eṣo ‘pi hi mahābhāgaḥ pitur vacasi tiṣṭhati, ata eva na śaktāḥ smo vyāvartayitum añjasā/ ‘Sirs, what Sri Bharata has been pleading for most certainly is justified; yet, Shri Rama has been consistently and most sincerely emphasising the truth of ‘pitru agjna’ and hence his inability to return’. As the public too expressed their balanced view, Rama addressed Bharata to heed the public opinion of dharma and thus withdraw his ‘kathora vrata’. Bharata stood up and declared having touched water as mark of the pratigjna and asserted: ‘May this be clearly understood by the public, the Ministers and all: Neither I had solicited my father or my mother about the kingdom and at the same time I am not agreeable that Rama should leave for vana vaasa. Yet, as Rama insists for ‘pitru vaakya paripaalata’, I too should follow suit and perform ‘vana vaasa’! ‘Shri Rama was taken aback at Bharata’s decisiveness and addressed Bharata that late father’s instruction was double edged that Rama should leave for fourteen years and Bharata should rule during that period. anena dharmasīlena vanāt pratyāgataḥ punaḥ, bhrātrā saha bhaviṣyāmi pṛthivyāḥ patir uttamaḥ/ vṛto rājā hi kaikeyā mayā tad vacanaṁ kṛtam, anṛtān mocayānena pitaraṁ taṁ mahīpatim/ ‘Therefore, I will most certainly return after fourteen years and assume the kingship; as Devi Kaikeyi sought the two boons, please do accept the kingship for fourteen years and ensure that late father’s directive be not infringed upon!’

As Shri Rama thus has almost got convinced Bharata that after all, he should return back to Ayodhya after the interregnum of fourteen years of vana vaasa any way, the Rishis tried to clinch Bharata's wavering mind especially as they possess the futuristic vision of Ravana's killing by Shri Rama and therefore made the conclusive persuasion of Bharata. As the group of Maharshis thus supported his assurance of returning back thereafter, Rama complemented the Maharshis. Bharata too was somewhat softened his outlook and stated: 'As you surely are aware the 'kula dharma' emphasizes that the eldest son only is eligible to Kingship and only to please my mother I might perhaps be constrained to agree to a mere and purely temporary dispensation of maintaining the name of the kingdom which might please only my mother; however, surely I would not be able to meet the expectations of the public of the kingdom. jñātayaś ca hi yodhās ca mitrāṇi suhṛdaś ca naḥ, tvām eva pratikāṅkṣante parjanyam iva karṣakāḥ/ idaṁ rājyaṁ mahāprājña sthāpaya pratipadya hi, śaktimān asi kākutstha lokasya paripālanaḥ/ Just as a farmer keeps on waiting for the close of your vana vaasa, the kingdom's public, sena, friends, relatives should certainly be awaiting your return. So saying, Bharata collapsed and touched Rama's 'paadukas' the wooden foot wear. Rama lifted up and said: Bharata! You are by nature very modest but surely you possess the in-built capability of administering the universe. Besides, you have the masterly ability of maneuvering and tactical treatment from the ministers and wellwishers. As you realise, respected father's ought be preserved, even if Moon might lose its shine, Himalayas be bereft of ice, or oceans might transgress their boundaries. What mother Kaikeyi might have acted out of selfish interest in your own favour be not entered in your mind keep normalcy for what had happened. Then Bharata replied with great devotion: adhirohārya pādābhyām pādūke hemabhūṣite, ete hi sarvalokasya yogakṣemaṁ vidhāsyataḥ/ so 'dhiruḥya naravyāghraḥ pādūke hy avaruḥya ca, prāyacchat sumahātejā bharatāya mahātmane/ Arya! The pair of your 'paadukas' be kindly rested on me as a symbol of 'loka raksha' and universal peace and security! Then Shri Rama obliged accordingly. Then Bharata asserted: sa pādūke te bharataḥ pratāpavān; svalaṁkṛte saṁparigrhya dharmavit, pradakṣiṇaṁ caiva cakāra rāghavaṁ; cakāra caivottamanāgamūrdhani/ athānupūrvyāt pratipūjya taṁ janāṁ; gurūṁś ca mantriprakṛtīs tathānujau, vyasarjayad rāghavavaṁśavardhanaḥ; sthitaḥ svadharme himavān ivācalaḥ/ 'Raghu nandana! I swear by these Rama Padukas that for the next fourteen years wear jataa-cheeras and consume only roots and fruits awaiting your arrival outside Ayodhya and by retaining your padukas on a throne and carry on my Raja Dharmas.' Shri Rama was mightily pleased. He further stated that on his behalf as also from Sita, Bharata should safeguard Devi Kaikeyi and never get annoyed with her. Thereafter sa pādūke te bharataḥ pratāpavān; svalaṁkṛte saṁparigrhya dharmavit, pradakṣiṇaṁ caiva cakāra rāghavaṁ; cakāra caivottamanāgamūrdhani/ athānupūrvyāt pratipūjya taṁ janāṁ; gurūṁś ca mantriprakṛtīs tathānujau, vyasarjayad rāghavavaṁśavardhanaḥ; sthitaḥ svadharme himavān ivācalaḥ/ Bharata then performed a parikrama around the 'padukas' and kept on his head as a king on an elephant head. Further, Shri Rama having thanked the public that arrived from the Kingdom, Gurus, Mantris and both Bharata and Shatrughnas. At that time Devis Koushalya and other mothers kept on crying away as Rama-Sita-Lakshmanas returned to their 'Kuteera'.

You are an oustanding human being who is not only intrepid warrior but an exemplary 'sheela vritta vida' or of excellent tradition of 'sadaachaara'. Indeed it is not surprising that waterflows are well aware of their directions and you too are of features of great virtue as well. You are right within the footprints of your great father King Dasharatha who too was a dharma premi and dharmatma!' Then Bharata and all others thanked the Maharshi Bharadwaja and returned Ayodhya. Bharata then realised and adressed Sumantra as to in which pitiable state that Ayodhya was lying!

As Bharata entered Ayodhya, it was early evening when streets were empty, none was on the roads, all the doors were shut, and the night was of ‘krishna paksha’ with moon in the wane. The city was in mourning as neither veda ghoshanas by brahmanas, normal business in the markets, nor groups of public in the public gardens. There are no widespread flavors of scents, nor smells of sweet drinks, sounds of horse carriages, elephant and chariot rides? As Shri Rama left, the city has gone lonely, silent, lifeless and totally inactive. What is worse, the inhabitants are dull, vexed up, ever cursing the fate and with no desire and hope of recovery!

Bharata then having left the mothers at Ayodhya sought the permission of the Gurus to proceed to Nandigraama as he stated that he was unable to stay and administer from Ayodhya with the unending memories of his father and in the absence of Shri Rama the genuine king of Ayodhya. Having decided to leave Chitrakoota, Sita Rama Lakshmanas proceeded to Maharshi Atri-Maha Pativrata Anasuya's ashram. Maharshi Atri warmly welcomed them and he specially introduced Sita Devi to the illustrated Anasuya. Then Maharshi described the magnanimity and excellence of his wife and narrated an ancient situation when there was 'anaavrishti' or several years of rainlessness and the world was dry, cropland and total dryness. Then Devi Anasuya observed severe most tapasya on the banks of River Mandakinis feeble flows for innumerable years and the situation changed gradually. Rama! This outstanding Devi is therefore worthy of prostration, especially by Devi Sita. Then the Maharshi suggested a private meeting with each other. Anasuya was then extremely old and skinned up while her body shivered seriously. Devi Anasuya then addressed Devi Sita that she was happy as the latter had always followed the path of dharma. tyaktvā jñātijanaṃ sīte mānam ṛddhiṃ ca mānini, avaruddham vane rāmaṃ diṣṭyā tvam anugacchasi/ nagarastho vanastho vā pāpo vā yadi vāśubhaḥ, yāsām strīṇām priyo bhartā tāsām lokā mahodayāḥ/ Whether your husband lived in a city or a forest, in times of good or bad, a woman is worthy of following him with esteem. There could be no other closer relative than him but is the singular instrument to reach heavens after death. na tv evaṃ avagacchanti guṇa doṣam asat striyaḥ, kāmavaktavyahṛdayā bhartṛnāthās caranti yāḥ/ prāpnuvanty ayaśas caiva dharmabhramṣaṃ ca maithilī, akārya vaśam āpannāḥ striyo yāḥ khalu tad vidhāḥ/ A wife who seeks to rule over and control the husband would hardly realise her own weaknesses and thus is timid and a confirmed sinner. Such sinners invariably get entangled in the prison of their misdoings without salvation. Mithileshvari! Such branded women lose their way out of the vicious circles and at the end regret but to no avail. Therefore, Devi Sita, follow the sati dharma always, hold Shri Ram as the highest esteem all through your whole life. That is the singular path of fame and success, come what may!

Vishleshana on Maha Parivrata Anasuya: Brahmasi Narada eulogised Pativrata severally in his hymns and Devis Sarasavati-Lakshmi-Parvati sought to test her chastity and requested the Tri Murtis who approached Anasuya in the absence of husband Maharshi Atri. They as the 'atithis' asked Anasuya for bhojana but desired to serve it in nude state. Anasuya agreed but splashed them with mantric waters and made them as toddlers. The Tri Devis on knowing about this repented and requested the kids back to normalcy. One version of the incident shows that the Tri Murtis merged into the three headed Dattatreya. Markandeya Purana also describes the Maha Paativratya of Anasuya. Markandeya Purana states: The exemplary Parivratya of Devi Anasuya: There was a Brahmana named Kaushika who was a leper by virtue of his fate but he had Kaushiki as the 'Pativrata' devoted to her husband. She would perform all physical services to the husband of cleaning, washing and all other ablutions to this extent of removing body rejects and the blood oozing from his wounds. The disabled husband was short tempered and nagging but she considered him as her Deva and worshipped him, fulfilling each and every desire of his. Once he longed for an attractive prostitute in bed as he saw her in the morning and insisted for her by the night. The wife searched for her all over with a view to beg her to sleep with him despite his contagious disease; she would try to locate her some how, offer her lot of money and also try to convince her in the name of mercy! The wife carried the husband on her shoulders at the night time but unfortunately due to darkness, she tripped on the road side and his legs hit a Sage Mandya in deep meditation. The angry Sage gave a curse that whosoever disturbed his meditation would die before the Sun rise by the next morning. Having heard the curse of the Sage, the 'Pativrata' made the return 'Pratigya' (challenging vow) that Sun would not appear on the Sky and the night would never be terminated. All the Devas were frightened at the Challenge of the Pativrata and wondered what would happen to the entire Universe in the absence of Swadhyaya, Vashatkaara, Swadha and Swaahaa viz. Sun God, as a result of this unfortunate development! In the absence of days and nights, there would not be months and Seasons, no 'Ayanaas' (Uttarayana and Dakshinayana), no count of Years, and no concept of 'Kaala Gyana' or of Time. If there were no Sun Rise, there would not be 'Snaanaas' nor daily Rituals, no Yagnas, no offerings to Devas through Agni (Fire), no crops to generate food due to drought and thus Universal Balance would be shaken up. Devas prayed to Brahma who advised them to approach the 'Maha Pativrata' Devi Anasuya, the wife of Sage Atri and daughter of Kardama Muni. Anasuya advised Kaushiki about the enormous loss to the World as a result of her Pratigna. Women have the unique task of performing service to husbands while men have other duties like Rituals and that she was proud of Kaushiki as a Pativrata. Even Gods descended to request her and that itself was a proof of her achievement. But the most essential task at that hour would be to facilitate Sun to rise and hence should withdraw her Pratigya. Finally Anasuya declared: Yatha Bhatru Samamna anyamaham pashyami Devatam, thena satyaena viproyam punarjeevatvanamah. (If I had never known any Deity as important as my husband, then the Brahmana Kaushik would be reborn afresh devoid of any disease!). Thanks to Anasuya's intervention, the crisis was averted and the Devas blessed her that Brahma, Vishnu and Maheswara would be born with Rajasika Guna as Soma (Moon), Vishnu as Dattatreya with Satvika Guna and Siva as Durvasa with Tamasika Guna.

Counselling Devi Sita further about the Pativrata Dharmas, Maha Pativrata Anasuya complemented the former that Sita herself was an outstanding woman; Sita apparently stressed a woman's teacher should be a husband essentially. She further said that even if husband were a pauper, or insignificant in the society, even then she would still be engaged in his service. Sita further asserted that happily her husband Rama being an outstanding being was also extremely kind, self controlled, and deeply attached to her as in his esteem like his own father or mother. Also, Rama treats his other mothers on par with his own too. Once Devi Kousalya took me to a lonely garden and taught me the basic precepts of a pativrata; and indeed those principles are deeply imprinted in my heart. sāvitṛī patiśuśrūṣāṁ kṛtvā svarge mahīyate, tathā vṛttiś ca yātā tvaṁ patiśuśrūṣayā divam/ variṣṭhā sarvanārīṇām eṣā ca divi devatā, rohiṇī ca vinā candram muhūrtam api drśyate/ evamvidhās ca pravarāḥ striyo bhartṛdṛghavratāḥ, devaloke mahīyante puṇyena svena karmaṇā/ Sati Savitri who dedicated herself with her husband Satyavan as well as You Devi are truly exemplary! Devi Rohini too would not suffer her husband Chandra Deva's separation even for a minute. Like wise other Pativrataas too dedicate themselves to their husbands and are hence honoured in the swarga loka.

2: Devi Rohini: As Prajapati Daksha married off all his twenty seven daughters to Soma, the latter was ignoring all the daughters, excepting Devi Rohini. The 27 daughters married to Chandra are Kṛttika, Rohinī, Mrigasheersha, Aardra, Punarvasu, Purbabhadrapada, Pushya, Aslesha, Magha, Svaati, Chitra, Purvaphalguni, Hasta, Dhanishtha, Vishaakha, Anuraadha, Jyeshtha, Moola, Purvaashaadha, Uttaraashaadha, Shravana, Uttaraphalguni, Shatabhisha, Uttarbhadrapada, Revati, Ashwini, Bharani. These 27 wives of Chandra are 27 Nakshatras (the constellations) which are on the moon's orbit. The rest of them complained to their father Daksha who reprimanded Soma to behave but Soma ignored the repeated warnings of Daksha. Out of exasperation, Daksha cursed Soma to gradually decline and finally disappear. In the absence of Soma, there were far reaching adverse effects in the Universe. Devas including Vanaspati felt Soma's absence and so did human beings, trees, animals and worst of all medicinal plants, herbs and so on. The Sky was dark and the Stars too lost the shine. Chandra prayed to Lord Shiva for long at Prabhasa Tirtha and since Daksha's curse was irreversible a compromise was made that during Krishna paksha Chandra would wane and wax during Shukla Paksha. However, this formula proved defective as Chandra was sinking in the Ocean causing natural sufferings by way of non availability of herbs and so on and at the request of Devas to Shiva again, Chandra left only with one of the 'Kala', the Lord gracefully wore the Crescent Moon on His 'jataajuta mastaka' for good, enabling Chandra to wane and wax every month ever since! As Devas approached Vishnu, He advised the solution of Churning the Ocean by both Devas and Danavas and latter too agreed to the proposal for the lure of securing 'Amrit'. In the process of churning, Moon was given birth again. This had brought great relief to Devas, human beings whose 'Ekadasha Indriyas' (Eleven Body parts), 'Pancha Bhutas' (Five Elements), Solah Kshetra Devatas, Trees and Medicines. Even Rudra's head was without Soma and so did water. Lord Brahma blessed Pournima thithi and selected the day for worship to Chandra Deva when fast is viewed propitious along with token amount of money and material as charity. That specific day 'Yava' Bhojan (Barley food) or barley made material is considered to be blessed a person with Gyan (Knowledge), radiance, health, prosperity, foodgrains and salvation.]

Stanza 13 continued: Maha Pativrata Anasuya then caressed Sita and stated: Sita! Why do you not ask me for a boon! Devi Sita was taken aback and said that the counselling would be more useful than any boons! Anasuya was further appeasative of the reply and gave her a celestial necklace, valuable clothes, ornaments, and an 'Anga Raaga Anulepana' or a body lotion. Anasuya exclaimed that when she would approach Shri Rama with affection, she would be like Lakshmi to Maha Vishnu! Having thus accepted the gifts, Sita touched the feet of Anasuya and sat endearingly. Anasuya then cajoled and asked Sita carassingly: 'I learn that you married Rama in a 'swayamvara'; why don't you give me some details! Then Sita narrated: 'There was a King named Janaka a symbol of dharma, satya, and yajna kaaryas. In a bhu yajna, he tilled land for good progeny. And he hit a box underneath the tilled land and he found a female child full of earth and dust; as he was issueless other wise she adopted me as his daughter. At that very moment there was a voice from the high sky resounding 'Yes, King Janaka;! You indeed are the

Janaka of this baby! Then he handed me to his prime queen. As I grew up and came of marriageable age, Janaka started getting concerned that it was time to have the daughter wedded. Ayonijaam hi maam jnaatvaa naathyagacchhat sa chintayan, sadrusham chaabhirupam cha Mahipaalah patim mama/ Knowing well that I was not born to a human, the King was doubly worried. Then he got an idea to announce a 'swayam vara'. Maha yagjne tadaa tasya Varunena mahaatmanaa, dattam dhanurvaram preetyaa tuuni chaakshusya saayakou/ Asanchaalyam manushyaischa yatnenaapi cha gouravaat, tatra shaktaa namayitum svapneshtvapi Naraadhipaah/ Coincidentally, in one Maha Yajna, Varuna Deva bestowed a celestial dhanus with arrows of countlessness. Normally, that kind of a celestial 'dhanush baanaas' might not even move about, let alone lift it and much less aim at by even in dreams. Having described thereabout, King Janaka made an announcement among all the Kings of fame the world over. Several Kings of name, fame, and physical -mental grit had come and gone failing away. Sudeerdhasya tu kaalasya Ragavoyam mahaadyutih, Vishvaamitrena sahito yajnam drashtam samaagatahh/Lakshmanena saha bhraatraa Raamah satyaparaakramah, Vishvaamitrastu dharmaatmaa mam pitraa supujitah/ Thereafter a very long gap of time, Maha Tjasvee Raghukula nandana Satya paraakrami Shri Rama accompanied by his younger brother Lakshmana was brought by Vishvamitra Maharshi to attend Janaka Yajna to Mithila. King Janaka paid all respects to the Maharshi and introduced Rama Lakshmanaas who desired to look at the Shiva dhanush gifted by Varuna Deva, while Janaka showed the dhanush. Then: Nimeshaantara maatrena tadaanamyaMaha balah, jyaam samaaroaya jjatiti poorayaamaasa veeryavaan/ Tenaapurayitaa vegaammadhye bhagnam dvidhaa dhanuh, tasya shabdobhasvad bheemah poorayaa maasa veeryavaan/ Maha bala Shri Rama lifted the dhanush, sounded it and straightened it at ease. As he pulled the dhanush fast and firm, it was broken into two pieces. Then there was such roaring and earth shaking sound as though of the breaking of Indra Dhanush reverberating again and again. Thereafter, King Janaka requested and welcomed King Dasharatha to please consent for the auspicious wedding. On arrival at Videha Kingdom, father in law and mothers in law arrived and my Kanyadaana was performed with pomp and glory. Thereafter my sister Urmila was wedded too with the consent of all concerned too. Devi Anasuya, this was how my swayamvara was concluded auspiciously!

Dharmajnaani Anasuya having heard about ‘Sita Svayamvara’ touched Sita’s head affectionately replied the crisp and thought provoking narration: Madhura bhashini Sita! The Sun set time is nearing, the groups of busy birds are now returning back to their nests, Munis dressed up in ‘valkalas’ after bathings are returnig to their ‘ashramas’, Mahasrhi Atri has just concluded his evening agnihotra karyakrama too even as the smokes like the grey necks of doves are gradually flying up and up; the distant lines of high trees are visible with their branches and leaves hiding away the views of directions; even animals like deers are gradually falling on the grounds of the ‘tapovanas’. Sita! The spell of darkness on earth ushers in the twinkling of Stars on the sky while the brightness of Moon provides an ideal cap of the well spread carpet. Dear daughter Mithileshvari Kumari! You may now leave me as it is time for you to serve Ramachandra as you have indeed expressed for me your sweet words and statements. Do please wear these pieces of jewellery and clothes for my satisfaction and enhancement of your body grace further to please Shri Rama.’ So saying, Devi Anasuya bid farewell to Sita who like a Deva Kanya stepped forward to Shri Rama. Next morning, both Maharshi Atri and Pativrata shiromani Anasuya granted them leave as Sita Rama Lakshmanas prostrated to the famed Maharshi couple. Taavoochuste vanacharaastaapasaa dharmacharinah, vanasya tasya sanchaaram raakshasaih samabhiputam/ Rakshaamsi purushudaadaani naanaa rupaani Raghava, vasantyasmin mahaaranye taan nivaaraya Raghava/ Taavoochuste vanacharaastaapasaa dharmacharinah, vanasya tasya sanchaaram raakshasaih samabhiputam/ Rakshaamsi purushudaadaani naanaa rupaani Raghava, vasantyasmin mahaaranye taan nivaaraya Raghava/ Then the Maharshi couple addressed Rama Lakshmanas: ‘Raghu nandanaas! In these dense forests nara bhaksha rakshasas and human blood favorites are always encountered. Raghavendra! Do very kindly try to kill them or kick them out for the sake of peace and our dharmic duties of japa-homa- nirantara karya kramas!’ Having thus requested the kshatriya veera kumaras, the Maharshi couple bid farewell to continue on to the Aranya Khanda of Ramaayana!

INRODUCTION

As Brahma Maanasa Putras of Sanaka-Sanandana-Sanaatana-Sanat Kumaras were interrupted by Vaikuntha Dwaara Palakaas of Jaya Vijayas, the Kumaras cursed to be born in ten successive births of Evil Energies of the Time Cycle. Hence Maha Vishnu was necessitated to assume Ten 'Avataaraas' to vindicate Dharma and Nyaya again and again. An 'Avatara' (Incarnation) is like the lighting of a lamp from another lamp; like-wise, Bhagavan is a manifestation suited to specific purpose and end-use. Among such Avatars of Vishnu, the first well-known manifestation of Matsya the Fish which retrieved the Sacred Vedas stolen from Brahma by Makarasura. The temptation to Danavas to obtain 'Amrit', 'Samudra Mathana' was set as Manthara Mountain as the churning rod, Maha Sarpa Vasuki was the string with which to tie up the Mountain and Bhagavan himself as balancing Shakti as the Avatar of Kurma to ensure that the Meru Mountain would be made stable and steady. As Hiranyaakasha, the mighty son of Devi Diti pulled up Bhu Devi and dragged her into the depths of the Ocean down to the 'atholokas', Lord Vishnu assumed the incarnation of Maha Varaha and killed himas Devi Prithvi heaved a great sigh of relief. Hiranyakashipu got on to his wits' end, when his own son Prahlada was forced to show that Narayana any where, say in a Pillar, he broke it with his mace and there emerged the fierce Man-Lion, Narasimha, who had half-body as a giant Lion roaring and killed the demon. Bhagavan agreed to be born to Aditi and Kashyapa as Vamana the foremost human as dwarf; grew up as a Brahmachari, learnt Vedas, sporting 'Mriga Charma', Danda and wooden footwear appeared at the Yagna by daanava Bali Chakravarti and asked for a charity of three feet of land. Vamana then assumed a sky body and measured one foot as Earth, Samudras, Parvatas; second foot as Sky, Nakshtras, Planets, Deva- Brahmaadi lokas. Even as the second foot still fell short of the required size, Vamana had to push Bali's head down to 'Rasatala'. As Manu prayed to Vishnu as his son, the Lord agreed for Preservation of Dharma and affirmed: Paritranaaya Sadhunaam Vinaasaaya cha Dushkrutaam, Dharma samsthaapanaarthaya sambhavaami yuge yugey! (I shall no doubt take human birth to revive Dharma and punish Evil from time to time). As promised by Vishnu, Swayambhu was born as King Dasaratha and gave Shri Rama in Treta Yuga. Being a human, Rama was subject to the weaknesses of kama-krodha-mohas but being an ideal most specimen of humanity he was prone to cryings and wailings, bursts of anger and anguish, high possessiveness and frustration, passion and compassion. But, all rolled in yet covered by supreme and unique qualities of idealism, virtue and justice, devotion and veneration overshadowed by the single motivation of 'Pitru Vaakya Paripalana'. All these traits were at display in the current series of Essence of Vaaklmiki Ramayana, especially in the instant Aranya Ramaayana, since the Baala and Ayodhya series had since seen attempted.

As I approached with humility with a request to translate Ramayana, HH Vijayendra Saraswati of 'Kanchi Peetha' had spontaneously instructed: 'Try Vaalmiki Ramayana, but with vishleshanas'. It is that command which has generated ready inspiration and determination, quite apart from the innate power of the directive itself. For over a decade and half He has inspired me to take to translations of the essence of Ashtaadasha Puranas, Ashtaadasha Upanishads, Dharma Sindhu, Brahma Sutras, Manu Smriti, Soundarya Lahari, Bhagavad Gita, and scripts on Lakshmi-Sarasvati- Gayatri- Surya-Chandras etc. My earnest prostrations to Him by the self and family with all humility, faith and dedication.

ESSENCE OF VALMIKI ARANYA RAMAYANA

Introduction:

Brahmarshi Narada taught Brahmana Vidyaarshi Pracheta the ‘two golden principles of not preaching what he himself would not practise and take to the name and thought of Rama till his death’. The boy learnt the Mantra ‘Mara’ or to Kill- kill ‘ahamkara’, ‘shadvarga shatrus’ of excessive desires, anger, selfishness and avarice, infatuation, ego and jealousy. Constant repetition of ‘Mara’ turned as ‘Rama’ gradually developed ‘valmikaas’ or anthills till his ‘atma saakshaatkaara’ or Self Realisation and eventually came to be reputed as Valmiki Maharshi. Once when he was bathing in the clear waters of Ganges he sighted two doves while mating but were shot to death by a hunter and the Maharshi cried :maa nishaada pratishthaa tvamagamaḥ shasshvatih samaah, yat krouncha mithunaa -dekam avadheeh kaama mohitam/ Nishaada! There could never be rest for long years till eternity, for you killed the mating birds unsuspectingly! This is the ‘prerepana’ or the inspiration of the illustrious scripting of Valmiki Ramayana! Maharshi Valmiki asked Brahmarshi Narada: Konyasmin saampratam loke gunavaan kascha veeryavaan, dharmagjnascha kritagjnascha veeryavaan, dharmagjnascha kritagjnascha Satyavaakyo dhridhavitatah’ as to who indeed was the Guna- Veerya-Dharmagjna- Kritagjna- Satya Vaadi- Dhridha Sankalpa or of the superior traited- brave- virtuous-ever grateful - truthful and decisive on Earth during the Treta Yuga! Ramayana is relevant now as much as in the past -present and for ever as narrated in Six Khandas or sugar cane stems viz. Baala Khanda-Ayodhya Khanda- Aranya Khanda-Kishkinda Khanda-Sundara Khanda-Yuddha Khanda. Baala Khanda comprises seventy seven Sargas- Ayodhya Khanda one hundred nineteen Sargas-Aranya Khanda has seventy three Sargas-Kishkinda Khanda has sixty seven Sargas-Sundara Khanda comprises of sixty eight Sargas- Yuddha Khanda has one twenty eight Sargas. Additionally Uttara Khanda has one hundred eleven Sargas.The current presentation is relevant to Aranya Khanda- the third Piece of the Sugar Cane.

Restrospective :

Baala Khanda

The overview of Ramayana by Maharshi in his trance- Valmiki Ramayana of 24000 stanzas was sung by Lava- Kusha kumars of ‘Shri Rama -Devi Sita’ at a Conference of Muni Mandali before Shri Rama- From the Vaivaswa Manvantara to the Ikshvaku Vamsha at Ayodhya till King Dasharatha to Shri Rama- King Dashararatha-Vasishta- Ministers plan to perform Ashvamedha Yagna and despatch Sumantra the Charioteer request to request Maharshi Rishyashringa- Historic Arrival of Rishyashringa heralding the season to rains- There after Vasishtas gave to the King ‘yagjna diksha’- removed evil influences - made arrangements of the yagjna like architecture, construction and maintenance; groups of jyotishadi vedangas; workforce; nata- naatya -nartaka groups,cooking, culinary,construction of colonies, conference Halls etc.Ashvamedha Yagna executed gloriously- Putra Kaamekshi Yagjna- Celestials preparing for arrival of Maha Purusha-Devas and Indra approached Vishnu to desrtoy Ravasnasura as Vishnu said only in human form Rama, Dasharatha’s son could to so. At the Yagjna, a Maha Purusha emerged from the flames and handed over a ‘payasa patra’ to Dasharatha to distribute to his three queens as instructed.As Rama-Lakshmana-Bharata-Shatrugnas were born thus, Indra and Devas manifested

‘Vaanaaras’ including Hanuman with Ashta Siddhis. Dasharatha distributes ‘payasa’ to queens Kousalya-Sumitra- Kaikeyi -Samskararas to Ramaadi Kumaras; Arrival of Brahmarshi Vishvamitra at Ayodhya to King Dasharatha. Vasishtha assured Dasharatha about Shri Rama’s safety in safeguarding the Vishvamitra Yajna as the satisfied King allowed Rama Lakshmanas and teach Bala-Atibala. The trio reached Angamuni Ashram-Sarayu-Ganga confluence at Malada- Kurusha Villages where Indra hid-the reason was that Indra killed brahmana Vritraasura.-They enter ‘Tataka Vana’-Rama Lakshmanas encounter Tataka and Vishvamitra prevails on stree hatya-Vishvamitra teaches most of archery mantras to Rama Lakshmanas-Vishvamitra takes Rama brothers to the ‘Vamana Ashrama’ -Yagnas spoilt in other ashramas by Maricha Subahus punished by Rama-‘Ashramavashis’ conveyed about Janaka’s Yajna and Shiva Dhanush- Vishvamitra seeks take heros to Siddhashrama by difficult terrain and explains about adjacent Kusha Desha, King Kushanabha, Apsara daughters and Vayu Deva-By boat from Shonabhadra to Ganges, Vishvamitra explains about flows of Ganges - birth of Skanda- King Sagara’s tapasya for sons- queen Sumati begets 60,000 strong sons while Keshini just only Asamanjasa.Sagara planned Ashvamesha yagna, Indra stole the Sacrificial horse- Sumati’s strong sons searched bhuloka-and patalas with pomp and noise-Kapila Muni curses the sons in patala to become stones-Asamanjasa goes in search and conveys the result to Sagara who dies- King Asamanjasa gaveup hopes and so does his son Amshuman and the latter’s son Dilip. But Bhagiradha takes up the thread and prays to Ganga from skies at Gokarna Tirtha.Bhagiratha standing by foot fingers, invoked Maha Deva-Crossing Ganga, Rama approaching Vaishali asked about Deva Danavas-Having failed to secure Amrit, Diti- daitya mother-seeks to destroy Indra- Diti fell asleep unconsciously, Indra entered her Garbha with his ‘Vajraayudha’, saw the fully grown up boy inside ,cajoled him saying ‘don’t cry, don’t cry’ and sliced the child into seven parts and further to forty nine sub-parts-Vishvamitra stated that they were at that very place where above instances had occurred when there was an Ikshvaaku Kings Kakutstha- Sumati and then proceed to Mithila the kingdom of Janaka Raja!Sumati showed the way to Gautama Ashram en route Mithila.- Entering King Janaka’s Yagnyashaala, Vishvamitra introduces Rama Lalshmanas and their acts of glory so far to King Janaka and his Purohita ‘Shataananda’-Having congratulated Rama Lakshmanas, Shatananda makes a detailed coverage on the lifestory of Vishvamitra who as a Kshatriya King through tapsyas became a Brahmarshi!King Vishvamitra sighted Shabali Kamadhenu and demands it but was refused; in a battle Shabala smashed the army but the latter took to severe tapasya.Brahma blesses Vishvamitra be the status of Maharshi-Trishanku desires to reach swarga being mortal and Vishvamitra creates a mid- sky swarga with his tapo bala; -Ambarisha performs Yajna at Pushkara but as sacrifice animal was stolen, a ‘nara pashu boy’ was arranged - Vishvamitra took pity but to no avail; got entangled instead by co-Munis.-Vishvamitra disturbed by ‘Menaka’ at Pushkara, then shifted to heights of himalayas when ‘Rambha’ disturbed too-Ultimatelyeven as Indra ever stole his food, Maharshi stopped his breathing but kept on his tapsya on Brahma, and the latter conferred the title of ‘Brahmarshi’! Vishvamitra conveys Rama’s desire to show Shiva Dhanush and Janaka gives the background of the Dhanush ; King Nimi was gifted Shiva Dhanush at his son Devarata’s wedding; Devi Sita as ‘Ayonija’ as Janaka tills bhuyajna.-Rama lifted up the Shiva Dhanush as if it were a toy, straightened it with great ease, held the middle part, and as though of a child play broke into two pieces. That breaking resulted in earthshaking like reverberations.King Janaka said:Once wedded to Shri Rama, my daughter ought to be proud to his life partner and bring in glory to Janaka vamsha! Brahmarshi said: tathaastu!- King Janaka sent a messenger to King Dasharatha to state: Shri Rama in the midst of all of us had managed the control and breaking of the age old Shiva Dhanush and as per my repeated announcements would like to propose my daughter Devi Sita to Shri Rama in a wedding ceremony and therefore request you to attend

the same along with your queens and the entire retinue. Besides Rama and Devi Sita, may we also propose the wedding of Lakshmana with my younger daughter Urmila too- Dasharadha was pleased and addressed Vasishtha and Ministers to leave next morning -Accompanied by Gurus, wives and intimate and other relatives and friends, King Dasharatha was happy and blissful and instructed Sumantra to let the royal treasurer carry surplus funds of cash, jewellery, nine gems ahead and for their safety there ought to be fool proof defence arrangements. A four day procession with needed halts on way moved on with plentiful food and drinks. On their arrival at the outskirts of the Kingdom, King Janaka made elaborate reception with music, song, dance and ecstatic welcome showers of flowers-In an open Janaka Sabha, Vasishtha narrated the glory of Ikshvaku Vamsha: Brahma Deva the Swayambhu manifested Marichi, from the latter was born Kashyapa whose son was Vivisvaan as the latter gave birth to Vaivasvata Manu. Manu was the foremost Prajapati and from Manu was born Ikshvaku the first King of Ayodhya. Then were highlighted: Pruthu-Mandhata-Sagara- Bhagiratha- Ambareesha-Nahusha-Yayati-Naabhaga- Aja- and Dasharatha- King Janaka explained about his vamsha from renowned King Nimi ,whose son named Mithibeing the ever first Janaka as the ‘vamsha’ known as of Janakas. Then he introduced Kushadhvaja his younger brother desirous of getting his two daughters to Bharata and Shatrughna and declared Mandaveeka and Shutakeerti as their respective wives. respectively.- Public Declarations were made in the presence of Kings, Maharshis, and the public and hectic preparations were made; The vivahika vedika was got ready befitting the status and magnificence of two great Kings. Then Janaka welcomed the brides and bridegrooms.-- After the festivities concluded, guests were showered with precious gifts, the groom's party moved back on the return journey but a terrible sand storm was faced. Parashu Rama arrived shouting ‘Rama Rama’ with terrible anger as the Shiva Dhanush was broken. Dasharatha tried to pacify but with anger, handed over Vishnu Dhanush and challenging Rama to break it if at all possible. An angry Rama not only lifted the dhanush as though Vishnu did against Madhukaitabha daityas but stated that with that very dhanush he could as well demolish Parashu Rama too! An utterly humiliated Parashu Rama was then instructed to return to Mahendra Mountain for ever!- As the return procession finally reached the city of Ayodhya , it was ready with dhvaja-patakas, welcome sounds of drums and music, dances and decorations. Dasharatha along with his sons and new daughters-in-law along with the Queens made an auspicious entry. Later, Raja Kumaras shared royal responsibilities. Rama and Sita became famed as Vishnu and Lakshmi.

On entering the interior most nucleus of Dandakaranya, Shri Rama-Devi Sita-Lakshmanas had witnessed countless Tapasvi Muni Ashramas with excitement. The most common sight visualised was of Valkala Vastra Dhaaris akin to Surya Mandala on Bhutala, which should be resplendent even to Rakshasas would shudder to enter. The groups of the Ashramas are indeed the refuge points to all the creatures like Vanya mrigas and pakshis which move about freely with fearlessness and risks of life. Their entries and the surroundings are spic and span that ‘apsaras’ often organise nritya-naatakas or dance-drama performance of shows for the entertainment of the Tapasvis. The ashramas are endowed with notable yagna shalaas, ‘sruvaadi yagna paatraadi’ equipment, mriga charmas, kushas, samidhaas, jalapurna kalashaas, and fresh and aromatic flower garlands. Aranya Vrikshas yield wild fruits and nuts and spices aplenty. Balihomārcitaṁ puṇyaṁ brahmaghoṣanināditam/ Besides homa prakriyas, Bali Vaishvadeva are the integral parts of all the Ashramas apart from the echoes of veda mantras as built in to the common living.

[Vishleshana on Bali Vaishva Deva: Vaishwadeva is significant as there are five major sources of ‘Jeeva Himsa’ called ‘Panchasuna’: Vaishvadevah prakartavyah Pancha Sunaapanuttaye, Khandani peshani chulli jala kumbhotha maarjani/ (‘Khanadani’ or cutting vegetables etc by the Kitchen Cutter made of iron or sharp metals, Peshani or pounding and pasting appliances, retaining water in and cleaning of vessels; besides washing the material and sweeping and floor cleaning). Vaishwadeva is one way of reducing the impact of killing the ‘Pranis’ by way of these main routine means. This Prakarana of Vaishvadeva commences from the mornings but not as in the Agni Karyas in the evenings. Hence the Sankalpa: Pratassaayam VaishvaDeva karishye/ In fact, there are Pancha Maha Yagnas that are required to be performed on daily basis viz. Brahma Yagna, Bhuta Yagna, Pitru Yagna, and Manushya Yagna. Rigvedis consider three Yagnas viz. Deva Yagna, Bhuta Yagna and Brahma Yagna; Manushya Yagna is to provide food to Human Beings. Griha pakva havishvaannaistaila kshaaraadi varjitaih, Juhuyaatsirpashaabhyaktaih Gruhyegnou loukikey pivaa/ Yasminngnoupachedannam tasmin homo vidhiyate/ (The 'Havyanna' or the food which is cooked at home without oil, salt and spice but made of ghee in the 'Gruhaagni' or Loukigani or that as prepared at Vivaahaadi Homaas after 'Nityouposana' is indeed worthy of Vaishvadeva Karya). Since this Havishaanna is also used for Pitru Yagna and Nitya Shraaddha this is eminently worthy of consumption by Brahmanas. This Vaishvadeva is therefore a sure means of Atma Samskaara and Anna Samskaara. Therefore there would be one Vaishvadeva in a family unit of undivided brothers. If for any reason, this kind of 'Anna paaka' is unavilable, the Vaishvadevaanna might be prepared as of Ekadashi Bhojana made of cooked rice, milk, curd, ghee, fruit and water. Vaishvadeva needs to be done with 'Anna' by hand; if this had to be done by water then it has to be by 'Anjali'. But Kodravam chanakam maasham masuram cha kulutthakam, Kshaaram cha lavanam sarvam Vaishwadevevi varjitam/ (The specified pulses, spices and salt are forbidden for use in the Vaishvadeva Karya.) In case the Kartha leaves station then he should commission a Ritvik to perform the needful. Alternatively he could observe the Karya wherever he goes out of his house. Rigvedis and Taittiriyaas consider it necessary to perform Vaishvadeva both in the day time and the night; they observe it by preparing the Lokaagni Paaka or at Vivahas etc. as described above. When Vaishvadeva is done twice a day/night, then the Vaishnavites light up sixteen or five 'Deepaas' or Lights. After providing various 'Upacharaas' or Services, then they offer Naivedya to Bhagavan Vishnu with the same food meant for consumption of the family and a part of it is given as Viashvadeva. Vishnorniveditaannena yashtavyam Devataantaram, Pitrubhyaschaapi taddeyan tadaanantyaaya kalpate/ (The naivedya offered to Bhagavan Vishnu is what should be offered to other Devataas; in fact this 'Prasaada' or the 'Sesha Naivedya' or the left over food is apt for offering to Pitru Devataas also as that offer would secure 'Ananta Punya'. In this context, a Vaishnava is stated to have assumed the 'Diksha' or Mantrika Discipline from a Guru of the 'Upadesha' of the 'Ashtaakshara Mantra' and its Japa. Those who are in the 'Vaishnava Parampara' or of Vaishnava Following do strictly observe regulations of Upavasa Dharmaas on Ekadashis and many such self restraints. One might wonder that after all a person could be qualified as Vaishnava only if he observes severe procedures and conventions like the observance of 'Pancha Raatraas' and so on. This query is replied that it is no doubt observance of Pancha Raatraas etc. are no doubt great qualifications to become a Vaishnava, but there are Vaishnavites among Kshatriyas and Vaishyas too as they do observe Gayatrupadesha-Adhyayana-Daana-Japa-Yagna and such normal Dharmas effortlessly and at the same perform their Varnaashrama dharmas like those of Kshatriya's Administration and Vaishya's business duties. They do imbibe qualities of Shuchi, Snaana, Sutakatwa, Shraaddha vidhis etc from Vaishnava Brahmanas. Ashvalaayana Vaishvadeva Vidhi: Ashvalaayanans perform Vaishvadeva with the Sankalpa: Mamaatmaanna samskaara panchasoonaa janita dosha parihaaradwaara Parmeshwara preetyartham Praataraishva devam Saayam Vaishvadevam cha sahatamtreka karishye/ (I shall perform the morning and evening Vaishvadeva to gratify Paramatma to offset the blemishes arising out of Anna Samskara and Panchasoonaa vidhis. Then prepare 'Paakaanna' in pot by lighting up Pachaagni named Paavaka and on reciting Chatvaari Shringaa and after Prokshana with water all around the 'Agni Kunda' saying Vishvaaninah, mix up with ghee and curd and make three parts, offer with right hand one part for Devata Homa uttering Suryaaya swaaha, Suryaayedam namama, Prajapataye, Somaaya, Vanaspataye, Agnishomaabhyaam, Indraagnibhyaam, Dyaavaa Prithivi -bhyaam, Dhanvantaraye Indraaya, Vishvepa- Devehyaah Brahmaney; these are ten 'Prataravaishwa Devaahutis'. Like wise the 'Saayam Vaishva -Deveeyaas' of Agnaye swaahaa, Prajaapataye etc. are done. Thus twenty Aahutis are offered to Agni deva and perform 'Parisha -muhana' around the Homa Kunda with water by way of Sparsha and 'Paryukshana' by way of prokshana saying Om chamey. Then the 'Upasthyaana Karya' or terminal task be done. This is the procedure of Deva Yagna. Bali Harana: Out of the remainder 'Anna Bhaga', a portion be kept on clean Bhumi around the Homa Kunda and offer to Agni uttering Suryaaya swaahaa Suryaaya idam namah; in this fashion, there should be sixteen Ahutis from the portions kept on the East side with space in between and utter: Adbhya swaaha, Oshadhi vanaspatibhyah, Gruhaabhyah, Griha Devataabhyaha, Vaastu Devataabhyaha/ Then continue the Ahutis from the Eastern side as follows: Indraaya and to the North direction Indrapurushebyah; to Yama purushebhya towards Sky on the Southern side; Varuna Purushebhya to the Eastern side; Soma Purushebhya on northern side; and Brahmaney, Brahma Purushebhya, Vishwebhyo Devebhya Sarvebhya Devebhya, Divaachaa –ribhya/Like wise Saayamkaala Vaishva Deva Bali harana too be performed. Bhuta Yagna: The third part of the Anna Bhaga is offered with ‘Praacheenaa veeti’ addressed to Yama uttering Swadhaa Pitrubhya and on the Southern side Pitrubya idam namah to Pitru Devatas. Some persons perform Bali Harana in a circular manner; Balaavanudhrutey naadyaannodhareccha Swayam Bali/ (Before the Bali daana none in the family should consume food , nor one should perform Bali by him self). Pitru Yagna: After the Bali daana, the Karta should have the homefront done up with Jala Prokshana and offer the Pitru Pindas in different directions to enable crows to eat the same: Aindra Vaaruna Vaayavyaa Yaamyai Nairrutikaaschaye, tey Kaakaah pratigruhnantu Bhumyaam pindam mayojjitham/ (May the Pindas kept on Bhumi in Indra-Yama-Niruti-Varuna-Vayu Dishas be consumed away by crows by way of the remainders of the Pitru Yagnaanna). Further there are two ‘Shunakas’ or dogs in the abode of Lord Yama named ‘Shyama Shabalaas’ and I offer them these Pindas with the supplication to them to safeguard us in our paths! Having done this, the Karta should wash his feet, perform Aachamana and having recited Shaantaa Prithivi and Vishnu Smarana and enter his house. Manushya Yagna: The Karta should apportion one ‘Atithi bhojana’ or sixteen or at least four fistfuls of Anna reciting: Sanakaadi Manushyobhoy hanteydam na mama/ This might be given away to mendicants [Source: Dharma Sindhu].

Sarga continued: The Maha Tapasvis clad in black deerskins and sustained with limited meals of kanda moola phalas are ‘jitendriyas’ super controllers of mind and limbs are of the radiance of Surya- Agnis as living in the abode of Brahma Himself with ‘veda ghosha’ all through the day. Shri Rama then disarmed of his ‘dhanush tuneeraas’ and entered the ashramas. The Maharshi with his ability of divine vision realised Devi Sita was standing outside and pleasantly stepped outside. He had then most courteously received them all with Lakshmanas too. rūpasamhananam lakṣmīm saukumāryam suveśatām, dadṛśur viśmitākārā rāmasya vanavāsinaḥ/ vaidehīm lakṣmaṇam rāmaṁ netrair animiṣair iva, āścaryabhūtān dadṛśuḥ sarve te vanacāriṇaḥ/ Shri Rama’s arresting personality, his body build, radiance, soft voice, have all readily attracted the on lookers of the ashram and around. All of them rivetted their looks on Sita- Rama- Lakshmanas. Then the Maha Munis respectfully paid their hospitality at once with ‘pushpam- toyam- phalam- asanam’. Then they addressed Rama as follows: dharmapālo janasyāśya śaraṇyaś ca mahāyaśāḥ, pūjanīyaś ca mānyaś ca rājā daṇḍadharo guruḥ/ indrasyaiva caturbhāgaḥ prajā rakṣati rāghava, rājā tasmād vanān bhogaṁ bhunkte lokanamaskṛtaḥ/ Raghu Rama! As you are the King of the land capable of ‘danda dhaarana’, you are our Supreme Administrator, the reflector of glory, worship - worthy, and the Master of all of us. Indeed, we seek to salute to you as the chakravarti! You are our Ruler, par excellence as much in cities as in dandakaranya heretoo. So saying, the Maha Munis provided them unprecedented honours to Rama- Sita- Lakshmanas to mutual contentment and happiness.

Having experienced the 'atithya' of the Maha Munis for the night, Ramaas proceeded further into the 'dandakaranya'. On the way ahead they found a specific central area where a number of wild animals including tigers and wild boars were assembled and there amidst was seated a huge 'nara rupa rakshasa' was seated too of mountatin size. gabhīrākṣam mahāvakraṁ vikaṭam viṣamodaram, bībhatsam viṣamam dīrgham vikṛtam ghoradarśanam/ vasānam carmavaiyāghraṁ vasārdraṁ rudhirokṣitam, trāsanaṁ sarvabhūtānām vyāditāsyam ivāntakam/ trīṇ śimhāṁś caturo vyāghrān dvau vṛkau pṛṣṭān daśa, saviṣāṇam vasādigdham gajasya ca śīro mahat/ His eyes were deep, face was giant like, body shape frightful, stomach was heavily protruded and in all was a spetacle of alarm and shock. His mouth was fully smeared with blood and pieces of raw meat seated like a yama raja with the body covered with raw tiger skin. His massive trishula made of iron is pierced with the heads of three lions, four tigers, two wolves, and ten deers as he was then busy gulping a huge elephant head making gallopping sounds! sa rāmaṁ lakṣmaṇaṁ caiva sītām dṛṣṭvā ca maithilīm/ abhyadhāvat saṁkruddhaḥ prajāḥ kālā ivāntakaḥ, sa kṛtvā bhairavaṁ nādaṁ cālayann iva medinīm/ Glancing Rama Sita Lakshmanas, he roared like of 'bhairava naada' as if of an earth quake and ran after them. He approached them and screamed: You both men have worn 'jataa cheeraas' and brought a woman alongd with you too with 'dhanush baanaas' and a sword too and dared to enter dandakaranya! It appears that your lifetime is now over! You are dressed up like 'tapasvis' and have brought a woman too! You are surely two cheats, it appears! I am a rakashasa named Viratha and am daily used to eat Munis! I would like to marry this woman and kill both of you for now! On hearing this conversation, Devi Sita was shuddered with fear like a plantain tree as shaken with speed as the rakshasa was speaking likewise. The rakshasa then lifted Devi Sita on his lap. Shri Rama then addressed Lakshmana: 'Soumya! Look at this state of Janaka Maha raja putri, and my dharma patni! What a shame! Now, what Kaikeyi had longed for is coming true and she was not merely wished for kingship to her son but this type of an insult be 'rewarded!' parasparśāt tu vaidehyā na duḥkhataram asti me, pitur vināśāt saumitre svarājyaharaṇāt tathā/ Sumitra nandana Lakshmana! I cannot imagine witnessing a more shameful act than this as loss of kingship and not even the father's death! So saying, Rama felt insulted as his tears rolled down his cheeks! Then Lakshmana hissed like a serpent with widened hood swaying side ways and to and fro too: Kakuthstha kula bhushana! You are like Indra and the saviour of all the 'praanis' yourself; I am your mere follower and servant and why do you feel get dejected and helpless! I am just going to destroy the rakshasas Viradha and suck off his blood instatntly! The red hot anger of mine at the loss of kingship should now be delivered on 'Viraatha' as Indra would release the 'vajraayudha'! This arrow should swirl round his body in a poisonous circle and finally break his heart into smithereens!

As Lakshmana was threatening the rakshasa, the latter asked loudly as to who were they precisely and Rama replied that they were the brothers of Ikshvaaku vamsha being kshatriyas having unfortunately settled in dandakaaranya for the while and the rakshasa introduced as the son of Java the father and Shatahlada the mother as Viraadha. Viradha further stated that he performed severe tapasya to Brahma and secured the boon that no 'shastra' could destroy his body ever. The rakhsasa further suggested that they the brothers might better leave the woman with him and go away as he would then not harm them. In reply, Rama said: kṣudra dhik tvām tu hīnārtham mṛtyum anveṣase dhruvam, raṇe saṁprāpsyase tiṣṭha na me jīvan gamiṣyasi/ 'You rogue! Your manner of talking is of a stupid as you are certainly destined to die! Wait! Then Rama took up the dhanush, straightened it and kept on releasing the arrows like Garudadeva and Vayudeva! Then the rakshasa crumbled down with his blood spurted out; the terribly hurt rakshasa had to release Devi Sita out of his grip; having taken up a 'shula' attacked Rama Lakshmanas with anger mingled up with anguish. Rama Lakshmanas like Kaala- Antaka- Yamaraja released sudden rains of arrows. In response, the raakasa shouted aloud with pitched up and reverberating sound and fell down like a pack of bruised up body parts mutilated hither and thither! Rama then addressed Lakshmana to drag the body still alive by his strong and sturdy shoulders and make way so that it ought to be a warning not merely to the cruel animals but to possibly to the co rakshasaas too even as Viradha was shouting in high pitch shrieks and earth shaking body torments.

As Devi Sita witnessed the scene of Lakshmana dragging the still alive body of the rakshasa, she lifted both her hands with untold relief and crying continued shouting excitedly: Satyavaadi Dasharatha nandanaas Rama Lakshmanas are dragging the still alive body of Viradha rakshasa, aho! Rakshasa! Leave me alone, and keep on eating the vanya mrigas only! Devi Sita's anguish having been thus heard, Rama Lakshmana's hastened the process of killing the rakshasa. Then they pierced the body parts, mutilated the same separately by his hands, legs, feet, stomach and so on. Even so the rakshasa was still alive. Then they dug up a massive and deep ditch and tried hard to push the mutilated body parts. But, still the rakshasa was alive even so. Then the rakshasa made the confession: 'Maha Purushas! It was a shame that I could not realise as to who were you! Now I do place you aptly! I was under the influence of a spell so far! abhiśāpād ahaṃ ghorāṃ praviṣṭo rākṣasīm tanum, tumburur nāma gandharvaḥ śapto vaiśvaraṇena hi/ prasādyamānaś ca mayā so 'bravīn mām mahāyaśāḥ, yadā dāśarathī rāmas tvām vadhiṣyati saṃyuge/ tadā prakṛtim āpanno bhavān svargaṃ gamiṣyati, iti vaiśravaṇo rājā rambhāsaktam uvāca ha/ I had to become a monster like this and I was originally the noted Tumbura Gandharva and Kubera the king of gandharvas cursed me to turn to a rakshasa. However he assured my liberation would be in the hands of Dasharatha nandana Shri Rama and that I would attain swarga thereafter! I was ravished with apsaras named Rambha and hence I was delayed attending to the duty assigned to me by Kubera and thus the latter accorded this 'shaapa' to turn to a rakshasa. Raghuveera! I am now blessed to be rid of this 'shaapa' and now I could return back to my loka! Narashrashtha! From here within a distance of a yojana and half, you may like to meet Maha Muni Sharabhanga ashram. Shri Rama! The sanatana dharma states that the dead body of the departed Soul is required to dig up a drench and keep it there and you too may do so as even rakshasas would attain swarga by doing so as the old adage would prescribe so. Lakshmana! You may there fore dig up a very long and wide pit for placing the dead body of the departed rakshasa. As though prompted by one's own destiny, Viradha rakshasa after his long tapsya addressed to Brahma, the boon sought and bestowed was that none could kill him by way of shastras but did not mention of astras! Then after the placement of the huge body of the rakshasa, Rama Sita Lakshmanas proceeded further towards the Sharabhanga Maha Muni ashram.

After leaving the frightful phase of the dandakaranya and its memories of terror, Rama Sita Lakshmanas paced up towards the Sharabhaṅga Maharshi's ashram. Even as they were entering the ashram, they visioned a memorable scene on the high skies of Indra Deva passing by a chariot as his body splendour was comparable to that of Agni and Surya, while hundreds of Devatas were following behind the chariot. On Indra Deva's head above were laced above white clouds of moonshine brightness as an umbrella decorated by multi coloured flower garlands of rainbow colours of violet-indigo-blue-green-yellow-orange and red. The followers include gandharva- siddha-maharshis while Lord Indra and Sharabhaṅga were conversing together. Shri Rama then drew attention of the celestial scene to Lakshmana: ' dear brother! Look above the scene of Lord Indra! Is not Indra looking like a youth of twenty five years! wait without walking and with Sita too! Then Indra seems to have pointed to Devas: Ihopayaastasau rāmo yāvan mām̐ nābhibhāṣate, niṣṭhām̐ nayata tāvat tu tato mām̐ draṣṭum arhati/ jitavantaṁ kṛtārthaṁ ca draṣṭāham̐ acirād imam̐, karma hy anena kartavyam̐ mahad anyaiḥ suduṣkaram̐ Shri Rama would be soon arriving at the Sharabhaṅga ashram; keep quiet and step aside. None should disturb me; let not Shri Rama know of our presence here! He has to perform such a task as impossible except by Rama alone. And that is to terminate Ravana. Then only I (Indra) would reveal myself!' so saying Indra had departed! Meanwhile, Rama-Sita-Lakshmanas approached Sharabhaṅga as the latter was performing an 'agni-kaarya'. As the Maha Muni concluded the same, Rama Sita Lakshmanas prostrated at the feet of the Maharshi and secured his blessings. Then Rama asked the Muni as to why the latter was just meeting Lord Indra. Sharabhaṅga replied that Indra desired the Muni to accompany him to visit Brahma Loka, but now that Rama had arrived, the Muni would leave for Brahma loka later on. Incidentally why not Rama too could visit those lokas, but Rama politely replied that he would rather stay back in dandakaranya only. Then Sharabhaṅga suggested Rama's visit to Sutaakshna Muni too. Then Sharabhaṅga offered himself to Agni with appropriate mantras and reached Brahma loka where the Maha Muni was welcomed. Agni created from his roma or skin pore hairs, keshha or head hairs, twacha or skin, asthi or bones, maamsa or flesh, rakta or blood and so on. As the Maha Muni's body parts were thus sacrificed by the resonance of mantras, Sharabhanga was blessed to eternity and paved the way of several Maha Munis as detailed in the next stanza!

Then Rama replied: Naivamarhatha maam vaktumaagjnaapyoham tapasvinaam, kelalena swakaaryena praveshtivyaṃ vanam mayaa/ Viprakaaramapaakrashtum rakshasairbhavataamimam, pitustu nirdeshakarāḥ pravishthamidam vanam/ Muni varaas! This duty is the offshoot of ‘pitru vaakya paripalana’ or the vindication of my own great late father’s command! I feel contented that the service to be so rendered is the direct outcome my faith and our mutual welfare! Having assured likewise, Rama Sita Lakshmanas proceeded further to Tapasvi Sutaakshna Muni ashrama.

Having crossed a number of water flows of immense depth, Rama Sita Lakshmanas sighted a very high mountain as though of Meru and passed through a dense forest. As their weary walk of extreme tiresomeness, they discovered a lonely ashram with a garden surrounded by floral and fruit bearing bushes and trees. On proceeding further, Rama entered the ashram, self introduced as the Maha Muni Suteekshna embraced Rama and welcomed them all with the respects becoming of renowned guests. Muni Suteekshna explained that as he was expecting Ramaas he did not reach ‘Deva dhaama’ yet or had not yet sought mukti. Then the Maha Muni stated that as Ramas were earlier settled at Chitrakoota mountain range, Lord Indra visited the Muni and described how Rama was famed with his acts of valour and bravery. In the course of conversation, Shri Rama enquired of a suitable place for himself and Sita Lakshmanas could settle down. Suteeksha Muni stated that this place might fall vacant anyway as he was only waiting Ramas to arrive. Bhu the only drawback was of constant attacks of cruel animals. Rama replied that no doubt the ashram might no doubt be protected by cover of arrows but that would hurt the purity and piety of an ‘ashram’ ‘per se’ by the very definition of an ashram! After deliberations of an ideal ashram, the day concluded and Ramas rested for the night.

Their desire is to cover good distance even as Surya Deva would display his radiance and heat. Then they prostrated at the feet of the Maha Muni and the latter stated: ‘Shri Rama! Having proceeded from the ashram of Suteekshna, Devi Sita tried to annotate about some fine principles of dharma to Shri Rama. She said: ayaṁ dharmāḥ susūkṣmeṇa vidhinā prāpyate mahān, nivṛttena ca śakyo 'yaṁ vyasanāt kāmajād iha/ She said: Aryaputra! Indeed you are a personification of virtue yet a few finer points might perhaps be rather dormant on your mental horizon as those appear to blunt the peripheries of dharma in the pure sense. When the base appears to be 'kaama' or desire, there are two edges to a knife : one is 'swaārtha' or selfishness and another is adharma or viciousness and heartlessness. trīṇy eva vyasanāny atra kāmajāni bhavanty uta, mithyā vākyam paramakam tasmād gurutarāv ubhau, paradārābhigamanam vinā vairam ca raudratā/ mithyāvākyam na te bhūtam na bhaviṣyati rāghava, kuto 'bhilaṣaṇam strīṇām pareṣām dharmanāśanam/ In this universe there are three 'vyasanās' or deep rooted blemishes: Mithyaa bhashana or gossiping is one- parastree gamana is another and cruel behavior the worst! Raghunandana! Gossiping is built in human nature; 'parastree abhilaasha' is an acquired mental aberration. Narendra! In your specific instance, this blemish is alien to you anyway, as you are of proven dharma patni vratastha- beside of course being of ‘satya pratigjna-dharma nishtha-and pitru aaginaa paalana’. BUT, tr̥tīyam yad idam raudram paraprāṇābhīhimsanam, nirvairam kriyate mohāt tac ca te samupasthitam/ the third and the worst is the JEEV HIMSA and that blemish is right before you! Veera! Please recall your decisiveness and swearing before Dandakaranya Rishis to uproot rakshasaas totally. Now when you are in dandakaranya, it is quite possible you resort to violence as you are a kshatriya. Maha baaho! In the past hunting was a pastime and killing innocent animals and birds was a hobby! May I quote an incident of the yore when a Satyavadi tapasvi was in a forest, Indra assumed the form of a kshatriya warrior and entered the ashram to spoil the tapasya. He kept his ‘khadga’ in the ashram. Then the Muni started utilising the sword for self defence. He got obsessed with the khadga and started garlanding it and without it he would not step out even. nityam śāstram parivahan krameṇa sa tapodhanah, cakāra raudrīm svām buddhiṁ tyaktvā tapasi niścayam/ Tapas which had been his fortune was thus gradually replaced with the love for the sword and eventually learnt using it and acquired cruelty! Then the erstwhile Muni had to reach narakas instead! Devi Sita continued stating: ‘Veeravara Rama! This is why I feel, it may not be appropriate to visit dandakaranya! kṣatriyāṇām tu vīrāṇām vaneṣu niyatātmanām, dhanuṣā kāryam etāvad ārtānām abhirakṣaṇam/ kva ca śāstram kva ca vanam kva ca kṣātram tapaḥ kva ca, vyāvīdham idam asmābhir deśadharmaḥ tu pūjyatām/ Kshatriyas should no doubt follow the golden maxim of ‘Shishta Rakshana and Dushta Sikshana’; but where is vana vaasa and where is shastra dharana! Are these precepts contradictory mutually! There fore, we should follow the Desha dharma; in other words: as we now are in the ‘ashrama sthiti’, we should be distant from ‘kshatriya sthiti’! In other words, when Rama would return to Ayodhya, then he might -and in fact-, ought to be-a kshatriya but as of now an ashrama vaasi only! Having discarded kingship and taken to ‘vaanasprastha’ and celibacy, could kshatriya dharma be justified! This should not be worthy of either the pitruvakya paripaalana or a matter of joy for Devi Kaikeyi!! dharmād arthaḥ prabhavati dharmāt prabhavate sukham, dharmeṇa labhate sarvaṁ dharmasāram idam jagat/ ātmānam niyamais tais taiḥ karṣayitvā prayatnataḥ, prāpyate nipuṇair dharmo na sukhāl labhyate sukham/ nityam śucimatih saumya cara dharmam tapovane, sarvaṁ hi viditam tubhyaṁ trailokyam api tattvataḥ/ Dharma yields Artha- dharma leads to fulfillment; and dharma is the be-all and do-all! This is the essence of Life worth living, indeed! Persons undergoing the vaanaprasthaa ashrama and its truthful duties by limited means of living of sacrifices are proportionately nearer to bliss than otherwise. strīcāpalād etad udāhṛtam me; dharmam ca vaktum tava kaḥ samarthaḥ, vicārya buddhyā tu sahāmujena; yad rocate tat kuru mādīreṇa! Devi Sita finally states that if her natural trait of femininity and apparent wavery mindedness, that she has stated on the above lines, but Rama with his high maturity of mind might like to understand the way he might like to!

Having given due consideration to what Devi Sita conveyed, Shri Rama replied as follows: ‘Devi! The principles of Dharma that you had analysed were in the interest of my welfare as you sought to draw a fine line between kshatriya dharma and ashrama dhama. As Rama Sita Lakshmanas proceeded as a trio with Rama Lakshmanas were carrying dhanush banaas in readiness, they were enjoying the prakriti soundarya, and witnessed passing rivulets with chakravaaka and saasaraas birds hovering around to catch sparkling fishes of varying sizes and colours. As they were proceeding further they heard distant sounds of song and music while crossing a sarovara. As they got inquisitive, they enquired of a Muni named Dharmabhrit who was accompanying them. Then the Muni started describing the sarovara which was named 'Paanchapsara' which was extremely deep was originally constructed by Markandkarni Maha Muni. The Muni performed severe tapasya for ten thousand years in the waters of the 'saras' living by mere consumption of clean air only. Agni and some other Devas and Apsaras assembled and as concerned about the seriousness of the situation named five apsaras to create mental diversion of the Muni in their favour. Then the five apsaras were wedded to the Muni and ever since the latter was turned as the agent of Devas. Also the Muni had turned youthful. The sounds of music and singing were thus traced from the Panchaapsara Sarovara! Ramas were thus surprised at the sarovara and subsequently entered the ashram of Dharmabhrit Muni. Later on the three some shifted from one ashram to another likewise. yeṣāṁ uṣitavān pūrvam sakāśe sa mahāstravit, kva cit paridaśān māsān ekam samvatsaram kva cit/ kva cic ca caturo māsān pañcaṣaṭ cāparān kva cit, aparatrādhikān māsān adhyardham adhiyam kva cit/ trīn māsān aṣṭamāsāms ca rāghavo nyavasat sukham, tathā samvasatas tasya munīnām āśrameṣu vai, ramataś cānukulyena yayuḥ samvatsarā daśa/ Thereafter, Rama Sita Lakshmanas were staying by turns in various Muni Ashramas, some times for ten months, one year, four months, five to six months, seven months once, eight months, eight and half, three months, eleven months but every where with comfort and mutual convenience. Tatra samvatsarasyasya muneenaamaashrameshu vai, ramataschaanukuulyena yayuh samvatsaraa dhasha/Thus by transferring themselves from ashram to ashram, Rama Sita Lakshmanaas enjoyed spending in comfort for ten years! Thereafter, they returned back to the ashram of Suteekshna Maha Muni. As the co ashrama vaasis were indeed thrilled at the return of the Ramas right after a decade! One day Rama enquired of Agastya Muni. Suteekshna Muni replied: Agastyaashrma is four yojanas in the southern direction where Agastya's brother stays and another yojana hence is Agastya's ashram.

Vishleshanas on a) Creation of Agasthya and Vasishtha as brothers by MitraVaruna from Urvashi and b) Agastya Muni dries up the Ocean and enables to destroy the demon Kalakeya- Matsya-Padma Puranas respectively

Once Indra despatched Vayu and Agni to destroy Danavas and having successfully killed thousands of the enemies, ignored some Daityas like Taraka, Kamalaaksha, Paravasus, Kaladamshttra and Virochana as they fled away and concealed in deep Seas. The Danavas who hid themselves kept on tormenting human beings as also Devatas eventually. Indra ordered that Vayu and Agni should dry up the Sea water, especially to kill dangerous Daityas like Jambhasura, but the both the Devas argued that in the process of drying up the Seas even in a minor manner there would be serious havoc caused to crores of Jeevas. Indra was annoyed at their argument and cursed them to fall down on Earth from Swarga and both the Devas entered into a 'Jala Kumbha' or Water Pitcher as a single body. Meanwhile, Sages Nara and Narayana were in Tapasya on Gandhamadana Mountain, and Indra was concerned that they might not be a threat to his chair; he despatched a few Apsaras to the Mountain along with Kamadeva but their attempts to tempt the Maharshis failed. As the Apsaras continued to be stationed there, Narayana Rishi created a damsel of exquisite attraction from his thighs and named her Urvashi; he desired that Apsaras should realize that their beauty was nothing compared to whom they could materialise as Urvashi and they could not possibly tempt Nara Narayan Maharshis, after all! Mitra (Sun God) and Varuna (Rain God) happened to see the damsel and could not resist the fall of their combined semen of Mitravaruna which was deposited in the same Jala Kumbha (pitcher) that fell down from the Swarga and thus Agastya was born as Kumbha Sambhava. Vasishtha too was reborn from the pitcher earlier since he felt offended when King Nimi did not properly attend to him as he visited the King and hence gave a curse to Nimi to live as 'Videha' or without body, but the King too gave a return curse; both Nimi and Vasishtha approached Lord Brahma who solved the problem by retaining Nimi's life in his Eyes and Vasishtha to be reborn to Mitravaruna since the latter's semen fell in the pitcher on seeing Apsara Urvashi. Subsequently Agastya married Lopamudra, absorbed the entire Ocean in his Kamandulu to isolate the Danavas to enable Indra to kill the notorious Danavas and released it later as his urine and was thus stated to be salty!; he also razed down the ego of Vindhya Mountain by making him bend for ever thus banning the Mountain to stoop for ever till the Sage's return which never happened as he continued to stay down the Vindhyas. There was also the legend attributed to Agastya about the Daitya brothers Ilvala and Vatapi, who knew the Mrita Sanjeevani Mantra; they would assume the forms of Brahmanas and seek the passers by to tempt them to a feast of goat-meat, and after consuming the meal ask Vatapi to come out and Vapati would come out piercing through the tummy of the stranger and the brothers would enjoy his meat. But Agastya Muni was too clever to bless the good food saying 'Vatapi! Jeerno bhava' and Vatapi was fully digested even before Ilvala was able to recite the Mrita Sanjeevani Mantra! [Till date, devotees recite 'Aditya Hridaya' scripted by Agastya Muni. Vasishtha, the Brahmarshi was the arch-enemy of Rajarshi Viśwamitra ever since the latter claimed Nandini the Celestial Cow and fought a battle in which Viśwamitra was defeated. The enmity continued till once both the Rishis cursed each other to become birds and finally Brahma had to intervene and convert them back as human beings]. Agastya Muni satisfied Maheswara with ruthless penance for several years and secured boons of longevity for twenty five crores of years as long as thousand lives of Brahmas. The boon also covered that whosoever worshipped him for seven days for seven years with 'Arghya' or offering water addressing the Muni along with charities of a white cow and calf, silver vessel, and white clothes as follows would be blessed with good health, good Form, and contentment: Kaashapushpa prateekaasha Agni Maruta Sambhava, Mitraavarunayoha putra kumbhayoney Namostutey/ The first Arghya would provide Good Form, the second one Bhuvarloka and the third Swarloka.(Matsya Purana)

Agastya Muni dries up the Ocean and enables to destroy the demon Kalakeya: In the vicinity of Pushkar Tirtha were ‘Ashramas’ of illustrious Mararshis like Agastya. A highly vily and valiant Danava named Kalakeya was in battle with Devas for many years and he kept another mighty Danava called Vritrasura as a shield in between him and Devas. With folded hands, Devas approached Brahma to get rid of Vritrasura as well as Kalakeya. Brahma suggested that Vritrasura was invincible due to unprecedented boons given by Parameswara and the only way out was to approach Sage Dadheechi and beg him for his back-bone which could materialize a mighty ‘Vajrayudha’ which alone could destroy Vritrasura. Devas prayed to Sage Dadheechi and keeping in view the holy task of killing Vritrasura, the Sage agreed to sacrifice his backbone and hence his life. Devas approached Vishvakarma to create Vajrayudha. A fierce battle between Vritrasura backed by Kalakeya on the one hand and Indra armed with Vajrayudha as well as the full force of Devas followed. Vritrasura made such frightening screams that went shivers to Earth, the ‘Dishas’ (Directions), the Antariksha (Sky) and the Planets. Indra utilised the newly made Vajrayudha and felled down the huge body of Vritrasura to the ground. The demoralised ‘Asuras’ ran helter-skelter with a phenomenon called Vritrasura and finally took shelter in the deep Ocean. Kalakeya too hid in the Ocean and over a period of time, reformulated the Danavas who resorted to nightwarfare and nocturnal killings of lakhs of human beings in sleep and once again threatened the balance of power between the Davanvas and Devas. Indra and Devas approached Lord Vishnu and implored him to save them, the humanity as also the four kinds of ‘Srishti’ viz. ‘Andajas’ or those born of Eggs, ‘Svedajas’ or those born of body sweat, ‘Jarayuja’ or those born of womb, and ‘Udbhuja’ or born of germination. Lord Vishnu told the Devas that the most dangerous Asura Kalakeyi along with his huge numbers of Danavas who concealed themselves in the deep waters of the Ocean were gradually killing all kinds of species mentioned above in the nights and the only way of exposing the Danavas in very large numbers would be to completely dry up the Oceans by taking out the water; Vishnu further declared that the only Sage who was powerful enough to dry up the Oceans was Mahatma Agastya, the son of Mitravaruna. Devas then approached Agastya Muni and prayed to him that in the past too, the Muni was kind enough to have averted crises for saving the very existence of the Universe in highly critical situations like when Nahusha occupied the chair of Indra on highly temporary basis and created embarrassment and havoc in the worlds and punished him subsequently; and when Vindhya grew up in height compared with Meru Mountain obstructing the passage of Surya and subdued Vindhya by asking him to bend in reverence and not allowing to stand up till date. Devas made to instant request to Agastya Muni to drink up the water of the Ocean exposing Kalakeya and followers so that they were trapped and destroyed at once by Devas. The dried up Ocean was refilled by another despatch of Ganga by a repeat performance by Bhagiratha. (Padma Purana)]

Ramas followed the directions to the ashrama of Agastya’s brother as provided by Maha Muni Suteekshna nigṛhya tarasā mṛtyuṁ lokānām hitakāmyayā, yasya bhrātrā kṛteyaṁ dik śaranyā punyakarmaṇā/ Agastya’s brother desired to execute ‘loka kalyana’ and found out a way to digest two rakshasas Ilvala and Vatapi the form of Brahmanas and digested them for good as stated in Padma Purana extracts above. Once before, there were two demon brothers named Vatapi and Ilvala frequently killing brahananas. Ilvala speaking in pure sanskrit disguised as a brahmana host was enticing other brahmanas attending pitru shraddha bhojanas; they used to kill goats for the purpose and cook meat there of and serve; then while eating the food, Ilvaka would shout: ‘vaataapi come out and the latter would come out as a wolf and kill the innocent brahmanas. As this practice had been going on, Agastya Maha Muni became a willing bhokta along with his own broher; as the usual shout for vataapi followed:

Agastya replied: kuto niṣkramitum śaktir mayā jīrṇasya rakṣasaḥ, bhrātus te meṣa rūpasya gatasya yamasādanam/ atha tasya vacaḥ śrutvā bhrātur nidhanasamśritam, pradharṣayitum ārebhe munim krodhān niśācaraḥ/ so 'bhyadravad dvijendram tam muninā dīptatejasā, cakṣuṣānalakalpena nirdagdho nidhanam gataḥ/ Your brother Vataapi was already digested by me and he has already reached yamaloka!' When Ilvala sought to attack the Maha Muni burnt the demon by yogaagni and this ended the sordid practice for ever and thus the adage now: 'jeernam jeernam vaataapi jeernanam!' Rama Sita Lakshmanas having prostrated to Agastya Maharshi's brother, were exchanging pleasantries and views vide Stanza 71: upāsya paścimām samdhyām saha bhrātrā yathāvidhi, praviveśāśramapadam tam ṛṣim cābhyavādayan/samyak pratigṛhītas tu muninā tena rāghavaḥ, nyavasat tām niśām ekām prāśya mūlaphalāni ca/ tasyām rātryām vyatītāyām vimale sūryamaṇḍale, bhrātaram tam agastyasya āmantrayata rāghavaḥ/ After performing Sandhya Puja Homas, Ramas performed prostrations and stayed back for the night at the Agastya brother's ashrama and proceeded further to that of Agastya Maharshi himself.

Lakshmana sent message to Agasthya Muni that king Dasharatha's son Shri Rama and his wife would like to meet the Maha Muni and the message was being sent by Lakshmana the younger brother of Rama. They were instructed by the father to spend Aranya vaasa. Then the message was delivered to the Muni who responded positively. They entered the ashram and witnessed groups of harinis, agni and Brahma sthaanaas, besides the idols of Vishnu-Mahendra-Surya-Chandra-Bhaga-Kubera-Dhata- Vidhata-Vayu Deva, Paashadhari Varuna-Gayatri-Vasu-Naga Raja Ananta-Garuda-Kartikeya-and Dharma Raja. Then Agasthya came out and Ramas instantly touched his feet. The Muni took Rama into his embrace and offered paadya- argha-aaseenaas and enquired of their welfare. There after bhojanas were got readied for service too ; Agasthya then said: Kakutsthya! The vanaprastha vidhi is to perform 'aahuti' to Agni foremost, then arghya-and atithi puja! Any taapasi who performs contrarily would be like a liar of rendering truthful evidences and in the stage of post death would be liable to consume one's own flesh! Agasthya Muni stated: rājā sarvasya lokasya dharmacārī mahārathaḥ, pūjanīyaś ca mānyaś ca bhavān prāptaḥ priyātithiḥ/ Rama! You are a king, maharathi, dharmacharana karta being responsible to the praja for enforcing the high values of virtue. Then food was served by way of phala-moola-phuala and paniyas. As per the Bhagavata Purana, Arundhati is the eighth among the nine daughters of Kardama and Devahuti. She is the grandmother of Parashara and the great-grandmother of Vyasa. Shiva Purana describes her as being Sandhya, the mind-born daughter of Brahma, in a previous birth. On instruction of Vashista, Sandhya pleased Shiva by penance in order to purify herself from passion, and Shiva asked her to jump into Medhatithi's fire. She was then born as Medhatithi's daughter and married Vashista. The Mahabharata describes Arundhati as an ascetic who used to give discourses to even the Sapta Rishis. In one of the rituals of a Hindu weddings, the groom shows the bride the double stars of Vashista and Arundhati as an ideal couple, symbolic of marital fulfilment and loyalty. The couples are asked to look up the constellation symbolizing conjugal love and affection.]

Stanza 9 continued: As Agastya Maha Muni thus complimented the guests, Rama replied politely: We are extremely fortunate to have been blessed even by way of receiving compliments for which we are ever grateful. Yet, do kindly suggest a place with plentiful water flows where we might stay with contentment. Then the Maha Muni pondered a while and replied that from here a couple of yojanas, Panchavati should be the most ideal place where you could be contented and you may visit that place and set up an ashram with the help of Lakshmana. Rama! I have had visualized the entire proceedings of the causes for your vana vaasa and the passive involvement of King Dasharatha; I have also understood the context of why you are desirous of settling down at a place - (apparently in view of Rama's pratigina to clean up the muni ashramas of the menace of rakshasaas); this is reason why Panchavati should be preferable. Rama! Pachavati is also green with flowers-roots-fruits and is picturesque and Devi Sita should be happy there at its scenic grandeur! Maha baaho Rama! Besides being replete with fruits and flowers, the place is tranquil, pure and quiet. Shri Rama! You are indeed famed for saving sadaachaaris and Rishis besides being brave and heroic. As Agastya Muni had highly recommended Panchavati, Rama Sita Lakshmanas initiated their onward movement by picking of the dhanush baanaas and the personal belongings.

On way to Panchavati, Rama Sita Lakshmanas encountered a huge kite on the way and Rama Lakshmanas enquired as to who was it, presuming that it should be a rakshasa! The reply was casual stating that it might be a friend: 'Sons! I could be a friend of your father!' Then the bird stated further that his name was 'Jatayu' and commenced reeling out the Prajapati's names: Kardama-Vikrita-Shesha-Shamshraya-Bahu putra. The next in the generation were Sthaanu-the seventh one was Mareechi-Atri-Maha shakti shaali Kratu-the tenth one was Pulsatya-Angeera-Pracheta (Varuna)-and the thirteen Prajapati Pulaha. The fourteenth Prajapati was Daksha-then Vivasvaan-Arishtanemi-and the last Prajapati was the seventeenth was Kashyapa. Kashyapa Prajapati had eight wives [thirteen as mentioned on Puranas] and these were Aditi-Diti-Danu-Kaalka-Taamra-Krodhavaśa-Manu-and Anala. Aditi gave birth to Twelve Adityas-Twelve Vasus-Eleven Rudras and Two Ashvini Kumars, besides thirty three Devatas. Diti gave birth to Daityas and the controlled aranyas-samudras and the entire Earth! Danu gave birth to Ashvagreya while Kaalka Devi to two sons viz. Naraka and Kaalaka. Devi Tamra gave birth to five kanyas viz. Krounchi-Bhaasi-Shyeni- Dhritaraashtri and Shuki. Of these, Krounchi gave birth to owls- Bhaasi gave birth to Bhaasi birds-Shyeni to bat birds- and Dhritaraashtra to hamsaas and kala hamsaas or swans. Chakravaakamscha Bhadrām te vijagjñe saapi Bhaamini, Shukee nataam vigagjñe tu Nataayaam Vinataa sutaa/ Shri Rama! Bhamini Dhritaraashta also yielded chakravaka birds while Tamara's youngest daughter Shukee was born kanya named Nataa and the latter was born Devi Vinata. Then Devi Krodhavasha gave birth to ten kanyas viz. Mrigi-Mrigamanda-Hari-Bhadrāmada-Maatangi-Shardooli-Shweta-Surabhi-Surasa and Kadruka. Shri Rama!Mrigi's progeny are Mrigas and Mrigamanda's generation were Riksha-Srumara and Chamara. Bhadrāmada gave birth to Iravati and the latter son was the famed Iraavata Gaja Raja. Then Hari's santaana were Hari the Lion- Tapasvi- and Golaangula or Langoor. Further Krodhavasha's daughter was Shardulini and the latter's son was Vyaghra. Maatangi's progeny was Matanga or elephant while Shweta gave birth to Diggaja. Krodhavasha's daughter Surabhi gave birth to daughters Rohini and Gandharvi. Rohini gave birth to Gaavo or cows and Gandharvini to horses. Surasa's children are Nagaas while Kadru's were Pannagaas. Now Manu yet another wife of Kashyapa were chaturvarna maanavaas of Brahmana-Kshatriya-Vaishya and the Lower class. mukhato brāhmaṇā jātā urasaḥ kṣatriyās tathā, ūrubhyām jajñire vaiśyāḥ padbhyām sūdrā iti śrutiḥ/ From the face were born brahmanas- the heart the kshatriyas- both the thighs the vaishyas and from the thighs the lower class. Anala gave birth to trees- Taamra putri viz Shukhi and the latter's grand daughter was Vinata and Kadru was Surasa's sister. Kadru produced thousand types of 'naagaas' and Vinata created two famed sons Garuda and Aruna. tasmā jātō 'ham aruṇāt saṃpātīś ca mamāgrajaḥ, jaṭāyur iti mām viddhi śyenīputram arimḍama/ so 'ham vāsasahāyas te bhaviṣyāmi yadīcchasi, sītām ca tāta rakṣiṣye tvayi yāte salakṣmaṇe/ jaṭāyuṣaṃ tu pratipūjya rāghavo; mudā pariśvajya ca saṃnato 'bhavat; pitur hi śuśrāva sakhitvam ātmavāñ; jaṭāyuṣā saṃkathitam punaḥ punaḥ/ Raghuveera! From that Vinataanandana Aruna, I was born and so did my elder brother Sampaati and in short my name is Jataayu! I am the son of Shyenka. May I be of any help in creating an ashram for you or to protect Devi Sita in the absence of you and Lakshmana!' So saying Jatayu offered any kind of service to Ramas wholeheartedly.

[Vishleshana on Daksha Prajapati and Kashyapa from Puranas

a) Daksha Prajapati had the key role in the legend of Chandra Deva. Daksha and Devi Asikli had thousands of sons who were named the Shavalashvas and Haryashvas. While Shavalashvas also went off to explore Paramatma 'in cognito' never to return, Daksha and Asikli were distressed that Haryasvas were instigated by Sage Narada to disappear and proposed to kill him but for the intervention of Lord Brahma. Daksha offered prayers to Paramatma to purify his thoughts at a place known as 'Aghamarshana' near a mountain in Vindhya Range. The latter was pleased and instructed to lead a family life and carry on his normal duties. Accordingly, Daksha married Prajapati Panchajana's daughter 'Aksini' and begot ten thousand sons. As instructed by their father Daksha, the sons decided to perform austerities to beget children and reached a place named Narayanasaras, where River Sindhu joins the Sea. Sage Narada appeared there and mind-washed them about the futility of begetting progeny and getting involved with family lives and the perennial problems; he advised that the real purpose of a useful life would be to follow the path of God-consciousness instead. Narada gave the Theory of Creation and Destruction- the chain of births and deaths, and the futility of pursuing such a life. The mind-setting of Narada was so convincing that they followed the short-cut spiritual way rather than the circuitous and too familiar family route to God. Being furious at what had been done by Narada to his sons, Daksha cursed Narada that henceforth the latter would be a globe trotter and would never be settled and static, much less as a family person. Narada in turn could have given a curse to Daksha but restrained in the interest of the next generation to observe the Grihasti's life's route to salvation. (Maha Bhagavata)

b) Daksha couple gave birth to sixty eight, ten of whom were married to the Dharma Deva and thirteen Kashyapa Maharshi, twenty-seven daughters were married to Soma or Chandra. The remaining daughters were married to the Arishtanemi, Vahuputra, Angirasa and Krishashva Maharshis. The ten daughters who were married to the Dharma Deva were named Arundhati, Vasu, Yami, Lamba, Bhanu, Marutvati, Sankalpa, Muhurta. Sadhya and Vishva. Arundhati's children were the material objects of the world. Vasu's children were the eight gods known as the Vasus. Their names were Apa, Dhruva, Soma, Dhara, Salila, Anala, Pratyusha and Prabhasa. Anala's son was Kumara. Because Kumara was brought up by goddesses known as the Kritikas, he came to be called Kartikeya. Prabhasa's son was Vishvakarma. Vishvakarma was skilled in architecture and the making of jewelry. He became the architect of the gods. Sadhya's children were the gods known as Sadhyadevas and Vishva's children were the gods known as Vishvadevas. The twenty-seven daughters of Daksha who were married to Soma are known as the nakshatras (stars). Kashyapa married thirteen of Daksha's daughters. Their names were Aditi, Diti, Danu, Arishta, Surasa, Khasa, Surabhi, Vinata. Tamra, Krodhavasha, Ila, Kadru and Muni. Aditi's sons were the twelve gods known as the adityas. Their names were Vishnu, Shakra, Aryama, Dhata, Vidhata, Tvashta, Pusha, Vivasvana, Savita, Mitra Varuna, Amsha and Bhaga. Diti's sons were the daityas (demons). They were named Hiranyaksha and Hiranyakashipu, and amongst their descendants were several other powerful daityas like Bali and Banasura. Diti also had a daughter named Simhika who was married to a danava named Viprachitti. Their offspring's were terrible demons like Vatapi, Namuchi, Ilvala, Maricha and the Nivatakavachas. The hundred sons of Danu came to be known as danavas. The danavas were thus cousins to the daityas and also to the adityas. In the danava line were born demons like the Poulamas and Kalakeyas. Arishta's sons were the Gandharvas (singers of heaven). Surasa gave birth to sarpas, the snakes. Khasa's children were the Yakshas (demi-gods who were the companions of Kubera, the god of Wealth) and the Rakshasas. Surabhi's descendants were cows and buffaloes. Vinata had two sons named Aruna and Garuda. Garuda became the king of the birds. Tamra has six daughters. From these daughters were born owls, eagles, vultures, crows, water-fowl, horses, camels and donkeys. Krodhavasha had fourteen thousand children known as nagas (snakes). Ila gave birth to trees, creepers, shrubs and bushes. Kadru's sons were also known as nagas or snakes. Among the more important of Kadru's sons were Ananta, Vasuki, Takshaka and Nahusha. Muni gave birth to the Apsaras (dancers of heaven). Diti's children (daityas) and Aditi's children (Adityas) continually fought amongst themselves. On one particular occasion, Devas succeeded in killing many of the demons. Thirsting for revenge, Diti began to pray to her husband, Kashyapa that she be given birth to a son who would kill Indra, the king of the Devas. Kashyapa found it difficult to refuse his wife outright but gave a condition that she would have to bear the son in your womb for a hundred years. Diti resolved to do so but Indra came to know about Diti's resolve and was waiting for an opportunity to save himself. There was an occasion when, tired after her prayers, Diti went to sleep without first washing her feet. This was an unclean act and it gave Indra the required opportunity. He adopted a miniscule form and entered Diti's womb. With his weapon vajra, he sliced up the baby inside the womb into seven parts. The baby naturally began to cry at the pain. Indra kept on saying, 'ma ruda' that is, 'don't cry.' But the baby, or rather its seven parts, would not listen. Indra thereupon sliced up each of the seven parts into seven more sections, so that there were forty-nine sections in all. When these forty-nine sections were born, they came to be known as the Maruts, from the words - ma ruda- that Indra had addressed them. Since Diti had not been able to adhere to the conditions her husband had set, the Maruts did not kill Indra. They instead became Indra's followers or companions, and were treated as Devas. (Brahma Purana) .

c) Daksha and his wife Prasuti had 24 daughters. The names of these 24 daughters are Sraddha (faith), Srilakshmi (prosperity), Dhriti (steadiness), Tushti (resignation), Pushti (thriving), Medha (intelligence), Kriya (action, devotion), Buddhika (intellect), Lajja (modesty), Vapu (body), Santi (expiation), Siddhika (perfection), Kirtti (fame), Khyati (celebrity), Sati (truth), Sambhuti (fitness), Smriti (memory), Priti (affection), Kshama (forgiveness), Sannati (humility), Anasuya (without jealousy), Urjja (energy), Swaha (offering), and Swadha (oblation). Of these, the 13 married to Dharma are: Shraddha, Srilakshmi, Dhriti, Tushti, Pushti, Medha, Kriya, Buddhi, Lajja, Vapu, Santi, Siddhi, Kirtti. The other eleven are Khyati married to Bhrigu, Sati to Shiva, Sambhuti to Marichi, Smriti to Angiras, Priti to Pulastya, Kshama to Pulaha, Sannati to Kratu, Anasuya to Atri, Urjja to Vasishtha, Swaha to Agni, and Swadha to Pitris.

Braving the further path en route Panchavati as suggested by Maha Muni Agastya infested with poisonous serpents, himsaatmaka animals, Shri Rama addressed Lakshmana stating that they had since reached Panchavati and they might better select a place for building a suitable place for improvising a ‘kuteera’ or a cottage. Lakshmana politely stated that Rama and Sita alone would have to select a place with scenic beauty, near by a jalaashaya, replete with kanda moola pushpaas and most essentially as per Devi Sita’s own selection. More over Maha Muni emphasised the nearness of the Sacred River Godavari especially where groups of Royal Swans flutter on the banks, enhancing the tranquility of the surroundings. Added there to the enchanting dances of peacocks, even busy pairs of green parrot chirrupings, and laced up banks of deer groups be there to add to the memories of the dwellers! Further trees of elegance like saala-taala-kharjuura-panasa-neevara-punnaga-mano-ashoka-tilaka-ketai-champaka-syandana-chandana-kadamba-dhava- ashvakarna-shamip-palaasha-paatala and so on. As Shri Rama directed, Lakshmana got a parna shaala readied. Foremost, he made a parnashala with earth and rocks and a strong ceiling was made with shami tree branches over which kusha-kaasha-parva- river bank plant dried leaves were arranged as rain proof; in all the parna shala was clean, neat and worthy of comfortable living. It was right on River Godavari river banks being breezy, cool and worthy of bathing with steps done up. Tatah pushpabalim kritvaa shantimcha yathaavidhi, darshayaamaasa raamaaya tadaashramapadamkritam/It was constructed as per 'vaastu shastra' and was entered as per 'vaastu shanti':

[Vishlesana in Vaastu shaanti: VAASTU YAGNA comprises: Sutrapath, Stambhaaropana or hoisting of the main Pillar, Dwara vamshocchraya, Griha Pravesha and Vaastu Shanti. Sutrapath takes place in the Ishana Disha and Stambhaaropana in Agneya kona. Vaastu Deva's 'Pada Chinhaas' or foot prints should be set up and the 'Karta' should do 'pradakshinas' (circumambulation) around the foot-prints. It is stated that water with the powder of Munga, Ratna and Suvarna should be sprinkled while designing the 'Pada-Chihnaas'. Incidentally, the signs of Vaastu should never be ash, lit up firesticks, nails, skins, horns, bones, and skull as some ill-informed persons tend to do so and such material would lead to distress, danger and difficulties. It is advisable that masons and other workers are present at the time of Griha Pravesha. Ishaaney Devataagaaram tathaa Shaanti gruham bhavet, Mahaanasam thathaagneye tatpaarswam chottarey jalam, Gruhasyopakaram sarvam Nairutye Sthaapaded Buddhah/ Bandhasthaanam bahih kuryaat snaana mandapameyvacha, Dhana Dhaanyam cha Vaayavye karmashaalaam tato bahih, Evam Vaastu viseshah syaad Ghruha bhatruh shubaavaham/ (To the Ishaana side of any house, the Devataagruha and Shantigriha must be set up; its kitchen must be in the Agneya kona; to the northern side the 'Jala sthaan' (Water reservoir); all the house materials be kept in the Nairuti kona; the place for keeping domestic animals like cows and buffalos as well as bathing rooms are better constructed outside the house; the storage place for Dhana-dhanya should be kept in the Vayavya kona; the 'Karya shala' or the Offices should be organised outside the residential place. This pattern of living would certainly assure excellent propitiousness and happiness to the entire family. At the 'Griha Pravesha' function (House Warming Time) approaches, Peace and Prosperity is ushered in as stated: Krutwaagrato Dwijavaraanatha Purnakumbham Dhadyakshataamala pushpa phalopa shobham/ Datwaa hiranyavasanaani tadaa Dwijebhyo, Maangalya Shaanti nilayaya gruham vishekthu/ Gruhoktahoma vidhaanaa Bali karma kuryat, Praasaada Vaastu shamaney cha vidharya uktah, Santarpayed vijavaraanatha bhakshya bhojyeh, Shuklaambarah Swabhavanam pravishet sa dhupam/ (As the house is fully ready, the Head of the family should initiate the action of conducting 'Mangala Shanti' with a group of Brahmanas ahead along with a 'Kalasha'/Vessel, full of Sweet Water, Curd, Akshatas, tender mango leaves, flowers, fruits and coconuts as also scented sandal water, agarbattis/ incense sticks and oil-wick lamps nicely lit and decorated, as Brahmanas recite Veda hymns and musical instruments are played, while entering the house at the appointed 'Muhurta'. As Sharad Ritu was closing and Hemanta got initiated [Sharad Ritu or Autumn Season coinciding with Ashvin-Kartika months extending portions of September to November being mild weather the famed Sharannava Ratris and Depaavali are celebrated. Hemanta Ritu or pre-winter Season coinciding with Margaseersha and the last days of November-January, the festivals of Vasanta Panchami, Shiva Ratri and Holi are observed], one fine morning, Rama Sita Lakshmanas went for bathing in the sacred river Godavari. While leaving for the dip, Rama stated that the season of hemanta had arrived and the new season should herald excellent weather, rabi crop swayed in full swing, water is getting colder by the days and fire blocks were attracting human bodies. Satpurushas would normally perform 'Nava sasyueshti karma' and usher in new grains of rice and wheat and offer the cooked grains to Devas and Pitru Devatas to seek their blessings. Kings desirous of launching Vajaya yatra helald the new season as the weather was getting cooler at the early mornings and after sunsets. Surya Deva these days onward turn His direction to northern side as uttarayana would occur. By mid day, hemanta ritu becomes nicely warmer and becomes enjoyable. In this hemanta season nights get longer and prewinter would gradually heralded and none would like to sleep open sky in this season. Hemanta ritu's splendour gets chandra absorbed into Surya Deva as the exhaling breath would not cover up on a mirror with patches!

Vasanta Season is dominated by Vasu Devatasas instructed by Savitu as at the beginning of the Samvatsara and heralding colours, dresses, flowers and freshness all around and with plentiful water and Nature. The Spring season beckons relatives and friends to home with good food and gifts. In Greeshma the summer season scorches earth with heat asking for light dresses in white as Rudra and his gana devats dominate and prepares earth for Parjanya and rains ushering diseases like cold, jaundice and so on. Yet, this is when crops are abundant and fruits in variety are aplenty. All the same rains the future of food supplies for the year hence calls for ploughing, planning and hard work.]

Stanza 15 onward: prakṛtyā śītalasparśo himaviddhaś ca sāmpratam, pravāti paścimo vāyuh kālē dviguṇaśītalah/ By the very Nature, as one's touch is cold, the western winds turn a person further cold. At the sun rise time, krouncha and saasra birds make big noises especially getting excited at the heaps of rice and the emerging rays of Sun make a thrilling experience. By the mid-day, one's experience in this season gives heavenly feeling with the mildly warm Sun rays. bāṣpasamchannasalilā rutaviññeyasārasāḥ, himādravālukais tīraiḥ sarito bhānti sāmpratam/ tuṣārapatanāc caiva mṛduttvād bhāskarasya ca, śaityād agāgrastham api prāyeṇa rasavaj jalam/ But in the early mornings, rivers like Godavari, the waters are covered by patches ice and the birds like cranes would be identifiable by their shrieks but not by their physical forms. Since ice gets formed Sun rays too become mild since the waters from the mountain tops get severely cold. cakre 'bhiṣekaṁ kākutsthaḥ sānujaḥ saha sītayā, tarpayitvātha salilais te pitṛn daivatāni ca, stuvanti smoditam sūryam devatāś ca samāhitāḥ/ kṛtābhiṣekaḥ sa rarāja rāmaḥ; sītādvitīyaḥ saha lakṣmaṇena, kṛtābhiṣekas tv agarājaputryā; rudraḥ sanandir bhagavān iveśaḥ/ Bhagavan Shri Rama along with Devi Sita and Lakshmana then performed bathings on the famed river Godavari and performed with these sacred waters Deva- Pitru tarpanas, well before Sun rise. After Sun rise, they recited Devata stotras. Shri Rama along with Sita Lakshmanas were looking like Devi Uma was invoking Parameshwara along with Nandi by the comparison of Godavari and Ganga!

[Vishleshana on the Sacred River Godavari and the excellence of bathings in the River:

Tato Gadaavarim praapya nitya siddha nishevitaam, Rajasuya- maapnoti Vayu Lokam cha gacchati/ (Maha Bharata extols the Mahatmya of Gautami River as the everlasting provider of Siddhis besides the maha phala of performing Raja sua Yagna and bestowing the Vayu Loka prapti). Brahma Purana explains further: Amritam Jahnavi toyam swarnamuchyate, Amritam gobhavam chaajyamamritam Soma yevacha, Gangaayaa vaarinaajyena hiranyena tathaiva cha, Sarvebhyopyaadhikam divyamaritam Goutami jala./ (It is stated that Ganges water is like gold, it is also said that pancha gavyas, Soma Yagnas are more valuable, but far more than Ganges water or gold, or even the pancha gavyas and Soma Yagnas, Godavari water is the best Amritam ever). Sapta Godavarim snaatwaa niyato niyataashanah, Maha punyamavaapnoti Devalokam cha gacchati/ (Those who bathe in and drink the waters of 'Sapta Godavari dhaaras'- comprising Vasishtha, Kaushiki, Vriddha Goutami, Goutami, Bharadwaaji, Atreyi and Tulya- are indeed blessed with Maha Punya and attain Deva Lokas).

Details of Gautami Ganga (Godavari River) and its magnificence are detailed in Brahma Purana in a full chapter as Maharshi Gautam was indeed responsible to have meditated intensely for several years and pleased the ever mecfiful Maha Deva to let the flows of the celestial water come down to Earth in the form of Godavari as narrated here under:As Bali Chakravarti's some of the Sankalpa Jala to donate the proverbial Three Feet to Vamana Deva fell on Shiva's jataajuta, there were too recipients of that Sacred Water on Earth viz. a Maharshi called Gautama and King Bhagiratha of Surya Vamsha. Thus Ganga from Shiva Jatajuta took two manifestations, one as Ganga and another as Gautami. While Bhagirathi Ganga's origin as was materialized by King Sagara's descendant Bhagiratha and his tenacious efforts by meditation to Vishnu, Ganga Devi and Parameswara was well described in various Puranas, detailed account was provided in Brahma Purana about Gautami Ganga or the Dakshina Ganga. When Gautama reached atop Kailasha Mountain, he extolled Parama Shiva and the latter was pleased with the Maharshi's Tapasya, Bhakti, Vrata and Stuti and gave Darshan to Gautama. As Mahadeva asked the Maharshi as to what was his wish, Gautama requested Bhagavan that a part of Ganga that was absorbed in Shiva jataajuta be please spared to fall on Brahmagiri so that in the interest of devotees who crave for a Sacred River, Ganga the Great Purifier should flow at least before enter the Sea and the Public would get a chance to sanitise themselves of their sins atleast at that Place. Shiva readily agreed to Gautami's request in Public interest in that Region and affirmed that Gautami Ganga would most certainly be a very popular and Sacred River; as the prayed to Parama Paavani Ganga to descend from Maha Deva's jataajuta, he first took her to wash Bhagavan Traimbekeswara's feet and requested Bhagavan to prescribe the Puja Vidhi of Bhagavan. At the outset a devotee was required to perform Nandimukha Shraddha, satisfy Brahmanas with Bhojana Dakshinas, and take holy bath in Godavari, distribute Vastras and cash to Sadhus and the Poor and practice japa- homa- Puja as prescribed and thus complete the Tirtha Yatra with the Parama Mantra OM Namassivaaya with veneration and faith. Also perform Snaana and Puja at the Confluence Points of Trishna, Bhimarathi and Tungabhadra. Maha Deva blessed the sprawling Gautami and hailed it as his personal favourite with several names such as Maheswari, Ganga, Gautami, Vaishnavi, Godavari, Nanda, Sunanda, Kamadayani, Brahma Teja Samaaneeta and Sarva Paapa Pranashini. Brahma described to Narada Muni about various Sacred Tirthas that came up on the banks of the long Gautami Ganga : Vaaraahi Tirtha at Triambaka Kshetra was the gift of Varahaavatara of Vishnu who killed a Raakhasa named Sindhusena who defeated Indra and other Devas and obstructed the performance of Yagnas-the life line of Devas, the fruits of which were discarded in Rasatala; the blood of the Daityas, Danavas and Rakshasas headed by Sindhusena was washed in the Rasatala Ganga and Maha Yagnas were conducted again where Vaaraaha Titha was originated. Another Tirtha called Kushaavarta came to be formed in Triambaka to enable worship to Pitra Shraarthas and Tarpanas that emerged from Nilaparvatas in the Region popularly known as Nila Ganga. Kapota Tirtha had the back- ground of a hunter who was in the habit of killing several animals and caged many birds for his food daily; once he was caught badly in severe rain and rested under a Banyan Tree when he saw a male bird on the tree recognized a female bird in the hunter's net; as the male bird found that the hunter was shivering with cold and suffering the pangs of hunger. The female bird inside the net requested the male bird on the tree to collect figs and some fire from a distance by its beak holding a fig and thus producing a fig-lit fire to jump in and satisfy his hunger and warm up his body- shiver from the fire! The hunter was ashamed of his past killings and was taught a lesson as he prayed to Mahadeva to absolve him of his past sins and converted himself as a saint eventually. Later on as he died, Bhagavan granted the Kapota, the Kapoti and the Hunter-converted as Saint and a Sacred Titha came up as a Symbol of Sacrifice by the Kapota birds and the penance of the Hunter! The Kapota Tirtha snaan is till date known as a Provider of Ashwamedha Yagna Phala and Salvation. The origin of Dashaashwametha Tirtha was that a King called Bhuvan desired to perform Ten Ashwamedha Yagnas simultaneously and engaged Kashyapa Muni for the purpose but there were some hurdles or other although tried many Tirthas like Prayaga and Kashyapa made an appeal to Brahma who recommended Gautami banks in Dakshina Bharata and finally succeeded performing the Ten Yagnaas side by side and after successful completion organized Anna daanaas to lakhs of poor persons and gave away Brahamana daanaas. It is stated that till date the Tirtha continued to be famed for Yagnas and Annadaanas and those who performed sacred bathings at the Tirtha would secure Yagna Phalas. The background of Paishacha Tirtha on the banks of Godavari related to Kesari the illustrious follower of Shri Rama along with other Vaanaraas of Kishkindha headed by Sugriva. Kesari had two wives viz. Anjana and Adri, both being Apsaras cursed by Indra to become a female monkey and a female cat respectively in the form of Mountains. But for their faces both the women had attractive physiques. As both the Devis approached Agastya Muni the latter blessed them and Devi Anjana gave birth to Hanuman Deva with the blessings and Amsha of Vaayu Deva and Devi Adri gave birth to a King of Piscachaas with the blessings and of Nirruti Deva. The Paishacha Tirtha thus came to name and fame and not far from it known as Hanuma Tirtha and Vrishakapi Tirtha which enjoyed considerable popularity as Hanuman had been a symbol of intrepidity, invincibility and unflinching loyalty who continued to be an Ever-living and legend in the Immortal Epic of Ramayana. Brahma affirmed that Pancha Tirtha was the Point of Confluence of his own progeny viz. Savitri, Gayatri, Shraddha, Medha and Saraswati and these were all connected to Bhagavati Ganga; snaanaas in Pancha Tirtha, followed by Pujas and Daanaas would fully relieve several problems and insurmountable difficulties are overcome as though those never existed. All along the banks of Gautami Ganga were dotted several Tirthas of renown due their association of Devas, human beings, Maharshis and of Rakshasaas, Apsaras, who were all the Great Devotees of the Almighty despite their erstwhile past or because of it. Such Tirthas included Kshudha Tirtha, Ahalya Tirtha, Ashva Tirtha, Bhanu Tirtha, Aruna-Varuna sangama, Garuda Tirtha, Govardhana Tirtha, Indra Tirtha, Rumna Vimochana Tirtha, Chakra / Dadhichi Muni Tirtha, Pancha Tirtha, Pururava Tirtha, Naga Tirtha, Maatru Tirtha, Avighna Tirtha, Sesha Tirtha, Shanaishchara Tirtha, Soma Tirtha, Dhanya Tirtha, Vidarbha Sangama and Revati Sangama Tirthas, Shri Rama Tirtha and so on. All these Tirthas provide multiple benefits of self-confidence, courage, knowledge and sin-demolishing. While the various Tirthas have been described as above in Brahma Purana, those mentioned in Maharashtra are identified include: Panchavati cluster or Rama Temples, Naroshankar Temple, Sundar Narayana Temple, Modakeshwara Temple, Gangeshwara Veda Mandir and Mukti dhaam Temple all in Nashik itself; besides Ekanatha Shrine in Paithan etc. In Andhra Pradesh, the Tirthas on the banks of Godavari are the famed Annavaram Satya Narayan a Temple, Dwaraka Tirumala, Draksha Rama, Kotilinga Pushkara, exclusive Shani Temple in Konaseema, Bhadrachala Rama Mandir etc.]

As Rama Sita Lakshmanas returned from Godavari snaanaas to the Rama Kurteera and performed Puja and homa prakriyas and bhojana, neighbouring Muni Varaas called on them for exchange of views. In fact in their daily afternoons, the Munis were usually calling on the Ramas for dharmic conversations and life got routinised for Ramas likewise. *tadāsīnasya rāmasya kathāsamsaktacetasaḥ, taṁ deśaṁ rākṣasī kā

No wonder the ugly Rakshasi Shurpanakha fell fancied for Rama! As Rama was of excellence, Shurpanakha was ugly, fierce looking, and fat; while Rama was of readily arresting and lovable, she was nightmarish and horrendous; Rama’s voice was gentle and affectionate while her tone was of a barking bitch. Then Shurpanakha questioned Rama as to why he was in the attire of a tapasvi, but with dhanur baanaas and with a woman accompanied too. Then Rama replied ‘Devi! I am the elder son of Chakravarti Dasharatha named Rama- Lakshmana is my younger brother and my wife is Devi Sita, the daughter of Videha King Janaka. We are now here as instructed by my father Dasharatha as prompted by mother Kaikeyi and the purpose of our vana vaasa is of ‘dharma raksha and dharma paripaalana’. Now, Devi, you may like to introduce yourself too. Whose daughter are you; what name; who is your husband; you seem to be a rakshasi as you seem to change your form as you please; why have you come here! Please tell me plainly and truthfully! Then Shurpanakha replied making amorous advances to Rama: ‘ I am a Rakshasi Shurpanakha and can change my swarupas as I please; I frighten all types of pranis of the ; ‘aranya’ freely all alone; my brother is Ravana and you must have heard of his name of notoriety! Ravana is the son of Vishva Muni about whom you might have heard and also of Kumbhakarna whose sleepishness is his permanent characteristic. My yet another brother is Vibheeshana who is a dharmatma and is against the features of a dharma and achaara vyavahaara unlike me and all the rest of us. Rama! In terms of bala parakrama I seem to excel my own brothers Khara Bhushanas too. Now may I propose to marry me and make me happy. Of which avail is this miserable bodied Sita as in my view, she is frail, sickly, and I could eat her off along with your brother Lakshmana too.’ As Shurpanakha stated likewise, Shri Rama broke into big laughter as replied Shurpanakha as follows!

Rama told Shurpanakha with poise: ‘Respected Devi! I am already married and this is my dear life partner and to have another wife would be difficult for you to bear mutually between both of you. My brother Lakshman who looks nice and mild is a big warrior too. His wife is not here and there is no fear of a co-wife. Then Shurpanakha left Rama and approached Lakshmana. She addressed Lakshmana then: ‘May I be your dear wife! Then we should be able to enjoy life mutually in dandakaranya! Lakhmana replied: Red lotus like Sundari! I am only a servant of Shri Rama; why do you stoop down and become a servant’s wife! My elder brother is a large hearted devata of great fortune and he could certainly afford another wife; why you could you not be a co wife of his! After all your form and beauty are perfect; who indeed would like a manava stree who is frail and thin as compared to a brave and strong sundari like you! Then Shurpanakha re-approached Rama and said: ‘Rama! There is a point in what Lakshmana says too! After all Sita is too frail, thin, miserable looking compared to my body that is solid and robust as she is a mismatch to a hefty and tall figure like that of yours! In any case, this issue of myself and herself could be solved amicably by my devouring Sita totally!’ As the raakshasi was about to pounce on Devi Sita, Rama made a ‘humkaara’ preventing Sita and addressed Lakshmana: krūrair anāryaiḥ saumitre parihāsaḥ katham cana, na kāryaḥ paśya vaidehīm atham cit saumya jīvatīm/ imām virūpām asatīm atimattām mahodarīm, rākṣasīm puruṣavyāghra virūpayitum arhasi/ ‘Sumitra Nandana! Persons of cruelty be not tolerated even out of fun! Look at this, Devi Sita’s life is now at stake. This wretched woman with protruded stomach and elongated head be rid of facial parts at once!’ Lakshmana got terribly annoyed and having straightened his sword cut off Shurpanakha’s nose and ears. The Rakshasi then ran away from the Rama Kuteera bleeding and shouting with acute pain like ‘megha garjana’ and her face was then looking frightening and ran away to a group of Raakshasaas headed by the ill reputed brother Khara who lost his mental poise with vengeful poisonous aberration as she narrated the entire background!

As his own sister was punished Khara rakshasa got furious with madness and asked her to tell what precisely occurred as she was shivering with rage, insult and acute pain. Who indeed was he who pricked a cobra and played with your innocence and has now placed his head into a noose inviting destruction and death! You are a clever and ruthless woman yourself but how was it that a simple human being had brought this state of misery to you! Who indeed was he a devata or a gandharva or a bhuta or a Maharshi! Even a devata or Indra himself is unimaginable for this type of insulting assault on you even after knowing your background and bravery! Like a swan dividing milk and water, I shall extract his praanaas out of his body! In my attack on him I ought to break his loins into pieces and with his hot blood soothen your face with it! On the battle ground his hot blood would flow on the dirty earth as birds and reptiles would lap up flows even before drying up on earth! As her brother was spewing fire on his tongue, raakshasi Shurpanakha explained that in the forest there were two youthful men looking handsome and hefty with lotus eyes of attraction. They were dressed up like Munis with vallala vastras and mriga charmas apparently eating only roots and fruits like Munis again. In between there was a pretty and slim woman and introduced themselves as the sons of King Dasharatha and were named Rama and Lakshmanas. But they might be gandharvas or devatas. In between that woman was the root cause of this misery of mine. eṣa me prathamāḥ kāmāḥ kṛtas tāta tvayā bhavet, tasyās tayoś ca rudhiram pibeyam aham āhave/ My first and last ambition of life is to lap up the blood fallen on the battle ground!’ As Shurpanakha declared her vow then Khara Rakshasa sent fourteen frightening Rakshasas to first kill the two so called ‘heros’ and later on the woman too. Khara asserted to the furious fourteen that his own sister’s life ambition is to pull them down to earth so that she could lap up the blood of their dead bodies! Thus the fourteen rakshasa deputies were despatched by Khara.

Then Shurpanakha again arrived at Ramachandra ashram again along with fourteen rakshasaas. Then Rama asked Lakshmana to be along with Devi Sita and that he would take care of the rakshasaas. Then Shri Rama lifted up the golden dhanush and addressed the rakshasaas. ‘ We are the two brothers being the sons of King Dasharatha named Rama and Lashmanas living here by eating roots and fruits and following brahmacharya. Why do you want harass us. Look, we seek to look after the interest of Rishis and are carrying dhanush baanaas; I advise you to go away and get moving away as you have arrived as you would all be killed otherwise soon if you are willing as a final chance.’ As the fourteen rakshasaas had heard about this cautionary advice, they got intensely incensed with red eyes and lifted their ‘shulas’ and shouted: ‘ arre, you got our chief angry; very soon you would die soon; you are dreaming of all our terminations, but save your own head soon! We are as many as fourteen and you are a dreamy singleton’, so saying all the fourteen some attacked Rama in one go. But Rama lifted his golden dhanush and cut off all the fourteen shulas in one single strike like Indra had used his vajraayudha. Then Maha tejasvi Raghunaatha got angered and released only one arrow which automatically got multiplied into fourteen and their chests were broken and blood gushed out spilt on the grounds. As the rakshasi Shurpanakha was dazed stand stilled and shouted fiercely and ran away for help to her brother Khara for safety.

As Shurpanakha was rattled and crestfallen out of shame fallen down on earth, Khara was terribly angered too as his fourteen trusted yoddhhas were killed away, and stated: dear sister! Leave the fright and instill the spirit of vengeance! Then the rakshasi said: dear brother! If only in the most unlikely event of Rama being still alive, then dearest brother! I would have to commit suicide as my glory of living should be extinguished for ever! You rakshasa! If only your pride and fame has any substance but is not fake, then get ready to kill Rama Lakshmanas and make me proud as a brother but also the entire race of rakshasas, lest the misery and defame would be deleted for ever that a mere 'maanava' would be but a drop in the ocean of pride and self respect for the race of Khara as intensely provoked by Shurpakakha addressed her angrily and slated: Dear sister, the insult and injury to you is as to my own and am hence in an unpardonable grief and furious rage for me personally too and ought to be retaliated and avenged at any cost. I cannot consider Rama from the view point of heroism but his time for his misfortune has most certainly arrived as he ought to be exterminated by now. Sister! Stop crying, leave helplessness and be ready for revenge. Along with his brother Lakshmana, Rama should now be despatched to Yamapuri now. Sister rakhasi! To day you should have soon a feastful flows of red hot blood of their bodies. As Khara stated this with conviction and confidence with frenzy, the sister was delighted with excitement and showered praises on him unreservedly! Then Khara addressed Dushana the senapati: Soumya! Get ready now with my loyal, furious, black and cloud coloured, frightfully speedy, readily enthusiastic players of death as gift to the opponents atonce to send Rama Lakshmanas to naraka the Yama puri. Senapati! Also get my chariot and the intrepid horses too ready; further decorate my dhanush banaas, vithira-vichitra khadgaas, and various other astrashastraas.Rana veera Senaani!let pulastya vamshi rakshasa pramukhas be readied ahead of my chariot. As Khara commanded senapati Dhushana, the latter selected ‘Madhyaahna Surya’ like bright horses of Agni like speed and fury and indicated the readiness.Then Rakshasa Raja Khara ascended the chariot even recalling his sister’s words of praises for him against the background of her threat of her suicide of failure! Kharastu tanmahatsainyam rathacharmaayudha dhvajam, niyaaratetyabraveet prakshya Dushanah sarva raakshasaan/ Khara addressed Dushana having noticed the chariot, kavacha, astra shastra and dhvaja, and the readiness of the entire ‘sena’ and in turn gave the green signal to get ready and go! Then the ‘sena’ moved fast like an arrow just released! The army carried mudgara-pattisha-shulakhadga-chakra-tomara sparkled! Shakti, parigha,dhanush, gada, musala, and vajra the eight angled weaponry all had flashed with glitter making any opponent should normally give shudders to enemies. This was how fourteen thousand rakshasa sena made the attack with rapid forward steps. As the feeling of Khara having been noticed, Dushana gave the sign for the totality of soldiers to run ahead for sharpening the violent aggression! Then the angry face of Khara was twirling and curling like a poisonous snake! Then he roared like an incited lion and the charioteer incited the horses to run faster and faster!

As Khara's maha sena proceeded towards Rama Kuteera at Panchavati, there were terrible omens like frighteningly donkey shaped clouds forming on the sky with reverberations, besides pours of blood raining on the rakshasa soldiers. Khara's chariot horses as were speeding up had suddenly squatted while on the speedy run! Up on the sky, all around the Surya mandala, there emerged a black circular patch bordered blood red! On the chariot of Khara, the tall and imposing golden dhvaja was seated by a huge sized owl which was sickening to the onlookers. Frightening squeaks of mamsa bhaksha pakshis seated on Khara's chariot's ceiling atop were loud looking up on the bright Sun on the sky repetitively. Ominous black clouds on the sky were of the shape of elephants pour streams of blood ahead of Khara's chariot. Mother earth even by mid day assumed utter darkness which enveloped earth made the identification of ashra dishas or the eight directions was not possible easily. Quite irrespective of time, sandhya kaala appeared to have occurred and the loud noises of pashu pakshis suddenly became alarming especially the headgear of Khara was tilted and jolted with the nasty noises especially of bats hitting and hovering around. At that time as the maha sena was in full swing, the forest trees were rattled and the fruits and flowers dropped down as though mother earth attracted the flows of the pull downs. There were repetitive and frightening sounds as though meteors and comets of earth's atmosphere were flustered. As such omens were appearing up on the sky and all around in the atmosphere or on earth around, Khara laughed boisterously and addressed Dushana and fellow rakshasaas: 'these omens should be the least disturbing to us and even I could drop Stars from the sky too by the arrows of my might! tārā api śarais tīkṣṇaiḥ pātayeyam nabhastalāt, mṛtyum maraṇadharmeṇa saṁkruddho yojayāmy aham/ rāghavam tam balotsiktaṁ bhrātaram cāpi lakṣmaṇam, ahatvā sāyakais tīkṣṇair nopāvaritum utsahe/ sakāmā bhaginī me 'stu pītva tu rudhiram tayoh, yannimittam tu rāmasya lakṣmaṇasya viparyayaḥ/ Once really incensed up, I could enter my head into the mouth of death, yet the arrogant Rama and his stupid follower brother Lakshmana would forward to death as my dear sister is ready to drink up their blood ! By now as we are attacking them solidly, they ought to have by now realised the childish prank of cutting the nose and ears of my sister. Without exaggeration may I declare that I never had faced defeat in my encounters in life'. By the simha garjana of Khara, the fellow rakshasaas shouted with roars of resounding laughter. That was the time when mahatmas-rishis-devatas-gandharvas- siddha chaaranas had all assembled and wished Rama Lakshmanas the best of luck and fortune. They declared: svasti gobrāhmaṇebhyo 'stu lokānām ye ca saṁmatāḥ/ jayatām rāghavo yuddhe paulastyān rajanīcarān, cakrā hasto yathā yuddhe sarvān asurapuṁgavān/ May there be all round auspiciousness to cows and brahmanas and maharmas. May Rama be blessed by Maha Vishnu to vindicate truth and eradicate falsity, arrogance, self and misplaced pride and conceited egotism. As Khara's army reached the Ashram, Khara hastened the attack with twelve maha yoddhas in the fore front viz. Shyena-gami-Prithugreeva-Yagjna shatru-Vihangama-Durjaya-Karaveeraaksha-Parusha-Kaalakaarmuka-Hemamaali-Mahamaali-Sarpaasya-and Rudhitaashana. Four of the maha rakshasas viz. Maha Kapaala-Shulaaksha-Pramaatha and Trishira were led by Senapati Dushana. sā bhīmavegā samarābhikāmā; sudāruṇā rākṣasavīra senā, tau rājaputrau sahasābhyupetā; mālāgrahāṇām iva candrasūryau/ The rakshasa veeraas led by the sena thus encountered Raja Kumaras Shri Rama and Lakshmana as the Graha pankti faced Surya Chandras!

Vishleshana on premonitions of death in general terms to humans sourced from Markandeya Purana:

'Arishtas' (premonitions) of death: Those persons who cannot identify Stars on the Sky of Dhruva, Shukra, Soma and Arundhati may face death within a year; who find Sun dim within eleven months; who find in their dreams the images of body rejects mixed with gold/silver would die within ten months; who witness Piscachas, Pretas, and Golden Trees would die within nine months; persons who are fat but become thin, and again fat, would die within eight months; those who witness a scene of getting their feet stuck in mud and after coming out of the slush with impressions of not being able to notice the above portion of the feet would die within seven months; a dream showing a picture of a Kite, dove, owl or a crow- all with blue colour- sitting on one's head would die within six months; those who see a row of crows and witness one's own body full of dirt due to the flight of the crows would die within four months; if a person witnesses a rainbow and lightning on the southern Sky in a cloudless night would die within a couple of months; a person whose body experiences the bad odours of a dead body or who cannot see his own reflection in ghee, oil, mirror and water would be dead within a month; if a person dreams that he has no head would die within a fortnight; those whose body and heart dry up soon after taking bath or feel thirsty immediately after taking large quantity of water would not last for more than ten days; if a person's breathing is uneven or he dreams that he is travelling in a boat full of monkeys and is singing or when a powerful monk is passing while laughing loud, then death is round the corner. Dreams of hair, fire, ash, serpents or dried up river; crooked nose, long ears, weeping left eye, a metallic face, black tongue, riding camels and donkeys bound to Southern direction, blinded eyes and deaf ears, upward eyesight, etc. are portends of early death.]

As the dusshakunas loomed large, Rama hopes for the doom of Rakshasaas and victory for himself- as a precaution, he asked Lakshmana to hide Devi Sita in a cave and got readied for the battle

Noticing several ominous premonitions coinciding the attack on ashram by countless Rakshas headed by Khara, Shri Rama addressed Lakshmana asking him to realise the tidings of forthcoming events revealing their repercussions on the rakshasaas. The black clouds on the sky formed a view of a huge donkey formations in ash colour even as thunder storms were raining flows of red blood! ‘Lakshmana! As the jungle birds are shrieking with unushal disturbed pithces, it looks disaster for rakshasaas. As your facial expression appears cool and placid and that indicates victory to us. Once a person looks uneasy he tends to shout to cover up fear and panic. Therefore get your ‘dhanush baanaas’ and then retire to a mountain cave along with Sita under a tree shade. Now, Lakshmana! Go away quickly. Indeed you do have the capability of facing the Rakshasaas no doubt, but I feel like teaching lessons to the Rakshasaas myself! Then Rama got his ‘dhanush baanaas’ ready and sounded the dhanush as a sure sign of being ready as the ‘ashra dishas’ got reverberated. tato devāḥ sagandharvāḥ siddhāś ca saha cāraṇaiḥ, ūcuḥ paramasaṁtrastā guhyakāś ca parasparam/ As Rama was ready in this manner to witness his battle single handed, Deva-Gandharva-Siddha and Chaaranas got collected on the skies. Further, Maharshis made announcements to let the lokas, go brahmanas and dharma be ever triumphant! The groups of the onlookers were discussing among themselves as to how one singular hero would face the attack of fourteen thousand desperate Rakshas. The celestial Beings like Siddha- Vidyadhaaraadis were seated in their respective vimanaas to watch the proceedings anxiously. Even as the celestials were watching keenly, the rakshasas advanced nearer to the ashram making earth shaking ‘garjanas’ while Rama was akin to angered Rudra Deva! He looked around to make a mental assessment while the Khara sena was like an overflowing , fierce ocean. tasya kruddhasya rūpaṁ tu rāmasya dadṛśe tadā, dakṣasyeva kratuṁ hantum udyatasya pinākinah/ Then Devataas were excited as Shri Rama was like pinakadhari Maha Deva who was in burning rage to demolish Daksha Yajna!

Khara rakshasa instructed his charioteer to keep the chariot right before Shgri Rama and made ‘simha naada’ with his conchshell. He rained thousands of arrows suddenly and so did the numberless Rakshasaas simultaneously too. Besides some other rakshasaas attacked with steel shulas, mudgaraas, praasaas, khadgas and parashaas like continous rain flows. In fact they had surrounded him as he was lonely and the entirety of Deva-Siddha-Gandharva-Maharshis were badly concerned. Then Rama went into such rage as never before and straightened his dhanush as though it looked circular: Mumocha leelayaa kanka patraan kaanchana bhushanaan, te sharaah shatrusainyeshu muktaa raamena leelayaa, aadad rakshasaam praanaan paashaah kalakritaa iva/ Smilingly and playfully he released numberless golden arrows all around him and like ‘kaala paasha’ crafted the rakshaas as their bodies were pierced to death with blood streams flowing there around. The circular shaped dhanush of Rama released arrows in such a way that they were like flashes destroying thousands of the rakshasaas’ dhvajās, kavachās, pairs of hands with their ‘aabharanaas’ and so on flying away and so were too their elephants and horses that they were riding on. There were reverberations of ‘haa haa kaaraas’ hitting the sky from the very many soldiers crumbling like packs of playing cards. Then the Commander in chief Dushana encouraged the soldiers to uproot maha vrikshas and attacked Rama suddenly; Taan sarvaan dhanuraadaaya samaashvaasya cha Dushanaḥ, abyadhaavat su samkruddhaḥ kruddhaam kruddha ivaantakah/ Encouraged by the support of Dushana, the neighbouring rakshasas sought to surround Rama and rained shulas-mudgaras-and paashaas. Maha Bali Rama made a bhirava naada and utilised ‘gandharvastra’ by utilising which then directions were enveloped into darkness and the rakshaasa were able to see only Shri Rama only all around them all while busy releasing arrows incessantly. Nihataah patitaah ksheenaaschinnaa bhinnaavidaaritaah, tatra tatra drishyante raakshasaaste sahasrashah/ As far as one could visualise, there were lying dead bodies of thousands of rakshasaas were lying dead, or badly hurt, with hands and feet mutilated and even alive were either crying loudly or unble even to cry or semi-alive! Shri Rama’s arrows pierced through heads slashed with headgears, flying hands, thighs and legs mutilated- chariots with wheels missing and killed horses, dhvajās, pieces of shulas, arrow bits, broken swords and shulaas and more frightening heaps of dead bodies all making a glimpse of Maha Narakas; the still alive groups of soldiers took to running backs for their lives.

Senadhipati Dushana noticed that the maha rakshasa sena was getting very quickly devastated and the remaining some five thousand warriors were already developing a vicious psyche of running away from the battle. Rama resolved that in this very heat of the battle, he ought to erase the remanant sena too. Then he was insensed up with anger and resolve and attacked the Senapati Dushana with ‘kshura naayaka’ astra, destroyed his dhanush, utilised four arrows to kill his sarathi, and four horses, and three more arrows pierced through his chest. Then the Senapati who became lonely with neither Sarathi-nor horses-nor the chariot jumped out of the chariot along with a ‘parigha’ and attacked Rama. In that split second of time, Rama realised the danger and aimed a twosome arrows in one straght hit with which both the hands of Dushana were severed and fell down to earth. dṛṣṭvā taṁ patitaṁ bhūmau dūṣaṇaṁ nihataṁ raṇe/ sādhu sādhv iti kākutsthaṁ sarvabhūtāny apūjayan/ As Dushana the Commander in-chief of Khara Sena fell there were all round acclamations by the celestials and Maharshi ganaas to the hero Shri Rama. But, on seeing the quick manner that the senapati fell down, three of rakshasa yoddhhaas viz. Mahakapaala-Sthulaaksha-and Pramakshi got incensed up and assaulted Shri Rama. So roaring like a mighty Lion he attacked Rama along with rakshasa warriors like Shyenagaami, Prithugreeva, Yagjna shatru, Vihamgama, Durjaya, Karaveeraaksha, Parusha, Kaalakaarmuka, Hemamaali, Mahamaali, Sarpasya and Rudhiraashana; these select maha rakshasa veeraas. rakṣasām tu śataṁ rāmaḥ śatenaikena karṇinā, sahasraṁ ca sahasreṇa jaghāna raṇamūrdhani/ tair bhinnavarmābharaṇāś chinnabhinna - śārāsanāḥ/ nipetuḥ śoṇitādigdhā dharanyām rajanīcarāḥ/ In that battle with the rakshasa champions, Rama utilised the ‘Karni’ named baanaastra which is capable of assuming hundred forms smashing and tearing down thousand rakshasaas simultaneously; with the aid of such arrows the rakshasaas are destroyed along with their respective kavachas or shields-aabhhshanaas or ornaments-and their respective dhanushas too simultaneously and the so called maha rakshasaas were victims fallen to ground with flows of their body blood. caturdaśa sahasrāṇi rakṣasām bhīmakarmaṇām, hatāny ekena rāmeṇa mānuṣeṇa padātinā/ tasya sainyasya sarvasya kharah śeṣo mahārathaḥ, rākṣasas triśirāś caiva rāmaś ca

Out of bravado and egotism, when the fate of the erstwhile senapati Dushana was killed by Shri Rama, maha rakshasa Trishira approached Khara and stated: Rakshasa Raja! do appoint me as the Senapati and see for yourself as to Rama a mere human ought to be fallen down dead to earth! Then as Bhagavan created this type of hallucination in his mind, Khara declared Trishira as the Senapati and instantly challenged in an encounter with Shri Rama. Trishira even entering the battle ground like thick clouds started off threatening heavy rains initiated megha garjana or the roars of clouds. sa saṁprahāras tumulo rāma triśirasor mahān, babhūvātīva balinoḥ śimhakuñjarayor iva/tatas triśirasā bāṇair lalāṭe tāḍitas tribhiḥ, amarṣī kupito rāmaḥ saṁrabdham idam abravīt/ aho vikramaśūrasya rākṣasasyedṛśam balam, puṣpair iva śarair yasya lalāṭe 'smi parikṣataḥ, mamāpi pratigrhṇīṣva śarāṁś cāpaguṇacyutān/ The encounter of Maha Balashaali Shri Rama and of Trishira were like that of a lion and an arrogant elephant. You indeed are a 'shura veera Rakshasa'! you have hit my forehead with your arrows as with delicate flowers! Now you may receive a thread of flowers with thorns!' so retorting Rama aimed at Trishira's chest some fourteen arrows which were like frightening cobras; four arrows were aimed at four horses, eight arrows to put the charioteer to sleep, one to deateroy the dhvaja of the ratha, and one to the chariot. Then several arrows pierced through Trishira's chest. Then Aprameya swarupa Shri Rama severed the three heads of the Trishira Rakshasa. As soon as this was executed the gang of followers of Trishira were frightened and took to their wheels but no sooner this occurred, Khara entered the encounter against Shri Rama!

Khara was rather perplexed at the way the best part of the army of rakshasaas besides the two intrepid Senapatis viz. Dushana and Trishira too and now he would have to fight with Rama face to face! This was like the battle recalling Namuchi and Indra Deva. [A rakshasa named Namuchi hid from Indra in the sun's rays. Indra approached Namuchi and said that he wouldn't kill Namuchi at night or day and with dry or wet weapons. When Namuchi came out, Indra used the surf of the ocean to behead Namuchi at dusk. Namuchi's head began chasing Indra accusing him of being a traitor. Indra approached Brahma, who said that bathing in Shonatheertha would rid him of the sin. Indra bathed in the Saraswati river and was freed.] Thus imagined Khara in his encounter with Shri Rama. Being an expert of Dhanur Vidya himself, the chariot riding Rakshasa Veera exhibited his skills in archery and was moving about with confidence. He then deftly covered up 'ashta dashas' resulting in total darkness. sa sāyakair durviśahaiḥ sasphulingair ivāgnibhiḥ, nabhas cakārāvivaraṁ parjanya iva vṛṣṭibhiḥ/ tad babhūva śitair bāṇaiḥ khararāmavisarjitaiḥ, paryākāśam anākāśam sarvataḥ śarasamkulam/ In reply, Ramachandra ignited the ashta dishas with the radiance of fire leaving no space to spare! Thus as a result, the totality of the sky was replete with the covers of arrows. As both the opponents were vying with each other, Surya Deva was placed under a lid literally! Then Khara rakshasa despatched on Shri Rama the astras named Naaleeka- and Naaraacha- like ankusha at the head of an elephant. But Rama having noticed that Khara was by now stressed and tired, assumed composure and coolness like a lion never would flustered before an antelope! But Khara having noticed Rama's casualness attacked Rama in his 'marma sthaana' or loins. Enraged at this, Rama then rained thousand arrows in a row while Khara roared with rage. Further, Khara's kavacha or body shield fell and several arrows pierced into his body. tato gambhīranirhrādam rāmaḥ śatrūnibarhaṇaḥ, cakārāntāya sa ripoḥ saḥ anyan mahad dhanuḥ/ sumahad vaiṣṇavaṁ yat tad atisṛṣṭaṁ maharṣiṇā, varam tad dhanur udyamya kharaṁ samabhidhāvata/Then Shri Rama called for the Vaishnava Dhanush which in the past was gifted by Maha Muni Agasthya at the latter's ashram. Having taken that dhanush to hand, Shri Rama attacked Khara and the arrow so released broke down Khara's 'ratha dhvaja' to earth. Recalling Khara's surreptitious attack on Rama's private part, the latter pierced Khara's chest with four arrows. The incensed Rakshasa felt helpless, even as Rama shot six arrows. Rathasya yugamekena chaturbhiḥ shabalaan hayaan, shashtena cha shirah sankhya chicchheda Khara saaradhiḥ/One arrow shattered the axis of the chariot, four the horses and the sixth the head of the charioteer. Then the subsequent twelve arrows were released of Ramachandra to destroy other belongings of the Maha Rakshasa and finally the thirteenth one hurt him grievously and he fell down to the earth by standing erect even then with his mace in his strong hands!

As Khara rakshasa was thrown from his devastated chariot and standing on ground with a mace in hand, Shri Rama whose characteristic tone was of softness, stated sternly: Nishaachara! Seated on a chariot with vast sena around, you had perpetrated countless acts of evil and extreme cruel acts openly so far and was subjected to extensive ‘loka ninda’ or public hatred. lobhāt pāpāni kurvāṇaḥ kāmād vā yo na budhyate, bhraṣṭaḥ paśyati tasyāntam brāhmaṇī karakād iva/ As any thing becomes unavailable, that is named ‘kaama’ or desire; once unavailable that deep desire is termed as ‘lobha’ or avarice. That lobha leads to ‘vinasha’ or disaster. Contrarily, sinfulness confers regaling joy or vicarious pleasure like a consuming sweetness of poison and that indeed ends up the very life’s existence. [Bhagavad Gita is quoted: Dhaayato Vishayaan Pumsah sangasteshoopajaayate, sangaatsanjaayate kaamah kaamaat krodhobhi jaayate, sangaatsanjaayate kaamah kaamaat krodhobhijaayate/ krodhaadbhavati sammohah sammohat smriti vibhramah, smriti bhramshaah buddhi naashah buddhi naashaat pranashyati/ Every being is subject to desires; if the desires are not fulfilled, there would be disappointment and eventual frustration; this further shapes up as anger which results in lack of the mental poise and imbalance.; Further: Kaama esha krodha esha rajoguna samudbhavah, mahaashano mahaa paapmaa vidyenamiha vairinam/ It is ascertained that kaama or excessive desire is due to rajoguna and the resultant krodha or anger are the seeds of sins. These two features are the seeds of sinful acts.] Rakshasa! By killing the ‘dharmaparaayana Munis’ in dandakaaranya is surely the result of your sinfulness. Like a ‘maha vriksha’ with dried up bark inside is to crumble sooner or later, an evil person is certain to disaster any way! avaśyam labhate kartā phalam pāpasya karmaṇaḥ, ghoram paryāgate kāle drumah puṣpam ivārtavam/ nacirāt prāpyate loka pāpānām karmaṇām phalam, saṁśānām ivānnānām bhuktānām kṣaṇadācara/ pāpam āccaratām ghoram lokasyāpriyam icchatām, aham āsādito rājā prāṇān hantum niśācara/ Just as a tree gets flowered and yields fruits as per the season, the persons steeped in sinful acts would most certainly reap the fruits. Like the effect of consuming poisonous food is quick to follow. Rakshasa! As the extreme limits of sinfulness are reached, my father King Dasharatha directed me to stay for vana vaasa and yield retribution against the ripened sinners like you. Now the golden arrow to be released by me should break into the most poisonous snake pit of your existence and shatter your body and fly away to pataala by quaking the earth on tremors for universal peace and riddance of sinfulness. Like the torture that you had subjected to the Munis shall most certainly get retributed as apt punishment in doubled up measure as the root base of the evilful perpetration! Those departed Munis while you tortured then should now while flying to heavens the last laugh as you should now face death by my poisonous arrows landings in narakas as the well deserved retribution of justice. As Rama lectured likewise, Khara Rakshasa was ignited with rage and stated: Dasharatha Kumara! Even by killing away substandard common rakshasaas you are becoming boastful. Those high standard heroes do not get puffed up with indulgences and keep boasting but keep silent and poised. kulam vyapadiṣan vīraḥ samare ko ’bhidhāsyati, mṛtyukāle hi samprāpte svayam aprastave stavam/ sarvathā tu laghutvam te katthanena vidarśitam, suvarṇapratiṛūpeṇa tapteneva kuśāgninā/ Who indeed becomes boastful of ‘kuleenata’ or of family background when death beckons him. As brass and gold are simultaneously placed on fire to melt then the black emerges at once and hence self emulations would hardly cover up one’s bravado and timidity ! Don’t you realise that I am standing just before me with my mace in my grip, like Yama the God of Death as I possess the capability to exterminate you instantly! You claim to have killed fourteen thousand rakshasaas and now is the time to avenge that ‘bravery’. So affirming, Khara Rakshasa attacked Rama providing fitting replies to the raging torrents of Rama’s continuous rains of arrows of high voltage! He threw the mace at Rama. tām āpatantīm jvalitām mṛtyupāśopamām gadā, antarikṣagatām rāmaś ciccheda bahudhā śaraiḥ/ sā viśirṇā śarair bhinnā papāta dharaṇītale, gadāmantrausadhibalair vyālīva vinipātītā/ As the mace approached Rama like Mrityu Paasha crossing massive trees and plants, Shri Rama had literally rained his arrows and even when it was high at the sky was smashed into bits and pieces like a huge serpent fell down as if it was mesmerised with the might and spell of maha mantras and aushadhis!
